ADMISSION OF BRONZES FREE OF DUTY.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate, which I am very sure every Senator will be glad to grant, to take up the resolution which has just reached the table from the House to allow a couple of bronzes presented by the American exhibitors to Governor McCormick to be brought into the country free of duty. I want to say that this is the first instance in an appropriation for an exhibition, I believe, where money has been saved, and all may be aware that the salary of the commissioner general was not equal to his expenditures. The Senator from Kansas, I am sure, will make no objection to having this joint resolution acted upon at this time.

Mr. INGALLS. As bronze is a very perishable material, and might suffer by the delay that would follow the failure of this bill, I suppose I ought not to make any objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the joint resolution read, subject to objection.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 247) authorizing the remission of duty on two articles of bronze presented to Hon. R. C. McCormick by American exhibitors at the Paris exhibition was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the joint resolution itself read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall not object to the present consideration of the joint resolution; but I wish to say that as we are now so near the end of the session, so long as I am here I shall hereafter object to the second reading of any bill, be it Senate or House, on the day on which it is received; in other words, I propose to stand by the rule that requires the three readings on three separate days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CORKRELL in the chair.) Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution which has been reported? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Chair it is a good thing to have measures passed in regular order, by a second and third reading, so that every Senator may understand what is going on. I understand it myself, but I think others do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read the third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having been read the third time, shall the joint resolution pass?

The joint resolution was passed.

LUCINDA C. DILLAHUNTY.

Mr. BAILEY. I trust the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Kansas will not make objection to a resolution which has just come from the House directing that a name shall be corrected in the spelling. It is simply the substitution of one letter for another in a name. I ask for permission to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee requests present action upon the resolution referred to by him.

Mr. INGALLS. My good nature led me into trouble yesterday and resulted in the displacement of the pending bill which but for that might long since have been finished, I presume; and I rise now to give notice that I shall object to any further business being considered except mere formal matters, after the resolution called for by the Senator from Tennessee has been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution requested to be acted on by the Senator from Tennessee will now be reported subject to objection.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 25, 1879.

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to correct an error in the spelling of a name in enrolled bill H. R. No. 4392, for the relief of Lucinda C. Dillahunty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to tell us what that bill is.

Mr. BAILEY. Simply the name was spelled wrong. It is a pension bill for the relief of Mrs. Dillahunty, and it is spelled "Dillahunty."

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. INGALLS. The regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator to give way for a motion. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which an order was made day before yesterday, on motion of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] to withdraw certain papers relating to the bill (H. R. No. 4143) for the relief of John Adams, William B. Clift, David Dunseath, William Killinger, J. F. Scott, administrator of the estate of Obediah Scott, deceased, Davis C. Peak, Charles Linderman, James Linuane, Patrick Carey, John McMahon, and James Gorman, administrator of the estate of Patrick Gorman, deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Nebraska will be entered.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BOOTH, Mr. FERRY, Mr. McDONALD, Mr. TELLER, Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, and Mr. SPENCER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONOVER, Mr. WALLACE, and Mr. MITCHELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 5218) to establish post-routes in the several States therein named; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATION FOR PENSION ARREARS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6462) making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes; the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. INGALLS as amended.

Mr. BAILEY. Is an amendment to the amendment now in order? Mr. INGALLS. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. BAILEY. There seems to be some misapprehension, as I think, in regard to the practical working of the scheme as it has been presented really by the Committee on Pensions. There seems to be some uneasiness and fear that this will be converted into a partisan and political machine. The next Senate will be democratic, and indeed it will be so in a few days. Therefore, to guard against any possibility of that sort, I move, on page 3, line 1, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and to make the like amendment in line 8, striking out "Secretary of the Interior" and inserting "President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" and also, on page 4, to strike out all after the word "profession," in line 12, in the following words:

Such pension surgeons and pension clerks shall hold their commissions at the pleasure of the Secretary of the Interior; and when any vacancy shall occur, by removal, death, resignation, or otherwise, the same may be filled as a new appointment.

So as to make the third section read:

That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint to the Pension Office as many pension surgeons, who have had not less than ten years' active experience in the practice of medicine and surgery, as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act; and, when practicable and not inconsistent with the interests of the service, surgeons who have had experience as Army or Navy surgeons shall be appointed. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall also appoint to the Pension Office a sufficient number of pension clerks to meet the requirements of this act, who shall be persons learned in the law, and who shall have had experience in the practice of their profession.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. BAILEY. I will state that I offer this amendment not because I apprehend that there is danger that this will be converted into a piece of political machinery, for I am not inclined to believe that either the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions will desire to thwart the entire purpose and object of this change in the pension law. I rather would believe that they will honestly endeavor to bring about such reform as may be necessary in order to protect the Treasury from the frauds which are said to have been practiced upon it, and which I believe, for my experience as a member of the Pension Committee has taught me to believe that there has been at least from 5 to 10 per cent. of the names borne upon the pension-roll which properly do not belong there. I believe that this amendment will in a great degree correct the evil and relieve the Treasury of the burden which has been improperly and unjustly imposed upon it; but as I say, to prevent the possibility of the fears being realized which I have stated, I move the amendments which I have suggested.

Mr. INGALLS. On the part of the Committee on Pensions I will say that I interpose no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words in reference to the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. As I understand it, there are two objects proposed by the Committee on Pensions. The first is to aid and facilitate the operations of the Commissioner of Pensions to dispose of the business that is pressing upon that bureau. I have no doubt from what I have heard that there will be great delay, necessarily, in that department in disposing of the cases arising under the pension law, and perhaps something should be done to relieve the bureau of the embarrassment under which it labors. The principal object, however, as I understand, of the amendment is to prevent frauds upon the pension fund; and in that object I also heartily concur. So far, therefore, as the objects proposed by the Committee on Pensions are concerned, the amendment of the Senator from Kansas has my complete sympathy. My difficulty arises out of the measure by which it is proposed to remedy the evils complained of. That there are inconveniences suffered by the Bureau of Pensions is admitted everywhere, and that there are large amounts of frauds practiced upon the pension fund is also a conceded fact; but I doubt exceedingly whether the measure which is proposed by this amendment will remedy that evil. It seems to me to be a very complicated remedy at least. I read in the third section of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas—

That the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint to the Pension Office as many pension surgeons, who have had not less than ten years' active experience in the practice of medicine and surgery, as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

It is also provided that the Secretary may appoint as many clerks. Then, in section 2, it is provided that the Commissioner of Pensions shall detail one of the pension surgeons provided for in section 3, and one of the clerks provided for in section 3, to go through the country to make an examination into the cases of those who are on the pension-rolls. It may be safely assumed, therefore, that there will not be any less than about one hundred and twenty of these surgeons and clerks traveling over the country examining these cases and setting up courts in the various districts which are provided.

The first section provides that the country may be divided into sixty districts; and the second section provides that a surgeon and clerk may be detailed for each district to examine the cases of pensioners in those districts; so that we shall have not less than one hundred and twenty agents of the Pension Bureau going through the country and making investigations in these matters. By another section it is provided that the surgeons and clerks shall receive each a salary of $2,500 a year. That would be a round sum of $300,000, provided that the Commissioner of Pensions should detail a surgeon and a clerk for each of the districts provided for in this amendment. But that is not the only expense connected with the scheme. In addition to the salaries, by section 6 they are to have their "necessary transportation expenses" paid also. Now, what is included in the "necessary transportation expenses" I do not perhaps fully understand. If it simply provided that their fare upon the cars should be paid, then we should understand it; but it may possibly be construed to include other incidental expenses connected with transportation.

Mr. INGALLS. The understanding of the committee on that subject was that allowance was to be made for transportation only, and that subsistence and other expenses would be paid out of the compensation. It was further estimated that the annual expense for transportation would be about $300 for each member of the board, amounting to $36,000 in round numbers.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt that was the object proposed by the Committee on Pensions, but they unfortunately will not have the ultimate construction of that provision in this amendment upon which the money will be paid. I doubt exceedingly whether the compensation provided for the surgeons and clerks is sufficient if they are compelled to pay their own hotel bills and all their other expenses, including their transportation through the country except their fares upon the cars. At any rate it seems to me that this machinery is too cumbersome to accomplish the objects; or at least it is more cumbersome than it ought to be in order to effect the purposes and objects proposed by the Senate Committee on Pensions.

Some simpler mode to remedy the evil complained of, it seems to me, could be adopted. Just what that remedy is, I am not at present able to say. It has been argued here that gentlemen who object to these provisions should make some suggestions as to a better course. We have not as a body had this question before us as the Committee on Pensions have had; and because we may be able to see objections to the plan which they propose upon a hasty discussion of this question, it is not to be supposed that we are prepared to submit with perfect confidence a system which would be better. At any rate, under all the circumstances of this case, and with a full belief that a better plan for correcting the evils complained of may be evolved by proper consideration and by delay upon this subject, I feel disinclined to vote for the amendment proposed by the Committee on Pensions. In doing so I wish to say that I desire as much as any man to see the frauds that are practiced upon the pension fund fully eradicated.

I had a service of two years upon the Committee on Pensions, and I can bear testimony that it is a very laborious service which that committee performs; but my experience in service upon that committee satisfied me very clearly that the conclusion was true which I understood had been reached by the Commissioner of Pensions, that a large percentage of the pensions was paid upon fraudulent claims. I have in the Senate before expressed the opinion that large savings might be made to the Government by a proper investigation of some mode into the cases that are upon the pension-rolls. When the arrears of pension bill was up I tried to a certain extent to correct, or at least to prevent, the commission of frauds upon the fund that was to be paid as arrears of pensions, and I offered an amendment providing that the evidence of disability and injury now upon file in the bureau should not be conclusive, but that a person claiming under the arrears of pension act should be required, if in the discretion and judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions it was necessary, to furnish the Department evidence of his disability with the claim to arrears to pension. But in the great zeal that was manifested on that occasion to do what was called justice to the pensioners of the country, the proposition which I thought was perfectly fair and equitable to all parties and which would protect to a certain extent the department from fraud upon the pension fund by those who would obtain the arrears of pension, was voted down.

I think we might yet remedy that and ought to remedy it, and that so far as the money applied to the arrears of pensions is concerned we ought to provide that no part of that money should be paid to pensioners until there had been some re-examination of their cases. It would simply be postponing the claim of the party to the arrears of pension until there was ample time to investigate in some mode his right to the arrears of pension. I should be glad if the Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, would, in case his amendment does not pass, (and whether it will or not I am not able to say,) provide an amendment in harmony with the view that I express upon this subject, and postpone the payment of the arrears of pensions to all parties until the Commissioner of Pensions is satisfied from a re-examination of the evidence on file, or from some other re-examination of the case, that the party is entitled to the amount he claims.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate. I simply wish to say that I shall not vote for this amendment, while I believe that some measure should be adopted to accomplish the purpose that seems to be aimed at by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I regret that this legislation has been introduced so late in the session. I do not think that it belongs to an appropriation bill, but upon that my judgment differs from a majority of the Senate. I do not understand this question and I do not expect to understand it; but it is a matter of administration: it has the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior, of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I believe the unanimous sanction of the Committee on Pensions, one of the most laborious and intelligent committees of this body. I shall vote for it; I shall take it upon trust. But now my object is to appeal to the Senate in the interest of the public business, to stop debate and vote upon the measure before it.

Mr. INGALLS. That suggestion meets with my approbation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas as amended.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to propose an amendment. On page 6, line 11, section 9, I move to strike out "January" and insert "July;" so as to read:

Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880.

The purpose of my amendment is very evident. The period intervening between this and the 1st day of January is so short that many persons may not be aware of the loss they will sustain if they do not file their applications before that day. By extending it to the 1st day of July, six months longer, we shall perhaps in the future rid ourselves of much trouble in being asked to extend the time in special cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, I was looking at that very section of the bill when the Senator from Iowa arose and submitted his amendment. One of the troubles we have had ever since we have had pension laws has arisen from fixing limitations as to time beyond which no application should be received, or, if received, received upon condition. Here is an amendment of vital importance touching this whole question, just upon the heels of the legislation that has given the soldiers arrears of pensions, providing that unless application be made by the 1st day of January, 1880, which will be next January, or the 1st day of July following, such soldiers making such application thereafter shall be deprived of arrears of pensions. The experience of this body in the last six years, upon which I can speak experimentally, ought to advise us that we ought not to be hasty in fixing these limitations. I do not know that any harm would arise if we should fix no limitation at all; I doubt if any trouble would arise. If we shall fix a limit, just as sure as time rolls around, there will be a class of soldiers, mysterious as it may appear under the fascinating temptations held out to them now, who will not be posted and will let the occasion go by, or a man's disease will not have developed, or his testimony will not have been discovered, or he will have been unable from other causes to make application within the time fixed by law, and Congress will be asked to pass special acts granting him arrears of pension.

I was going to propose an amendment in order to take the sense of the Senate upon that subject. I think we might get along a year or two without any limitation, but if we are to have any limitation at all, I was going to suggest the 1st day of January, 1885, so that every soldier will feel, and every member of Congress will hereafter feel, that at least reasonable opportunity has been given by fixing a limitation so remote that they cannot very well complain of it.

The soldiers have not liked these limitations; they have been opposed to them always. They have complained about them, and with a good deal of justice. I see no harm to come from putting this limitation back the number of years I have indicated, so as to give full time, full opportunity for all applications to be presented under our generous, as I believe, pension laws.

If the Senator from Iowa has no objection, or if I can do so, I move as an amendment to his amendment that the word "five" be inserted in line 12 of section 9, on page 6, after the word "eighty;" so as to read:

Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1885.

Mr. INGALLS. That amendment is not in order, an amendment in the second degree being now pending.

Mr. OGLESBY. I was asking the Senator from Iowa if he would object to that amendment.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think we had better make no limitation at all rather than fix the time so far off.

Mr. OGLESBY. If the amendment is out of order I will not offer it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No amendment is out of order on an appropriation bill; the Senate have decided.

Mr. INGALLS. An amendment in the second degree is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the question is submitted to the Chair, the Chair will decide that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois is not now in order.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It will be in order after my amendment is voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY. I now offer the amendment I suggested. In line 12, page 6, after the word "eighty," I move to insert "five;" so as to read:

Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1885.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] to the amendment.

Mr. EATON. It strikes me we might as well not have any limitation at all if the motion of my friend from Illinois obtains. I think a year and a half is long enough. If one of these poor fellows should not happen to make his application in that time, let him come here for relief.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not want to detain the Senate a moment; but the experience of this body is that under the various limitation laws this whole trouble grew up about arrears of pension. What is the use of fixing a limitation as to the time a soldier shall apply provided he has an honest case. You will keep out no dishonest case by a brief limitation. They who seek to get a pension dishonestly and not fairly will be spurred up to present their cases. The careless soldier or the one that does not wish to burden the Government with his complaints or his sorrows, may put it off to the last day; then his testimony may be beyond his reach. I think as a matter of convenience to this body and to obviate—

Mr. EATON. If my friend will pardon me, the testimony is a matter of no sort of consequence. Let him file his application; then if he fails in his testimony at one time, his application is in and hereafter when he can procure his testimony it will be taken and submitted in support of the application.

Mr. OGLESBY. That criticism is entirely proper, and it is one that I have not overlooked; but a soldier will be slow to make an application when he is advised by claim agents or by friends or by the Department under its published regulations on this subject that he cannot succeed with the evidence he presents. He will not care to send an application unless he can present a plausible showing, one with the hope of succeeding, because it will be somewhat expensive for him to do so. Generally, in my opinion, soldiers will prefer to present a good case if they present one at all, and therefore they will wait as many have waited years and years to find the whereabouts of some lost or missing officer, or some link in the chain of necessary testimony.

I do not believe the Government will suffer by this, and I think it will leave the opportunity open to such reasonable extent that the soldiers themselves will not be disposed to complain as I believe they generally have complained of these limitation laws. I suggest it as a matter of convenience both to Congress and to the soldier.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest also to the Senator from Illinois in support of his proposition, that on the very bill we are now trying to appropriate money to carry into execution, it has been decided by both Houses of Congress and by the President that these limitations are of no account at all. It is just to wipe out these limitations that the necessity for this appropriation arises; and if we wipe them out in part, why not entirely?

Mr. INGALLS. The observation of the Senator from Vermont is rather unjust. There have always been limitations to the pension laws. The first limitation was one year. It was extended to three, and then enlarged to five. The passage of the arrears bill extended the period up to the date of the operation of that act. I believe, and I think the country concurs with me in believing that it is proper a period should be fixed after which, when an application is made, if granted it should not date back of the time when the application was filed. As the law now stands, every petitioner whose claim is granted hereafter will draw not only the monthly stipend to which the law entitles him, but a large sum aggregating from hundreds to thousands of dollars in each case going back to the time when the man was discharged or his disability was incurred. It is very obvious that sum will increase as time goes on. The longer we postpone it, the greater the sum to be paid.

I am very sure that the Senator from Vermont is in favor of some period being fixed, giving notice to every person who has claimed a pension, in which, as in every other case of claims against the Government or individuals, the application shall be made; otherwise the claim if granted shall only carry after the time when the application is made or it is decided that the person named is entitled to relief. I think myself that the period fixed by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is just and liberal, that it will meet the approbation of the Senate and of all the pensioners and the country at large. It is notice to everybody having any claim that if he does not file his application by the 1st day of July, 1880, which is a year and some months off, their pension will only date from the time their application is filed.

I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will not be agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is great force in what the Senator from Kansas says, but it happens to my apprehension to be exactly in opposition to the law we have passed. The first law provided a limitation of one year of which everybody had the same notice that he will have of this law, and everybody under it had perfectly fair play. Then by somebody's pressure it was extended to three years, if I am not mistaken, and after that he had the same notice, and then to five, and everybody had notice; and after everybody had had notice and has taken his pension according to the notice and according to the law, the two Houses of Congress and the President have agreed that all that provision for notice and for wholesome limitation was of no account whatever, and that justice required that this limitation should be entirely swept out. If that was just as to those who have got their pensions, I am unable to see why it is not just to those who have not.

Mr. INGALLS. The great majority of pensioners get no advantage under the recent bill. There are more than three hundred thousand pensions, and under the recent bill there are less than thirty-eight thousand who will be beneficiaries.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see that that alters the case.

Mr. INGALLS. It shows that a very large number made applications under the previous limitation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So they did, but justice is just as much due to one man as it is due to a thousand, I take it, and that is the theory on which this arrears of pensions bill went. In spite of repeated notices to pensioners, for the wholesome reasons the Senator from Kansas states there ought to be a limitation, as there was all the time, the two Houses of Congress by a great majority, and the President, practically have said that that principle was not a sound principle but a false one; that justice demanded that those who did not come in within the time should have their arrearages just like the others who did come in time. I did not agree to that proposition myself, but it is the law, and the Senate and the House and the President have decided that it rests on sound principles; otherwise it would not be the law. If the principle be sound I am unable to see any difference between the case suggested by the Senator from Illinois and the other, and we should be called upon hereafter on the same principles to enact an arrears of pension law for the new men.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, in my judgment the dissatisfaction with the previous law arose more from the cause I am about to state than any other cause. Why the law was ever written as it was written, I have never been able to understand; but it provided that a certain class of applications for pensions should date for the payment of the pension from the time the last piece of evidence in support of their claims was filed—

Mr. INGALLS. Necessary to establish the claim.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, the last piece of evidence necessary to establish the claim. The Pension Office has been so overburdened with labor that necessarily it took one, two, three, four, and five years many times before an application could be determined, and then the law of which I speak came in, and said that a man should not have his pension from the time he had asked for it but from a much later time. To remedy that difficulty, the Pension Committee of the Senate at the last session offered to the Senate a bill which was promptly passed here, dating arrearages back to the time when the application was filed and not to the time when the last evidence in support of the claim was filed. I am inclined to think if that had been acquiesced in by the other House, it would have been satisfactory to the country; but that I think was the cause of dissatisfaction, not the limitation that was placed in the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. OGLESBY] to the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for a division of the amendment. It relates to different subjects. I suggest that the question be taken on the first eight sections as one branch by itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas suggests a division and a vote upon the parts of this amendment separately. The first vote will be upon sections 1 to 8 inclusive.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. On account of my attention to the duties of the Appropriations Committee I have been out of the Senate until a few moments ago; I do not know what amendments may have been added to this bill, but as I understand it the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee giving the appointment to the President subject to confirmation by the Senate is now a part of the amendment offered by the Pension Committee.

Mr. INGALLS. That has been adopted.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator whether any other amendment has been made?

Mr. INGALLS. None, except that the number of districts into which the territory of the United States may be divided is increased to seventy-six.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Upon whose motion was that—on the motion of the chairman?

Mr. INGALLS. By the action of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I had made a memorandum of various points, of which that is one.

Mr. INGALLS. It rests entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior whether that number shall be created or not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I expect to vote for this amendment, because I believe it is in the direction of economy, and will probably prevent a great many frauds. My inquiry is not intended as an objection to the amendment, for I am in its favor. The cost, as I understand it, even at seventy-six, will be very little above $400,000 per annum. The present system costs nearly $200,000 per annum, or not quite that, making a difference in the system contemplated of about $200,000. If that be so, and one-tenth part of the frauds that are estimated either by the chairman of the Pensions Committee or by the Commissioner of Pensions are facts and could be prevented, this will of course be a great saving in the point of dollars and cents. Thus this amendment, by the prevention of fraud, saves more than the amount that will be expended under it. The great frauds that are now going on all over the country on the subject of pensions are frightful, and they ought to be broken up; they are demoralizing. If this can be done in any way the amount it may cost is comparatively nothing; it is insignificant. I believe that five or six millions are fraudulently paid per annum, as has been stated here before, on account of pensions. If any part of that can be saved, then Congress will be justifiable in spending double the money now expended for the expenses of the office this year.

But I understand another thing that makes me decidedly in favor of this amendment, and that is that there is not a single pension agent probably in Washington or elsewhere who is not opposed to this amendment. Why is that? What does that mean? It is hardly necessary for me to tell the Senate what it means. That single fact speaks volumes, and I will let it drop.

I am told that the estimate of the Commissioner is that previous to the passage of the recent act the average of applications daily was thirty-four, and the average now is over one hundred, probably one hundred and twenty a day.

Mr. INGALLS. Over two hundred daily in the last week.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The chairman of the Pension Committee says over two hundred. I have not heard of it for a week or so. This shows that the applications are growing and something ought to be done. It is, in fact, almost absolutely necessary to look into these claims carefully. They are multiplying so rapidly that the amount is astonishing. Why, Mr. President, according to the Pension Commissioner's report, there are now one hundred and twenty thousand applications lying in the Pension Office awaiting examination. That shows that the present system is not perfect. If it was, we could get along faster and keep up with them better. It shows that something is wanting to dispose of these cases, and I think it can be done in the way pointed out. I am willing and desirous of trying some plan. I desire to get into some form something that will prevent frauds that I believe exist upon the Pension Bureau. I believe the present Commissioner is doing his duty. I believe he is giving much attention to and trying to prevent frauds in every form and manner that may be presented to him. I believe the office has improved vastly under his control, and he recommends a change, and this is the change he recommends, earnestly recommends, as I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to deny for the pensioners who reside in the State of Vermont and as far as I know for the pensioners residing in all the other States, the imputation that 25 per cent. or 15 per cent. or 10 per cent. or anything like it are in the slightest degree fraudulent, and I should like to see the proof of it. I should like to know what the nature of the proof is. The statute that has existed all the time under our pension laws authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions either with or without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior—I do not remember which nor care for this purpose—whenever he has reason to believe any one pension is not legally payable, to stop the payment of it. He therefore has held all the time in his own hands the power of stopping the payment of any pension that he believed to be an unjust or a fraudulent one. Why does he not? If he has the evidence which satisfies him that 10 per cent., which I believe is his statement, of the pensions that are paid are fraudulent, why does he not stop that 10 per cent., or why does not somebody, because the evidence of fraud cannot be found by any general impression; it must be found by an aggregation of individual instances.

Mr. INGALLS. Several hundred cases were dropped last year, and over $500,000 saved to the pension fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good. That shows that $500,000 out of thirty million had been, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions, improperly allowed. That does not prove the case by any means.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Commissioner to say that this plan now recommended will break up fraud, and this is the way he wants to find it out. He thinks under existing laws some money has been recovered, but not so much as will be under the system now proposed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but if the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions is willing to be responsible for saying to us that he has discovered any probable ground for believing that 10 per cent. of the pensions are fraudulent, he must have discovered it upon the aggregation of individual cases. The fact that he has discovered $500,000 does not prove that he could discover a million, any more than the fact that you can find that one Senator in this body in years gone by has been guilty of misconduct or fraud implies that probably there are ten or fifteen more just as guilty and you are therefore to institute measures to purge the Senate. No such inference follows by any means; and hence I say that if the Commissioner of Pensions is justified in saying to us that there are 10 per cent. or 5 per cent. or 3 per cent. of these payments of pensions that are fraudulent or unjust, he must, if he is wise and if he is honest in his report, have based that upon the information that he has as to individual cases; and as fast as he has that information, it is within his authority, and it is his duty, to stop the payment of pensions, as he does as far as he goes. We are jumping, therefore, at conclusions, and I think very unjustly to the body of the patriotic soldiery of this country when we give it forth to everybody and everywhere by iterated and reiterated statements that a very large percentage of the pensioners of this Government during the late war are mere fraudulent plunderers of this Government. I do not believe any such thing, and I do not believe there is any proof of any such thing; but because the Commissioner of Pensions has found here and there a case of fraud he asks us to presume, as he presumes himself, that there must be a much larger number more, just as I said a little while ago if we find once in twenty years that there is one Senator in this high body who has been guilty of receiving bribes, therefore it is to be presumed if you only had more stringent methods you would find all the rest or a certain proportion, 10 or 15 per cent., guilty. I deny the logic and I deny the justice of any such inference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first eight sections of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VORHEES and others called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the eight sections to be voted on be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The sections to be voted on will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

That as soon as practicable after June 30, 1879, the Commissioner of Pensions shall divide the United States and the Territories into districts, the number of which may afterward be increased or diminished, as the exigencies of the service shall seem to require, provided that the number shall at no time exceed seventy-six, and designate convenient posts in each of said districts where the commission provided for by this act shall attend to make medical and surgical examinations, and to take testimony in pension cases. The commission shall attend at each of said posts at least once in each year, and wherever exigencies of the service demand, a more frequent attendance shall be provided for. The designation of posts for each district, with the time of attendance of the commission at each, shall be embodied in an order or orders of the Commissioner of Pensions, and published in a newspaper having a general circulation in the district. Whenever any change in the posts or the time of attendance thereat by the commission is made, it shall be published in the same manner.

SEC. — The Commissioner of Pensions shall detail one of the pension surgeons and one of the pension clerks provided for by section 3 of this act to duty in each of said districts to make medical and surgical examinations authorized by the pension laws, and to take the testimony in pension cases, under the direction of the Commissioner of Pensions. The pension surgeons and pension clerks who shall be detailed upon any such commission shall be authorized to administer oaths to claimants, their witnesses, and the pensioners who shall appear before them, or either of them, and they may proceed together or separately in the performance of their duties, as the Commissioner of Pensions shall direct. The testimony taken by the commission in the cases shall be reduced to writing, as near as may be in the language of the witnesses, and shall be subscribed and sworn to by them in presence of the commission or some member thereof. When the claimant shall have produced all the testimony he desires to furnish the same shall be forwarded to the Commissioner of Pensions for the settlement and adjustment of the claim. If it shall appear to the Commissioner of Pensions in any case or class of cases that the attendance of a claimant or his witnesses before the commission is impossible, or would be an extreme hardship, or that such attendance is unnecessary to a proper adjustment of the claim, the testimony may be taken or medical examination made in such other manner as the Commissioner of Pensions shall prescribe, but no additional expense to the Government shall thereby be incurred. And when, in his opinion, the interests of the Government require it, or justice will be better served thereby, the Commissioner of Pensions may require not exceeding three of said pension surgeons to meet together for the purpose of making medical and surgical examinations of pensioners and claimants.

SEC. — That the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint to the Pension Office as many pension surgeons, who have had not less than ten years' active experience in the practice of medicine and surgery, as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and, when practicable, and not inconsistent with the interests of the service, surgeons who have had experience as Army or Navy surgeons shall be appointed. The President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall also appoint to the Pension Office a sufficient number of pension clerks to meet the requirements of this act, who shall be persons learned in the law, and who shall have had experience in the practice of their profession.

SEC. — The Commissioner of Pensions shall cause to be examined by a surgeon, as often as once in two years, all invalid pensioners whose disabilities are liable to become of less degree than that for which the pension was allowed; and he may cause any invalid pensioner to be examined by a surgeon at such times and as often as he shall deem it for the interests of the Government. If, upon the medical examination of any invalid pensioner, it shall appear that the disability on account of which his pension was allowed is less than the degree pensioned, the Commissioner shall readjust and re-rate the pension as justice may require.

SEC. — If, after a pension has been allowed, the Commissioner of Pensions shall have good cause to suspect that the same has been procured through fraud or misrepresentation, or for any other reason is of opinion that it ought not to continue, after first giving reasonable notice to the pensioner of such intended investigation, he shall cause the case to be investigated by the members of the commission for the district.

SEC. — The pension surgeons and pension clerks provided for by this act shall each receive a salary at the rate of $2,500 per annum, and in addition thereto shall be allowed their actual and necessary transportation expenses, upon bills to be approved by the Commissioner of Pensions.

SEC. — Declarations in pension claims may be made before any member of a pension commission provided for by this act, as well as before the officers named in section 4714 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. — Section 4776 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to appoint a duly qualified surgeon as medical referee, who shall have been in the active practice of medicine and surgery, who shall perform such duties in the adjustment of pension claims as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Pensions. His salary shall be $2,500 per annum."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the eight sections which have just been read as an amendment to this bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Anthony,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Patterson,
Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Booth,	Dennis,	Kirkwood,	Sargent,
Bruce,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Hereford,	Matthews,	Teller,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Wadleigh,
Cameron of Wis.,	Howe,	Paddock,	Withers.

NAYS—37.

Barnum,	Edmunds,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Eustis,	McCreery,	Sanisbury,
Blaine,	Garland,	McDonald,	Shields,
Butler,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Spencer,

ABSENT—11.

Allison,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Whyte,
Beck,	Dorsey,	Plumb,	Windom.
Chaffee,	Johnston,	Sharon,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. WINDOM] is absent engaged in the duties of the Committee on Appropriations, and unable to be present in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs now on the remaining portion of the amendment, the ninth section, which will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. — All pensions which have been, or which may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, or from the termination of the right of party having prior title to such pension: Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, otherwise the pension shall commence from the date of filing the application; but the limitation herein prescribed shall not apply to claims by or in behalf of insane persons, and children under sixteen years of age.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope that will not be done, as we have rejected the first part of the proposition. There was a special law fixing the time when pensions should commence. This action will reverse the action of the Senate wherever they have fixed the date of payment at the time the application was filed or the pension granted, so as to carry back all these cases, as I understand, to the time when the death occurred or the injury was received. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It will add largely to the amount of money now provided for pensions, and I think we have been extremely liberal to the pensioners during the present session. I only call the matter to the attention of the Senate. I shall vote against the section and hope it may not pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to insert the section just read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the chairman of the Committee on Pensions agree with the Senator from Delaware who says this adds greatly to the time?

Mr. INGALLS. It merely prescribes a period of limitation after which pensions shall date from the time of application instead of carrying arrears back ten, twelve, or fifteen years, as the case may be, to the death, disability, or discharge of the person on whose account a pension is claimed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I ask whether this is not in the line of economy?

Mr. INGALLS. It is in the line of economy.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not so understand it. We have passed special acts here fixing the time when the pension shall commence; but if I understand the operation of the proposed section, it carries these pensioners back to the time the injury was inflicted though they may not have asked for the pension or had it allowed for ten years after.

Mr. INGALLS. Unless this section is adopted, the law will stand as it now is under the bill granting arrears of pension, and in all cases where hereafter an application is granted it will carry the pension back to the time of disability, discharge, or death of the person on whose account it is claimed. There always has been a limitation, and I have frequently stated that it was in the first place a limitation of one year; that was extended to three and afterward enlarged to five years; and this merely prescribes a period within which persons must make their application in order to avail themselves of the arrearage provision; if made after that time, the 1st of July, 1880, pensions will date from the time when the application was filed. Therefore it is plainly in the interest of economy.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator if there are any persons now on the pension-roll who draw pensions under any existing law except from the time their pensions were granted; for instance, persons whose pensions were granted by special acts, where the act fixes the date at which their pensions shall commence? Are there not classes of pensioners of that description?

Mr. INGALLS. There are about fourteen hundred of that description on the list—about fourteen hundred placed on the list by special act.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will not this section carry these persons back to the date of their injury even if it occurred as long ago as 1861?

Mr. INGALLS. It has no effect whatever upon them. Those persons are placed on the roll by special act of Congress, and have vested rights of which they cannot be deprived except by special act taking them away.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is there any provision which excludes from the benefit of this section persons who are now on the pension-roll?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator cannot have read the section.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have read it.

Mr. INGALLS. It declares in special terms that—

All pensions which have been or which may hereafter be granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, or from the termination of the right of party having prior title to such pension; Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880.

It does not refer to special acts, and cannot by its terms.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to have the answer of the Senator from Kansas to this question: Suppose a party has filed his application with the Commissioner of Pensions, and the Commissioner of Pensions doubts the party's right, or thinks he has not made his application under the general law in time to entitle him to be placed on the roll. He subsequently comes to Congress and gets a special act placing him on the roll. Is that party excluded?

Mr. INGALLS. The act by which the pension is granted defines the right of the pensioner, and he cannot by any possibility be controlled by the terms of the general law. The Senator ought to understand that, and I presume he does.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not examined this matter very attentively; but I am fearful the construction placed on this section will be that which I have indicated, an enlarged pension-list. That is the reason I made the objection.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions whether there is not language in this section which is obscure at least. The point I make is that under the language of this section, where a man received some injury while in the war but did not become disabled until long after his discharge, that man, if he files his application within the time prescribed, will get a pension from the date when he was discharged, although he was not actually disabled until long afterward.

The language of the proposed section is:

All pensions which have been, or which may hereafter be granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted.

So, if he contracted a disease in the war which did not develop or disable him until long after his discharge, I think under this language he would get a pension from the date of his discharge. I am sure the chairman does not mean that.

Mr. INGALLS. Why does not the Senator read the proviso? The section must be taken as an entirety. It will not do to pick out a line or phrase or syllable and ask what that means unless the whole context is put together.

Mr. KERNAN. I will read it all:

Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, otherwise the pension shall commence from the date of filing the application.

Mr. INGALLS. No; because the bill has already been amended on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] that in no case shall pensions go behind the date of actual disability.

Mr. KERNAN. That is what I wanted to call attention to. In framing this subsequent section should not the language be made to conform to the amendment adopted already, and not have the one seem to contradict the other?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not think it does.

Mr. KERNAN. I am sure if it stood on this proposed section alone it would.

Mr. INGALLS. An express declaration in the statute will control the interpretation of another section.

Mr. KERNAN. Yes; but the Senator said just now the proviso remedied the language I called attention to; but it does not. A prior section says the pension shall not commence until the time of actual disability, but here the subsequent section says if he files his papers before the 1st day of July, 1880, it shall commence from the date of discharge. Why not make this section conform to the prior one?

Mr. INGALLS. I think it does conform to it.

Mr. KERNAN. I would suggest that it should be amended so as to read, "shall commence from the death or from the time when he became actually disabled," instead of "discharge."

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to that amendment at all.

Mr. KERNAN. Then I move, in lieu of the word "discharge" in line 6, to insert "or from the time of actual disability."

Mr. INGALLS. Say "from the death or actual disability of the person."

Mr. KERNAN. That is right, "from the death or actual disability." That is the way I think it ought to be.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York proposes in line 6 to strike out the word "discharge" and in lieu thereof to insert "actual disability."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on section 9 of the original amendment of the Senator from Kansas as amended. The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on section 10 of the original amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The section was read, as follows:

Sec. —. Sections 4709, 4744, 4771, 4772, 4773, 4774, 4775, and 4777 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed, to take effect June 30, 1879.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the enumeration be changed to conform with the rest of the bill to which this is an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The enumeration of the section will be changed to correspond with the bill. The question is on the section just read.

Mr. EATON. I ask my friend if he desires that section.

Mr. INGALLS. All should be stricken out except the words:

Section 4709 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas propose an amendment to this amendment?

Mr. INGALLS. That is rendered necessary by the action of the Senate in rejecting the first eight sections of the original amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas proposes to amend the amendment in the way he has indicated.

Mr. INGALLS. So that the section will read simply:

Section 4709 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to offer an amendment to come in on page 3 after line 47 of the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The words proposed to be inserted were read, as follows:

That in order to provide for the prompt payment of the arrears of pensions due to pensioners, or becoming due, under the provisions of the act approved January 25, A. D. 1879, granting and authorizing payment of arrears of pensions, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, sell, and dispose of, at not less than par, 4 per cent. bonds of the United States, not exceeding in the aggregate $18,000,000, of the character, description, and denominations, and with like qualities, privileges, and exemptions, of the 4 per cent. bonds described in the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," or, in lieu thereof, or any portion thereof, to issue certificates of deposit of the denominations and character provided for in the act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," approved February 26, 1879; and the proceeds of the sale of such bonds or certificates, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied exclusively, and is hereby appropriated, to the payment of claims for arrears of pensions arising under said act of January 25, A. D. 1879.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, perhaps no more important measure will come before this Congress ere its close. I desire, therefore, to have the attention of the Senate while a proposition is submitted from the Committee on Finance to provide the means whereby the deficiency in the Treasury that is likely to occur may be provided for, and I now ask that a letter to the Committee on Finance from the Secretary of the Treasury shall be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read as requested by the Senator from Vermont.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 26, 1879.

Sir: Permit me again to call your attention to the importance of some definite provision for the increased expenditure caused by the act approved January 25, 1879, for the payment of arrears of pensions.

It is manifest that the current revenue is totally inadequate to meet the large unexpected demand, which, it is believed, will reach within the present and the next fiscal year at least $36,000,000. The estimated surplus revenue for the next fiscal year submitted in my annual report, $28,165,087.32, will be more than exhausted, and with the reduced revenue caused by the passage of the tobacco bill there will, contrary to my expectations at the beginning of the session, be a deficit of $18,000,000, which I trust Congress will not adjourn without making some definite provision for, or authorizing it to be temporarily covered by some form of loan. The theory upon which the bill rests is that it is for the payment of a pre-existing debt to pensioners, and if so it should be met as a debt, either by current revenue or by a loan in some form. No provision for this is made in any pending bill, and the Department will be left during the recess of Congress compelled either to refuse to pay this new demand upon the Treasury or to pay it out of the fund expressly provided by law for the maintenance of resumption. The neglect to pay the arrears of pensions would not only be unjust to the very meritorious class of persons who are entitled to receive the back pensions, but would seriously affect the public credit, and would be a reproach to the Government. The other alternative of taking the fund expressly provided by the resumption act for the execution of its provisions would necessarily compel the exercise of the authority conferred by that act to sell bonds to maintain the resumption fund. It is made the express duty of the Department to maintain resumption, and this can only be done by keeping in the Treasury an ample reserve to meet any demands for the redemption of United States notes and to inspire confidence in the ability, beyond all peradventure, to meet such demands. I shall feel it my bounden duty under the law to maintain this fund at or about 40 per cent. of the amount of United States notes outstanding. To use this fund for any other purpose than the one for which it is expressly provided can only be justified by the absolute necessity of meeting mandatory appropriations by Congress. There is no necessity for the sale of bonds for the maintenance of resumption unless the resumption fund is impaired by appropriations larger than the revenues, when it would seem to be the duty of the executive branch of the Government to use even this fund, set aside for a special purpose, rather than defeat the will of Congress.

I trust, therefore, that you will see the importance and necessity of providing directly for a sum sufficient to pay all demands for arrears of pensions in excess of the surplus revenues.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. At this late period of the session I shall not indulge in any protracted remarks, but merely give a brief statement.

The statement already read from the Secretary of the Treasury embraces the most important facts. It is obvious that the appropriations made at this session and those that will be made, with the reduction of the revenue that will occur under the internal-revenue bill that has already passed, will amount to $50,000,000. Making that change necessarily creates a great deficiency in the amount of receipts for the coming year.

Mr. CONKLING. If I may interrupt, I do not understand what the $50,000,000 represent. Will the Senator be kind enough to state?

Mr. MORRILL. I speak in round numbers. By the estimate of the Department upon the most careful investigation, the Secretary puts the expenditures under the pension-arrears bill at $36,000,000. Then the reduction in the duty upon tobacco and snuff and the new provision in relation to savings-banks will amount to enough to make it nearly, in round numbers, $50,000,000. Under these circumstances it seems that we are to imperil the resumption of specie payments unless some means shall be provided by which the Treasury shall be re-enforced. It is obvious from the start that the sinking fund is wholly wiped out. No provision this year will be made or can be made for the sinking fund; for it is utterly impossible that a government should increase its debt for the purpose of providing a sinking fund.

These are the simple facts. There is to be a deficiency. Is there anything more proper than that we should place this as a part of our funded debt? If it was a debt due as arrears of pension, it ought to be so treated by Congress as well as the Treasury Department.

I leave it for every Senator to judge what is his duty. So far as I am concerned, I do not mean to leave the Treasury embarrassed by the large amount that is paid out in consequence of this arrears of pension bill or any other bill that may pass, nor shall I be willing to leave it embarrassed in consequence of a reduction of our revenue, and I am utterly opposed to interfering with the resumption of specie payments. Unless this proposition shall be accepted, I very much fear the result.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont whether it is his thought that if this bill is to pass there ought to be arrangements for the money which it will take from the Treasury? Is that the idea of the Senator?

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator can read the amendment. It provides for the issue of $18,000,000 of bonds, the smallest sum possible that will cover the estimated deficiency on the part of the Treasury Department for the coming year.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amount is the lowest that can be provided for.

Mr. MORRILL. The very lowest sum is $18,000,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Vermont brings the Senate directly to the question whether we are willing to vote to increase the interest-bearing bonded debt of the United States at this time. In my judgment, there is not the slightest trace of a necessity to do so; nor do I believe that three-tenths of the American people are in favor of it. I hold in my hand a measure, which I propose to offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, which will raise the exact issue on which I desire to vote and desire the Senate of the United States to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana offers an amendment as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont; which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to reissue United States legal-tender notes now held for the redemption of fractional currency, and a part of such notes heretofore retired from circulation under the act of January 14, 1875, to the aggregate amount of $18,000,000, and to expend the same in payment of such claims for arrears of pensions as may be allowed under the act of January 25, 1879.

Mr. VOORHEES. I understand there are $12,000,000 available for reissue under the first clause of this substitute relating to the fund for the redemption of fractional currency. Under the act of January 14, 1875, there have been retired about $35,000,000, making in the Treasury a little short of $50,000,000 of legal-tender United States notes, doing nobody any good, and which we have the unquestioned right and power to reissue and put again in circulation. If I am told that to do so would disturb the relations that now exist between our different kinds of currency, my answer is that whenever the Government by law treats legal-tender notes as money they will stand firmly at all times and under all circumstances equivalent to gold.

There is no specie resumption at this time. There is a law by which a man having legal-tender notes to the amount of $50 desiring to obtain gold for them may go to New York and apply at a given place, if he can find it, and there make the very undesirable exchange. Specie resumption, that is to say, specie as a legal tender whenever called for, means that each one of us all can meet our obligations in specie. Such is not the case now, and the fact that the United States legal-tender notes are quoted as equivalent to gold simply proves that in spite of the denunciation and hostility of its enemies this money has forced itself to an equality with gold, and, once being on equal terms with it, the people like it so much better than they like specie that there is no desire on their part to exchange it, consequently there is no run for specie. If there was, it would again be demonstrated, as it has been a thousand times heretofore, that specie payment is a mere theory in finance, to be exploded the moment the attempt is made to reduce it to practice.

In order to maintain the present equivalency between greenbacks and gold, it is only necessary to pass a law compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to do what he is now doing without law, that is to receive legal-tender United States notes for customs dues.

We have a strange spectacle at this time on this point. During the last session of Congress the question whether customs dues should be made payable in legal-tender notes was before this body and attracted the attention of the whole country. At last the Secretary of the Treasury, overawed by public opinion, and in dread of the bill which had passed the House and was pending here, came before the Committee on Finance and in the hearing of the country promised that he would do without law what we were proposing to compel him to do by law.

Sir, there are some tastes so vitiated that they desire tainted rather than healthy food; some appetites so depraved that they take their viands and their meats in a putrid condition; and so it seems the Secretary of the Treasury, in his unnatural desire to act contrary to law, is doing what is right for once, but, as a matter of choice, is doing it lawlessly, rather than have the law compel him to do it. Now, sir, this power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury is a most dangerous one. He has only to issue a specie circular to the various ports of the country to revolutionize the whole financial operations of the country. It is a power that ought to be taken at once out of his hands. We should before we adjourn provide that the money which the Secretary of the Treasury is receiving for customs dues is received according to law and not in violation of law. Will some Senator who vouches for the Secretary of the Treasury tell us whether he is proceeding by law or against law in receiving United States legal-tender notes for customs dues? If he is doing it contrary to law, he ought to stop, or his acts ought to be legalized, one way or the other.

Sir, the issue of $18,000,000 to pay the pensioners of the country in the same kind of money they received when they fought the battles for which they became pensioners would not disturb the monetary condition of the country at all; it would not disturb the equivalency which prevails between paper money and specie, and it would help the business interests of the whole land. Therefore, without taking more time—for I appreciate the value of the moments as they glide swiftly by; they are worth more than gold, more than the currency we are talking about—I shall insist upon a square vote whether we are to load the people with an increase of interest-bearing bonds; or whether we shall not rather put back into the channels of circulation the idle and inactive currency now lying in the Treasury and thus give health and prosperity to all classes, at least to that extent. On that issue I desire a square vote, and with that I shall be satisfied.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I understand the square vote to be this, whether we will pay these pensioners with interest-bearing obligations of the Government, or force them to take the obligations of the Government which do not bear interest. That is all there is to it. One is a promise to pay; the other is a promise to pay with interest. The Senator from Indiana proposes to force them to take a promise to pay without interest. The Committee on Finance propose when the Government owes a debt, either to pay it in money or to pay it in an obligation that bears the current interest in the market. That is the square issue between the Senator from Indiana and the Committee on Finance. One is to force the pensioner to take the promise of the Government without interest; the other is to offer him the promise of the Government with lawful interest.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, from a long acquaintance with the Senator from Massachusetts and a long service with him elsewhere than here, I have learned to make large allowance for him. There are occasions in his mental life when he labors under illusions and conceives that he is stating what somebody else has said when he is only stating what he wishes his opponent had said or would say. I will not impeach his fairness. His high character and well-known reputation for never trying to take an advantage of an opponent in debate would answer me on that point at once. But if it was not for this delusion of his; if it was not for this mental hallucination, he would know that the pensioner is not to receive these bonds and that that is not the issue. He would know, if it was not for this hallucination under which he occasionally labors, that the proposition to sell bonds is in the interest of retired capitalists who desire to invest their means in interest-bearing securities, and in that way to obtain greenbacks—the legal-tender notes—to pay the soldiers with, and that the soldier gets no bond and has no chance for one.

I am apologizing for the Senator from Massachusetts for not knowing this, by stating that there are times when he cannot state a proposition fairly coming from an opponent.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana shall not be ahead of me in apologizing. I tender to him the same apology that he so generously offers me. The only difference between the Senator from Indiana and myself is that he is indulging in a hallucination instead of myself; that is all. The Senator from Indiana as sincerely believes what he states as anybody possibly can, and I will not impute to him the slightest insincerity in his statement. I only presented the square issue according to, as it seems to me, the common-sense interpretation of business transactions. The Senator from Indiana of course states it as he understands it. I understand that to be the square issue. We propose to supply the means of paying these pensions, and the Senator from Indiana proposes to do it by a forced loan, that is, to compel men to take the promise of the Government without interest. The Committee on Finance propose to supply those means by borrowing the money according to the method by which men transact business. When they cannot pay a debt they do not force a man to take their note without interest, but tender him a note with interest, and if he will not take the note they go into the market and sell the note and promise the man who takes it interest for it. It is a forced loan on the one side, and a loan with lawful and current interest on the other. One the Committee on Finance tenders to the pensioner in the words of this amendment; he can take the identical paper bearing interest himself, or he can take the proceeds of it; but whoever, whether it be the pensioner or whether it be the man who takes the bonds and furnishes the pensioner with the proceeds of them, it makes no difference. On the one hand it is furnishing money without interest, and the other is the obtaining interest for the money, and whether the pensioner takes the identical greenback that does not bear interest or it goes to another man, it is precisely the same thing; it is a forced loan, in the one case, and a forced loan in time of peace. The Government saves the interest on it perhaps, but out of whom does it save it? It saves the interest out of its own people, pockets the interest upon $18,000,000 and makes the citizen lose it. Somebody loses the interest on $18,000,000; and the question between the Senator from Indiana and myself is, whether the Government in paying this debt to the soldier shall make the soldier lose the interest, or whether the Government itself in meeting the obligation is willing to lose the interest on the money that it ought to pay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I appeal to the friends of this bill to vote against both the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana and that proposed by the Senator from Vermont. I know of no reason why this bill should be stigmatized as creating a deficiency in the expenditures of the Government any more than any other appropriation bill, and I am at a loss to understand why when there are two or three or four more appropriation bills to come in here to be acted upon, the Senator from Vermont selects this particular bill as being the one to which he proposes to attach an amendment that to me is odious and that I believe is odious to nine-tenths of the voters of this country.

It was my understanding that there was to be no further increase of the bonded debt of our country for any purpose; and certainly if there is to be any additional appropriation made or sum to be raised for the purpose of carrying on the Government, no one knows better than the Senator from Vermont that bills of that kind do not originate here, that they are not regarded as favorably when they come from this branch, and that the effort he is making is one that will go further toward destroying the efficacy of this bill than anything else that can possibly be done.

I hope, therefore, as an original proposition, irrespective of the question as to whether we should have more bonds, or whether we should issue the legal-tenders now held in reserve, that the friends of this measure will vote against both these amendments, and let all the appropriation bills stand on their own merits, and, if a deficiency occurs, proceed in the ordinary way to appropriate money to meet it.

Mr. MORRILL. I am somewhat surprised at the Senator from Kansas, who has been the leader in imposing upon the country this large outlay, making for the present year $66,000,000, according to the estimate of the proper Department, for pensions alone—that he should undertake to say that this amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance is to stigmatize that bill and to impair its efficiency, when the sole and only purpose can be to give the means whereby the bill can be carried into effect.

Mr. INGALLS. Why this bill any more than any other bill carried into effect?

Mr. MORRILL. Because this bill provides for an appropriation of twenty-six millions and over of dollars, this is the appropriate place for it to be applied.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the Senator would advise me seriously—

Mr. MORRILL. I am always serious.

Mr. INGALLS. And without any sort of heat, what is the reason that this particular bill is selected as the vehicle upon which this rider is to be carried? If this bill passes and becomes a law and no other appropriation bill should pass, there will be no deficiency. The Senator must admit that. If a deficiency is created, it will be by the passage of some other appropriation bill after this. Now, why does he not select the bill that will create the deficiency, instead of loading his amendment upon this bill and provoking a discussion that may be interminable?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not desire to provoke a discussion that shall be interminable; and so far as I am concerned it will not be interminable; but when a bill is here that increases the expenditures of the Government much beyond the estimates and which was not estimated for, there can be no more appropriate place for supplying the deficiency than upon that bill. I know of no bill that will be pending here where this measure proposed by the Committee on Finance and sent to the Committee on Appropriations will be as appropriate as it will be on this bill, and I trust that notwithstanding the earnestness with which the Senator from Kansas protests against the application of this amendment, all Senators who desire to maintain the credit of the country, who do not desire to see our financial affairs again in a state of agitation and of turmoil, who desire to maintain specie payments, will at least give this amendment now proposed by the Finance Committee a favorable consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I remember to have heard years ago one then very prominent member of the Senate lay down this rule of legislative action, that whenever in doubt about a measure, it was wise to follow the committee; but I find from actual experience in this case that following with great docility the committee has not relieved me from much trouble.

On the report of one of the committees of the Senate there came to us a bill for paying arrears of pensions. The chairman of that committee when inquired of informed the Senate in substance that $20,000,000 was the utmost limit, and he thought eighteen million a sufficient sum to meet the requirements of the bill. He made that statement unchallenged in the presence of the whole Senate, in the presence among others of the Senators constituting the Committee on Finance. He was seconded by that committee as to the propriety of the bill in so far as the support openly expressed of three members of the committee could aid him. I think I am not mistaken in my recollection that as many as three members of the Committee on Finance, including the Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the committee, advocated and approved that bill, and none of them challenged the statement made by the chairman of the committee from which it came.

The chairman of the Committee on Pensions held in his hand, and has been kind enough to loan me, an estimate that shows $18,733,637 to be as near as could be stated the sum total appropriated, or undertaken to be appropriated, by the arrears of pension bill. He made this statement from a printed communication coming from the Commissioner of Pensions then some time before, which I have also in my hand; so that undoubtedly every Senator was warranted in acting, and presumably he did act, upon the belief that $18,000,000 in round numbers, was the sum affected by this pension legislation. Now, curiously enough, that very sum, $18,000,000, is the deficit specified in the letter which has been read from the Secretary of the Treasury. He says that during the next sixteen months, for that is the period to the end of the next fiscal year, that is to say from the 1st of March to the 1st of July, 1880, the requirement for arrears of pensions will be $36,000,000, and he says that the deficit which this amendment is intended to make up reaches exactly that sum. So if from any of the organs of information on this subject, if from the Pension Bureau or any bureau or Department, the information produced by the Senator from Kansas on which we acted had been so verified and so established as to be reliable, there would have been no deficit at all. In other words, we find now complaint of a deficiency by exactly as much as for the present and next fiscal year the requirement exceeds the estimate. By exactly as much as such a deficiency arises occasion is presented to us for legislation in the nature of revenue legislation to increase the public income.

Well, Mr. President, I see it stated in a public journal that passing beyond the next sixteen months which this thirty-six-million-dollar estimate is confined to, it is the opinion of some or all of the Treasury officials that $100,000,000 is involved in the arrears of pension bill. Of course I do not state this to adopt the statement. I know nothing about it. I am bewildered in the contrariety of statements that we have received; first, $18,000,000 for the whole amount; then $36,000,000 for that fraction of the amount to be provided for in the next sixteen months; and then a vague and portentous outgiving that one hundred million or even one hundred and twenty million may be no more than the limit.

Now, Mr. President, if I am to vote to increase the bonded debt of the nation, I would like to know that I do it in obedience to a behest which amounts to a necessity. I should like to do it in order to avoid that which will be a breach of the public faith that shall tarnish the public honor. Exactly how, in the midst of these differing and conflicting statements, I can see my way clear in voting for this amendment, I find great difficulty without further light in determining. If it be true that $18,000,000, as this statement says, will cover the whole total of arrears of pensions, then the letter of the Secretary shows that there will be no deficiency either in this year or in the next year or in any year growing out of this legislation. If on the other hand $36,000,000 be necessary during the next sixteen months, how much that portends in the months and years to come, I have no information enabling me even to guess; but I suppose I am safe in assuming that it implies several times over this total of either $18,000,000 or $36,000,000. If it be true either because we have dismissed objects of taxation or because in the bill to which reference has been made, and because in that bill alone, appropriations have been made beyond the national income, then I see no way with the convictions I hold except to have the Government go out and borrow money, strange as that sounds on this day of this year, because in no event will I vote for such a proposition as is presented by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] I do not believe that inflation again in any form is a remedy to be tolerated except in the estimation of those who think that inflation in itself is a wise thing. Not being of those, it presents no recommendation to me. I deal with the other amendment, that which proposes to begin by borrowing $18,000,000, by issuing bonds to be followed, I take it, by borrowing we know not how much, and we have no means of knowing because not only of the absence of trustworthy estimates, but of the wide difference between them, and of the apparent inattention with which some or all of them have been made.

Mr. President, I do not know that the lack of information is that for which anybody is to blame. It is no part of my purpose at this moment to arraign any one; it is rather my purpose to make candid confession of the puzzle in which I find myself, and of the egregious error under which I labored when the vote was taken upon the arrears of pension bill. Certainly had it been known then that a hundred million or fifty million, or for the next sixteen months thirty-six million dollars was involved in that legislation, that would have been the time, not this in the dying hours of this session, to consider somewhat whence was to come a sum so enormous. But we have been left to discover, when it was too late in respect of that measure, the astounding state of facts which, if we credit the later statements, has come to exist in this respect.

It may be said, as the Senator from Kansas said touching another amendment, that whoever objects to an amendment should have something better to propose. There may be justice in that. I do not pretend to have anything to propose, the immediate question presented to me being whether I can properly vote to increase the bonded debt of this nation, and that upon a statement or a group of statements apparently so unsatisfactory, and certainly so conflicting with each other, as these succeeding statements which we have heard reported here by authority and given to us otherwise through the medium of the public press.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say a single word. When the bill for the arrears of pensions was before the Senate on a former occasion, I then suggested the propriety of issuing bonds to pay the amount, but that was not received with favor, and so far as the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Pensions was concerned I had supposed that it came of a recent date from the proper Department and accepted it as to be relied upon. I wish now to say that the proposed amendment offered by the Committee on Finance only proposes this, that, so far as the outgoings are concerned for the payment of these arrears of pensions, bonds shall be issued, and they shall be devoted to that purpose and nothing else.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Kansas to lay aside this bill temporarily, that we may proceed with the sundry civil bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I think we had better proceed with this. It is a larger bill than the sundry civil bill, and involves evidently the expenditure of a great deal more money, and there is no better time to consider it, especially when attached to it by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is a proposition to revolutionize the whole financial system of this Government. I shall ask the Senate to adhere to the end to this bill, and let us have a final determination as to whether the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is to be attached to this in preference to any other bill that may make a deficiency in the appropriations for the next year.

Mr. WINDOM. It must be very evident to the Senate that if we are to discuss the financial policy of the country in all its length and breadth during the last two or three days of the session, the numerous appropriation bills which are yet back cannot be acted on. This is a short bill, and can be taken up after the sundry civil bill is disposed of. I know no way by which we can prevent the discussion of this question of finance, the question of increasing the national debt, the question of issuing greenbacks, the question that will be proposed directly, I presume, by my friend the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] of withdrawing from the so-called sinking fund, and I think there is no one subject in the entire length and breadth of the financial question that is not to be discussed upon this bill; and hence, if the Senate proposes to continue it, we may as well give up all hope of finishing the appropriation bills.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Minnesota will bear me witness that this amendment is no importation of mine, and that all I have asked is that the friends of the bill should vote down both amendments and allow it to go like any other appropriation bill, and if a deficiency occurs in the revenues of the Government, pass a bill to make that good, as you do in other cases. That is all I ask. I am ready to vote on both propositions now and vote them down.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not detain the Senate a moment from voting. I only want to say that the sundry civil bill is now ready for action by the Senate; the legislative bill is ready to be reported, and will be taken up as soon as we can complete the sundry civil bill.

Mr. THURMAN. Let us vote on this bill at once.

Mr. WINDOM. If we can take a vote on this question I will not move to lay it aside; otherwise I shall have to do so.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want to say a word. I am not responsible for raising a discussion of the financial policy of the Government. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] brought forward an amendment providing for an issue of an additional amount of interest-bearing bonds. I felt it my duty to antagonize that with a different measure, providing for the arrears of pensions. Those measures are now before the Senate and opposed to each other. I think with the Senator from Kansas that there is no necessity for a discussion of the financial policy of the Government in connection with the arrears of pensions; but as long as the proposition of the Senator from Vermont is before this body, I ask those who think, as I do, that it is bad policy and injustice to the laboring people of this country to increase the interest-bearing bonded debt for any purpose, to vote for the substitute and against the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I did not expect to say a word, and would not but for the allusion that was made a few moments ago to the measure that I presented in this regard. I am opposed to increasing the bonded debt of the country, and I shall vote for the proposition made by the Senator from Indiana, if it is necessary to vote for any proposition on this subject. I offered a proposition which is now in my hand as a substitute for that of the Senator from Vermont, and discussed it to some extent in committee, but hoping that all these questions might be avoided I consented to its being withdrawn. The proposition that I made is to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That the provisions of the second subdivision of section 3694 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which directs the application of the coin paid for customs dues "to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct," and of section 3696, which provides, "in addition to other amounts that may be applied to the redemption or payment of the public debt, an amount equal to the interest on all bonds belonging to the sinking fund, shall be applied as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct, to the payment of the public debt," be, and they are hereby, suspended until the 1st day of July, A. D. 1881, and all money in the Treasury which from time to time might, under the provisions of either of the sections aforesaid, have been applied to the sinking fund aforesaid, shall be considered and treated as surplus revenue in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be available for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the first section of this act.

To wit, the payment of arrears of pensions. I made that proposition for the reason that we have assurances from the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and from the President of the United States in his annual message in December last, that there was a surplus, after paying all the ordinary expenditures of the Government, on the 1st day of July last, in the Treasury of the United States of $20,799,000. We have assurances from all these high quarters as well, that at the end of the current fiscal year, to wit, on the 30th of June, 1879, there will be a surplus of $24,400,000 more in the Treasury. If we do not exceed the estimates of the Departments in our appropriations now there will be in the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, $24,557,000, making an aggregate of surplus revenue, adding that on hand on the 1st day of July last and unappropriated to what will be on hand the 1st day of next July and on the 1st day of July, 1880, of seventy-three million and a half, every dollar of which is being used and will be used by the Secretary as he pleases. I have shown again and again that he uses it to buy up fractional currency, to retire legal-tenders, to do as he pleases with it. He is in no way complying with the law relative to the sinking fund, and he admits it before the committees of both Houses.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] stepped forward a few minutes ago when the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] was speaking, and said that all I had said about the sinking fund could now be left out as there was none left. That is not the fact, as the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and the annual message of the President, and as the known facts all prove.

The question I present is simply shall we buy bonds with surplus revenue paying 4 per cent. interest and pay double interest for three months, and a half per cent. commission to pet bankers to put it into a so-called sinking fund, and then turn round and buy other bonds at 4 per cent. to meet the arrears of pensions? Why shall we take money out of one pocket to put it in the other and pay as I say double interest for three months and $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission to do it? There can be no genuine sinking fund except out of the surplus revenues, and I propose to relieve all the surplus revenues from the operation of any sinking fund for two years, as the President and all the Secretaries say that we are \$202,000,000 ahead of the requirements of that law now, and there is obviously no necessity for buying any more bonds to decrease principal, and buy as many more to increase it.

Therefore, why not let the surplus revenue which would otherwise be used in some form for the sinking fund be applied by the Secretary of the Treasury, and let us authorize him to apply it to the payment of the arrears of pensions. That is the honest way to apply it. If the Secretary is wrong, if the President is wrong, as to the amount of such surplus, if the attempt they are now making to frighten us to further increase the national debt is true, before we issue more bonds for the purposes of resumption when we have increased by $115,000,000 the principal of the interest-bearing debt in two and a half or three years, let us use what we have on hand before we further increase it. There is no danger of any deficiency in the face of the facts I have stated before Congress meets again. If anything is done it ought to be to allow and to require all the surplus money in the Treasury, after paying the ordinary expenditures of the Government, to be applied to pay the arrears of pensions, and not to buy bonds to keep up the so-called sinking fund, and then sell bonds in order to raise other money, paying interest, double interest, commission expenses, and every other wasteful thing to perform the operation.

No one pretends that the appropriations of this year will exceed the estimates. No one pretends that even the tobacco bill, as it is called, or anything else will reduce the revenue more than from six to eight million dollars. I feel sure it will not reduce it five, nor perhaps more than three, but assume that it reduces it all that anybody claims, the facts being as stated by the President, that $20,000,000 were on hand on the 1st of July last, twenty-four and a half million dollars at the end of the next fiscal year, $28,700,000 eighteen months from now, making a grand total of surplus of seventy-three and a half millions, why should we be selling more bonds now, with that surplus in all probability on hand, or even with one-half of it on hand?

Mr. President, I do not intend to take time to argue this question. I have argued it over and over again, but I do hope that this Congress will refuse to increase the bonded debt of the country and to allow the surplus revenues that we know are and will be in the Treasury, and that are reported officially as there, with no extravagant ordinary appropriations made, and with no deficiency of revenue, why are we to add still further to the bonded debt of the country?

If the Senator from Vermont insists upon his amendment, I shall offer mine at the proper time, which will be as soon as the vote has been taken on the substitute offered by the Senator from Indiana, the amendment which I read when I first rose, and which is to allow and require the Secretary to cease purchasing any more sinking-fund bonds, to cease using the surplus revenue for the purpose of diminishing the national debt, as he calls it, but to apply that surplus revenue to the payment of arrears of pensions. I have no doubt this arrears of pension bill is going to cost a great deal more than any Senator supposed. I knew it at the time it passed, and opposed it from the beginning, but I do not mean to repudiate it now. I am willing to furnish ways and means to comply with its provisions, since Congress has seen fit to impose it upon the country, but I am not willing to increase the bonded debt of the country to do it, when I am sure that by applying the surplus revenues in the Treasury it can be done. No man can read the last letter of the Secretary, in which he leaves out of account all these surplus revenues for this year that he has officially certified to as almost certain to be in his hands, and come to any other conclusion than that it is an effort to still further increase the bonded debt of the country without cause, as he has been doing it for the last three years.

The fact that he increased it $115,000,000 on the pretense of aiding resumption was in my opinion an outrage on the tax-payers of this country, and to still further do it is to add to that wrong. We shall have a Congress in December, long before any deficiency can accrue in any possible state of the case; that Congress will be as true to the honor of this country as the present one. We shall ascertain then the true condition of things; and, if it becomes necessary to raise money, we will raise it at all hazards; but the fact will be developed long before that time that this is an effort to carry on still further the issuing of bonds to keep up a delusive, expensive, and useless sinking fund.

Mr. INGALLS. The remarks of the Senator from New York [Mr.

CONKLING] seem to render it necessary for me to trouble the Senate with a single observation in regard to the information that was originally submitted by me to the Senate as to the amount required to render the arrears of pension bill operative, and the apparent discrepancy between that statement and the estimate submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I call his attention to what occurred when the arrears of pension bill was originally under discussion. The question was then asked by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] as to what would be the amount of money required to pay the pensions therein provided for. I went on to make the statement that I have substantially repeated half a dozen times since during this debate. My statement ended as follows:

There have been three years since that date, and of course I can only estimate what amount would be required since this computation was made; but taking the estimate for 1875 as an average, my judgment would be that to this sum should be added not less than five million dollars for claims since allowed to which the limitation now applies. Of course these estimates are very largely in the nature of surmises, because we cannot tell until the bill is put practically in operation exactly what will be required.

Mr. CONKLING. Making in all how much, as the Senator has it there?

Mr. INGALLS. Making in all, up to the 1st of January, 1876, the sum of $13,417,109, and that amount I should judge would be increased by not less than $5,000,000 up to the 1st of January, 1879.

Mr. CONKLING. Which makes about $19,000,000.

Mr. INGALLS. I should judge somewhere from eighteen to twenty million dollars, in round numbers. Of course it is impossible to make anything like an accurate calculation upon matters of this kind.

That was what I said would be required probably upon the best estimate I could make from data furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions up to the 1st day of January, 1879. The Senator from New York has no right to contrast that with the statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury; for what is his language? He says:

It is manifest that the current revenue is totally inadequate to meet the large, unexpected demand which it is believed—

Fine language for a Secretary of the Treasury to use in submitting an estimate for a great appropriation involving an increase of the bonded debt!

which it is believed will reach within the present and the next fiscal year—

That is, up to the first of July, 1880—

at least $36,000,000.

That is language submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, who had had this subject before him for more than a month, and who was submitting what are presumed to be estimates derived from the statistics under his control in regard to what will be required to carry out the provisions of that act. But I ask the Senator from New York to observe that there is nothing like the discrepancy which appeared upon the figures between the statement made by me and that submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me a moment. Shall I understand him now to mean that his statement of $19,000,000 was only of the amount which would be necessary as an installment upon this; that is, the amount necessary to pay what would be proved by the 1st of January, 1879?

Mr. INGALLS. My language was—Making in all, up to the 1st of January, 1876, the sum of $13,417,109, and that amount I should judge would be increased by not less than $5,000,000 up to the 1st of January, 1879.

To which Mr. CONKLING replied:

Which makes about $19,000,000?

Of course my estimate was based upon the question that was asked me, to which I made answer.

Mr. CONKLING. And my inquiry of the Senator is this: Did he mean to inform us that $19,000,000 was the probable sum which it would be necessary to use up to a certain date, or did he mean that counting all arrearages of pensions up to that time they would amount to $19,000,000?

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator knows, I suppose, or if he does not he ought to know, that more than four-fifths of all the pensioners on the rolls have already received their arrearages of pensions, and that this law was simply to operate upon a class not exceeding thirty-eight thousand in number out of the three hundred thousand who had been pensioned; and my answer was that to pay them up to the 1st of January, 1879, in my judgment, would require from eighteen to twenty million dollars, and to that I still adhere.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me once more to ask, because I am stupid, I confess I do not yet understand him, did the Senator mean that $19,000,000 would be the cost of the arrears of pension bill, or did he mean that it would cost up to that date, to wit: January, 1879, $19,000,000 and leave an indefinite cost afterward?

Mr. INGALLS. That was what I said, and of course it was what I meant, because the arrears of pension bill provided for the removal of the limitation, and what would be required of those who thereafter made application could no more be calculated or estimated than one could calculate the number of birds that will fly through the air next year.

Mr. CONKLING. Then if the Senator will allow me, I shall apologize I think sufficiently for my misunderstanding by reading the question which he answered:

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like the chairman of the Committee on Pensions to indicate to us something as to the amount of money which will be required to pay the pensions here provided for. We ought not to vote blindly on this matter.

Listening to the Senator from Kansas in response to that question I understood, and I think naturally and excusably, that he was answering that and telling us the total amount, as far as could be estimated, covered by the bill, and not telling us merely that without reference to the whole amount, up to a certain date, probably nineteen million would have been paid out under it.

Mr. INGALLS. The bill provided in express terms for the removal of the limitation in the case of all applications that might thereafter be made; and how could it be supposed for an instant that the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions or myself could tell what number of applications would thereafter be made under a general law, which would be entitled to arrears of pensions? The only question that was addressed to me, and the only interrogatory I could answer, was what would be the amount of money required to render that bill operative up to the time when it became a law. As to what would be required by the operations of that bill thereafter would depend upon the number of applications made under it, of which I had no more means of information than any other person, because it is entirely and absolutely without the possibility of being known.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. INGALLS. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say now that in his judgment the payment of all arrears of pensions to pensioners whose claims have already been allowed for a pension at all, will only cost eighteen, nineteen, or twenty million dollars?

Mr. INGALLS. That is my deliberate judgment, based upon information furnished to me in 1876 by the Commissioner of Pensions upon the identical subject. I then asked him what would be required to make an act like that operative, if it then passed, and he gave me the statistics, and upon them I based my estimate of what would be required to render the act operative, and I still adhere to it; but as to what the act will require hereafter will depend upon the number of men pensioned under the general law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I understand the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, speaking from his information from the Executive Department, to say that all the money that will be required to carry out the arrears of pension law, so far as pensions have already been granted, and so far therefore as there are any arrears now, will be inside of $20,000,000.

Mr. INGALLS. Up to the time when that bill passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to prophesy that the Senator will be greatly mistaken.

Mr. INGALLS. I want to call the attention of the Senate further to the fact that in a communication from the head of an Executive Department of the Government who ought to know about these things, and who has all the statistics before him, submitting here an estimate implying deficiency of revenue, the language is used that "it is believed" that this large unexpected demand within the present and next fiscal year will reach $36,000,000; so that so far as the information that we have before us is concerned from any source, it is wholly conjectural and based evidently upon surmises.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems very strange that at this hour of the session the Senate should spend its time in discussing a mere moot question which can be of no practical consequence in legislation. This bill has been decided by a large majority not to be a general appropriation bill. It is an appropriation bill for a special purpose, which will be exhausted in a year or two. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is to put on a bill of that character a proposition for raising revenue, which under the Constitution cannot originate in this body; and in the defense of a constitutional prerogative of which the House is more jealous than any other it is just as certain to be sent back to the Senate without consideration, if it contains that clause, as the sun is to rise to-morrow morning.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask my friend from Massachusetts if he regards a proposition to borrow money in the nature of a revenue bill?

Mr. HOAR. I do. I regard the making a proposition to raise money by borrowing, by the sale of the credit of the Government, as a revenue bill. If that be true, and if that be the claim of the House of Representatives, as we all know it is, it would seem a strange waste of the time of the Senate for us to sit up until sunrise to-morrow morning dealing with this question or with the other propositions which have been brought forward as substitutes for the present amendment or to spend several hours now to compel ourselves to sit up in dealing with something else. I therefore appeal to the Senate to abandon the discussion.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I propose to move that the Senate take a recess from now until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. BAYARD and others. Say eight.

Mr. WINDOM. A number of Senators say eight o'clock.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator will not change his proposition.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not made it yet, and I should like to say a word before I make it, but I propose to submit the motion in a moment. I want to say that it will be absolutely necessary for the Senate to remain here nearly all night, and probably all night, and I wish to submit the question of a recess to the Senate for the purpose of testing the wishes of the members of this body upon that point. If a majority desire to remain here right through until we conclude some of these bills that can be finished, they will vote against the motion for a recess; if not, I think a recess can be taken until eight o'clock with profit. I move then that the Senate now take a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish only to say that I hope after the recess is taken Senators who are less than a quorum will not do any business, and I will add that if I am here I do not intend it shall, so as to invite everybody to come who wishes.

Mr. WINDOM. I will add that if there is not a quorum after the recess to-night I shall move a call of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. And compel Senators to come.

HOUSE BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before putting the question, the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. No. 6516) to amend section 3397 of the Revised Statutes with respect to interest on surrendered or called bonds was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading. Let it go over until to-morrow to be read the second time.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 248) in regard to remission of duties was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of that.

The bill (H. R. No. 100) to amend section 2958 of the Revised Statutes was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of that.

The bill (H. R. No. 6515) respecting protests or appeals from decisions of collectors of customs, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of that.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish my colleague would allow that bill to be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, I wish it printed to see how it looks.

The bill (H. R. No. 5271) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Richard Stevenson, late assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and his bondsmen, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of that.

Mr. McDONALD. Does the Senator from Vermont object to the second reading of that bill to-day?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I object to the second reading of all the bills that come from the House of Representatives.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE MR. QUINN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 12,000 copies of the memorial addresses delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon the life and character of the late Terence J. Quinn, late a Representative from the State of New York, of which 9,000 shall be for the use of the House and 3,000 for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

RECESS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Minnesota. [Mr. WINDOM.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield further?

Mr. WINDOM. I will yield for a question.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator whether it is his intention after the recess to take up the sundry civil bill, which is a very long bill?

Mr. WINDOM. Unless a vote can be taken without further debate on this bill I shall move to lay it aside and take up the sundry civil bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I give notice that after the Senate assembles at the close of the recess I shall raise the point of order on the pending amendment under the constitutional provision referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts. [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say—

Mr. WINDOM. I insist on my motion for a recess.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

Mr. HOAR took the chair, as presiding officer, at eight o'clock p. m.

Mr. ROLLINS. I move, Mr. President, a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR.) The Senator from New Hampshire raises the question of the presence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Call the absentees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absentees will be called.

The list of absentees was called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-six Senators have answered to their names. No quorum is present.

Mr. BECK. I think we shall have a quorum in five minutes. I do not know anything better than to move an adjournment. I shall vote against my own proposition, but I think it will develop a quorum. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the Senators who are absent to attend a meeting of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I think there will be a quorum here in a few minutes—before the Sergeant-at-Arms can get out of the Capitol.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We want them all; we want more than a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate do now adjourn, and on that question asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 3, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—3.
Bailey,	McCreery,	Whyte,
NAYS—39.
Allison,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Randolph,
Anthony,	Dorsey,	Kernan,	Rollins,
Beck,	Eaton,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Burnside,	Ferry,	McDonald,	Teller,
Cameron of Wis.,	Garland,	McPherson,	Thurman,
Chandler,	Grover,	Matthews,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hamlin,	Merrimon,	Wadleigh,
Cole,	Hear,	Mitchell,	Windom,
Davis of Illinois,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Withers.
Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
ABSENT—34.
Barnum,	Conover,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Bavard,	Dennis,	Jones of Nevada,	Sargent,
Blaine,	Edmunds,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Booth,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Gordon,	Maxey,	Shields,
Butler,	Harris,	Oglesby,	Spencer,
Chambers of Pa.,	Hereford,	Paddock,	Wallace.
Chaffee,	Hill,	Patterson,
Conkling,	Howe,	Plumb,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote discloses the presence of a quorum. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope that will be withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the motion, there being a quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. DAWES presented a resolution of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of the abrogation at the earliest possible moment of the eighteenth and twenty-first articles of the Washington treaty concerning the fishery clauses; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 1456) granting a pension to Abram F. Farrar, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1655) granting a pension to Elmer A. Snow, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6523) providing for the engraving and printing of portraits to accompany memorial addresses on the late Representatives Leonard, Quinn, Welch, Williams, Douglas, Hartridge, and Schleicher;

A bill (H. R. No. 6524) to remove the political disabilities of H. B. Littlepage, of King William County, Virginia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) authorizing the Public Printer to print twenty thousand copies of House report No. 53, on the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (S. No. 852) granting a pension to Mary E. Panley;

A bill (S. No. 1763) for the relief of Albert U. Wyman, late Treasurer of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4392) for the relief of Lucinda C. Dillahunt, of Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 1301) for the relief of Henry E. Wilkinson, late first lieutenant of Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 138) for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1162) for the relief of Alfred Muller, late acting assistant surgeon United States Army; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4289) for the relief of Thomas W. Segar.

APPROPRIATION FOR PENSION ARREARS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6462) making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I gave notice before the recess that upon the re-assembling of the Senate I should raise the question of the admissibility of that amendment and of the various pending amendments under section 7 of the first article of the Constitution; but if the vote can be taken upon the amendments without any further debate or delay, I shall not insist upon that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It cannot be taken without further debate.

Mr. INGALLS. Then, upon the intimation of the Senator from Vermont that the question cannot be taken without further debate, I believe I will insist upon that point and ask the decision of the Senate whether these amendments are admissible or not; but I should very much prefer, in view of the condition of the public business, and from the fact that two other large appropriation bills are ready for presentation, to have these questions determined at once by the Senate, and let us have an end of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will please state the question of order again.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know, Mr. President, that it can be strictly called a question of order; but the section to which I allude, section 7 of the first article of the Constitution, declares that "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives." My point of order is that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is an amendment proposing to raise revenue, and that it cannot properly originate in the Senate or be considered by the Senate in the first place.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I had hoped that the Senator from Kansas would not object to providing the means for expeditiously carrying into effect the bill we passed under his lead some weeks ago. I am not disposed to argue this question on this point. I will only suggest that it is rather late, after so long a discussion, to raise the point.

Mr. INGALLS. "Better late than never."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, we are in great danger of a special session of Congress, which would not only be a matter of great inconvenience to us, but of great peril to the business interests of the country. This bill is one which should pass because it is to carry into effect an existing law, providing the means for paying the pensions that we have agreed to pay. But still the pensioners are not the creditors of the Government except so far as we have made them such by our legislation at this session. They did not expect this when we met. There are bills pending that are essential to carry on the Government, without which the Government will come to a standstill; and unless the friends of this bill shall cease debating it, I shall ask my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to move to lay it on the table and to proceed to the consideration of those bills that are necessary to the existence of the Government; and if he declines to do it, I shall do it myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand what the precise point of the Senator from Kansas is. If the Senator from Kansas makes this suggestion simply as a constraint upon the conscience and judgment of Senators in voting, that is simply an argument which they will weigh when they vote finally upon the question. If the Senator from Kansas raises a question of order that it is out of order to proceed with the consideration of the amendment for the reason he has stated, the Chair will submit that question in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no preference as to the form that the question shall take. If the Chair thinks that a point of order should be raised, I will submit it, that under the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution this amendment and the amendments thereto are not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand the Senator to submit a point of order?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his point of order. We have the entire finance question before us on this bill and now we have the Constitution thrust upon us; and if both of these are to be discussed in full, I shall move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Minnesota is aware that I have used all the efforts at my command to expedite the progress of this bill, and I raise this point of order simply for the purpose of getting rid of all these amendments; and if any method can be suggested by which we can vote without further debate no one will be more glad than I shall be of that.

Mr. WINDOM. I feel sure the Senate will vote upon this question now without debate. The Senator does not want to kill the pension bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] intimated to me that it would not be possible to have a vote without further debate; and in order to avoid debate upon three propositions, the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL] the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES], and that of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK], I thought we might possibly dispose of the whole thing upon the Constitution; and for that reason I raised the point of order so as to debate one proposition rather than three.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will be kind enough to put his point of order in writing. The Chair is a little at a loss to understand the precise point which he wishes submitted.

Mr. INGALLS. With the consent of the Senate I will withdraw the point of order and move that the amendment be laid on the table and take the sense of the Senate on that proposition.

Mr. FERRY. That carries the bill with it.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not much care now what becomes of the bill; I want to get an end of the debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yesterday when we undertook to lay an amendment to this bill on the table, it was decided with great solemnity by the Senate—but to be sure that is twelve or fifteen hours ago—that that motion could not be made without carrying the bill with it, because this is not a general appropriation bill; but as I say we have had long enough to reverse it according to our general practice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves to lay the pending question upon the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the pending question in the sense of that motion is the entire bill, with the amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; that is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Minnesota has already notified us that he proposes to lay the bill on the table, and I would just as lief have the sense of the Senate on this proposition as the other. The debate has been continued long enough, I think, to satisfy the Senate as to its merits, and I want to have an end of it.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw the motion to lay on the table that I may make a motion that at ten minutes to nine the Senate shall proceed to vote upon the bill and all the amendments without debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot make any trades of that kind.

Mr. WINDOM. I think I can make a proposition now that will meet the views of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. WINDOM. He is willing to have the bill laid on the table. I ask him to let the bill be informally laid aside so that we may take up the sundry civil bill. My object in that is not to defeat the bill of the Senator from Kansas, and it is a very short bill.

Mr. INGALLS. It has taken a long time to consider it.

Mr. WINDOM. And then if it be not passed until Monday evening or Tuesday morning, even at ten o'clock on Tuesday morning, it can be enrolled and become a law.

Mr. INGALLS. It has already been amended and must, therefore, go back to the House for concurrence in the amendments.

Mr. WINDOM. Even if not passed until Monday evening it can go back to the House and the amendments agreed to and the bill become a law; but unless the bill which I hold in my hand be passed before the Senate adjourns to-night it settles the question that there must be a special session of Congress. For that reason I ask that this bill be laid aside and that we now take up the sundry civil bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The debate proceeds by unanimous consent. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw the motion to allow the Senator from Vermont to speak.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The speech that I wanted to make on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana would have been made in two minutes by the watch, and we have now wasted twenty minutes in discussing whether we had better discuss this bill. I venture the prophecy that if we go straight on with this bill, in twenty minutes it will be disposed of and done with, and then we can take up the bill of the Senator from Minnesota. Let us do one thing at a time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Senator from Vermont underestimates the garrulity of the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I know the powers of my friend from Rhode Island. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. Now by unanimous consent let us try the proposition of the Senator from Vermont, and see if we cannot pass the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. What is it?

Several SENATORS. Vote, vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr.

VOORHEES] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana provides for setting aside what are called certain legal-tender notes that are held as a reserve to redeem fractional currency. I maintain that there is no such fund in the Treasury by any authority of law. The act of 1875, the resumption act, superseded all the former laws about converting fractional currency into legal-tenders, and provided for their being converted into coin, and subsidiary coin was required to be coined for that purpose, and it has been paid out to redeem the fractional currency. Therefore I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. That is the end of my speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to reissue United States legal-tender notes now held for the redemption of fractional currency, and a part of such notes heretofore retired from circulation under the act of January 14, 1875, to the aggregate amount of $18,000,000, and to expend the same in payment of such claims for arrears of pensions as may be allowed under the act of January 25, 1879.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I wish to say one word, as I did not notice the last part of the amendment that provides for a reissue of the redeemed and canceled United States notes that reduced the total amount of United States notes to $300,000,000, or that started to do it under the act of 1875. Here is a plain provision for reissuing legal-tender notes or rather creating them for the purpose of paying this debt.

Mr. EATON. I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, because it tends to disturb what is now settled in the currency of the country. I desire to say further, that I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Vermont when it comes up because I will not increase the bonded debt of the country under any circumstances whatever. And one other word I will say here. If I could in order move an amendment that would postpone any action under the original bill until the 1st of January, 1880, I would do it, because that bill was passed under a misapprehension, an absolute misapprehension. Nine-tenths of this body believed when that bill was passed that not over $20,000,000 would ever be required in order to satisfy the claims under it; and, therefore, if I could properly propose an amendment to postpone any action under that bill until the 1st of January, 1880, I would do so. At all events I will not vote to disturb the present position of the currency in any way either by this inflation project of my friend from Indiana, or by increasing the public debt, as my friend from Vermont desires to do.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—22.
Bailey,	Garland,	McCreery,	Thurman,
Beck,	Gordon,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Grover,	Maxey,	Wallace,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont:

SEC. —. That the provisions of the second subdivision of section 3694 of the Revised Statutes of the United States which directs the application of the coin paid for custom dues "to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct," and of section 3696, which provides, "in addition to other amounts that may be applied to the redemption or payment of the public debt, an amount equal to the interest on all bonds belonging to the sinking fund, shall be applied as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct, to the payment of the public debt," be, and they are hereby, suspended until the 1st day of July, A. D. 1881, and all money in the Treasury which from time to time might, under the provisions of either of the sections aforesaid, have been applied to the sinking fund aforesaid, shall be considered and treated as surplus revenue in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be available for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the first section of this act.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that if there can be any reliability upon the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, there will not be one dollar to be appropriated for the sinking fund, but there will be an absolute deficit in addition of $18,000,000.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say—

Mr. DAWES. Is that amendment germane?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will suspend. For what purpose does the Senator from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. DAWES. Is the amendment germane to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has determined that this is not a general appropriation bill. The Chair understands, therefore, that the rule referred to does not apply.

Mr. DAWES. The question whether it is germane or not does not depend upon this being a general appropriation bill, but on whether the amendment pertains to matters that have nothing to do with the appropriation for arrears of pensions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will cite any rule which applies, the Chair will determine the question.

Mr. DAWES. The rule I would cite would be the rule of common sense. I say so with entire respect to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands, subject to correction by more experienced Senators, that in the Senate it is not a good objection to a proposed amendment that it is not germane to the pending measure, except that measure be a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. I desire only to say, in reply to the Senator from Vermont, that if there is any reliability at all in the statements of the President of the United States in his annual message and of the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report, there is now in the Treasury of the United States $20,799,000 of surplus revenue on the 1st of July last, and, as we have not exceeded the estimates in our appropriations, there will be on the 1st of next July $24,400,000 more surplus, and there will be at the end of the next fiscal year $28,179,000, making over $73,000,000 with what is held in the Treasury and what will certainly be there according to the estimates by the time stated—$20,000,000 on the 1st day of last July; $24,000,000 added to that on the 1st of next July; and unless we appropriate more than is estimated for, (and we are many millions below the estimates up to this time,) there will be an excess of revenue of $28,000,000 at the end of the next fiscal year for which we are now providing, all of which will be on hand, less what may be lost by the falling off of the revenue—and that gain or loss will be determined by the condition of the country—so that there will be ample means for the payment of all these things without increasing the bonded debt.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it is very much to be regretted that in these last hours of the session we are called upon to verify the condition of the Treasury by mere statements made in the course of debate. I do not mean to speak disrespectfully of statements in debate, but merely to say that they are made too loosely to guide us in such an emergency as the present. I regret exceedingly that at this time and upon this bill questions should be raised tending to a disturbance of our present financial policy. Whatever it may be, for better or for worse, there is this feeling to-day in the country, that we should have peace, rest, quiet, opportunity to know the precise effects of those measures of the past the consequences of which cannot be measured in the short time that has elapsed since their adoption.

I do hope, sir, that there may at least be a breathing space given to the people of this country on the subject of their finances. Let us allow time to test that which legislation has effected. This hasty, headlong, reckless legislation is not the part of wisdom. We must have time to test measures; we must have time to know the consequences which legislation has brought upon us, and it is not becoming, in my judgment, here in the closing hours of the session to make expressions or to take steps which are abruptly to change results which are scarcely yet measured and which are in a great part unknown. Give this country rest, give us time to know whither we are drifting and what is the true result toward which we are tending. I do protest against this system of hasty, ill-considered legislation in the last hours of the session.

I will vote against this proposition of the honorable Senator from Kentucky. I will vote against it irrespective of my view of its abstract merits because it does not come to us with that preparation and with that authority that should attend an important essential step in the affairs of this country. I will not now stop to discuss and argue the meaning of the law which created a sinking fund, each year and every year, of 1 per cent. of the whole debt of the United States. I will not stop to argue whether, if we lay by more in one year, we may lay by less in another. Each Congress up to the last, over whose actions we have had no control, has seen fit to diminish the public debt by what is termed an appropriation in excess of the legal sinking fund. Can we now of another Congress, disregarding a law that compels each year to witness the diminution of the public debt according to the terms of the law, undertake to compute that which was in excess in past years and say we will have none to-day? I do not stop to argue that now. I only mean to say that such questions should be approached gravely and slowly, with deliberation, with all those forms of circumspection that wise legislation requires, and which the laws of this body demand.

Why do we refer the most unimportant bill that comes here, first, to two readings, and next to the care and instruction of a committee?

For prudence sake, for that delay and deliberation which is required for wise legislation. And shall we now in these last hours of the session, pass by all these safeguards which our Constitution and the very forms and the very substance of our Government demand from us, to pass hastily and recklessly upon questions without debate and without the recommendation of a committee?

Sir, I do not propose to delay this body by long debate now. I only mean to say that I will take these questions at the right time, consider them laboriously and painfully, with the one single eye to the honor of our country and the welfare of our people, and I will then vote bravely and fairly upon them according to my judgment. But this is not the time for their introduction. We have no right in this hasty way to arrest by our declaration the subscription to the sinking fund. We may not do it. We are told already that there will be no sinking-fund appropriation simply because our revenues not only will afford nothing for a sinking fund, but there will be a deficit of $36,000,000 we are assured by the Secretary of the Treasury in case we do not give him some means by borrowing money to meet the demands upon the Treasury.

Now, sir, one fact should be remembered. If we shall authorize the borrowing of money, and thereby replenish the Treasury in excess, the money still will be there. The Department which has charge of it will be answerable to the country for its reception and for its use. If the honorable Senator from Kentucky be right, if it be true that last year there were twenty millions awaiting expenditure, and that on the 1st day of next July there will be twenty-eight millions more, making, say, $40,000,000 or $50,000,000, what will it be on the 1st of January? It will be a fund for the diminution of the interest-bearing debt of the people of the United States. But suppose he is in error, suppose he speaks not by the card but from mere erroneous assumption, then there will be a deficit. And what means a deficit in the Treasury? It means bankruptcy; it means inability to meet those debts, those payments which we are here voting appropriations for and directing the proper officials to meet. Therefore I say, Mr. President, if we are to have error on either side, let it be on the side of preparation to meet the obligations which the votes of Congress at the present session have incurred. It will not do for us to have an empty Treasury, incapable of response to the demands which we ourselves by the votes cast at the present session have made upon it.

I shall therefore vote against the amendment of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, as I say, irrespective of the merits or demerits, of the logic or the law of this proposition. I will vote against it because we ought not to undertake at this time to settle this question. As to whether or not the sinking fund is to be suddenly arrested, or whether we are to adopt a policy in regard to it which shall change the construction naturally to be given to the words of the act under which the sinking fund was established, is a matter which I do not think we should settle either one way or the other at this time.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

Mr. BECK. I should like to take about five minutes.

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot refuse to yield to my friend from Kentucky for a few minutes.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, a man ought not to be astonished at anything that takes place on this floor, or at any amount of amazement displayed by Senators; but I confess to some amazement at the position taken by the Senator from Delaware. He seems to assume that I am dragging into the Senate at the close of the session questions which cannot be considered and ought not to be considered, when the committee to which he belongs and its chairman the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] from that committee, with or without the assent of the Senator from Delaware—with his assent I presume—has as an amendment to this very bill, dragged in, to use his expression, in the closing hours of the session, a measure to increase the bonded debt of the country \$18,000,000 by the issuing of 4 per cent. bonds in order to meet the appropriations necessary to pay the appropriations made by this bill; when that committee and the Senator from Delaware undertake, to use his own form of expression, in the closing hours of the session, to insist and vote that it is necessary to increase the bonded debt of the country and to add \$18,000,000 to the principal of that debt in order to meet the emergency which they claim has arisen by reason of the arrears of pension act, and I seek to amend that proposition and to maintain and prove that there is no necessity for increasing the bonded debt of the country, that there is money enough in the Treasury now, as shown by the statement of the President of the United States and as shown by the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that proposition which comes from his committee is dragged into this bill after it was rejected in the Committee on Appropriations and after we had declared that we should put no legislation of this sort upon it, that we would wait until we saw whether the necessity arose, then the Finance Committee and the Senator from Delaware, in the closing hours of the session, seek to drag in a proposition to increase the bonded debt of the country, and their chairman reports a proposition adding \$18,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds in order to meet this condition of things, and then, forsooth, because I will not agree to such propositions and because I seek to resist them and show how we can furnish all the money necessary without adding one dollar to the debt of the country, simply by applying the money now in the Treasury to pay these obligations, instead of buying bonds on one side and selling them on the other and paying double interest for three months while the process is going on, and paying $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission to syndicates and banks. I am charged with dragging in hasty legislation into this Senate. If the Senator from Vermont withdraws his proposition I will withdraw mine.

I am only struggling to prevent a bad proposition from being passed by offering a better one, and that is called hasty and inconsiderate legislation, when there cannot be a more conservative one, as it is one that will save us from increasing our interest-bearing debt—one that will only pay out money now on hand, instead of increasing the bonded debt, raising syndicates, and paying double interest, and taking money out of one pocket and putting it in the other, and paying somebody a large sum to do it. As to the charge of my position being inconsiderate and unadvised, I will read from the message of the President of the United States, which embodies the report of his Secretaries, so that the report will let the world see whether or not my proposition has been properly considered. I read what the President said to us less than three months ago in his annual message to Congress:

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury furnishes a detailed statement of the operations of that Department of the Government, and of the condition of the public finances.

The ordinary revenues from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1878, were $257,763,878.70; the ordinary expenditures for the same period were $236,964,326.80—leaving a surplus revenue for the year of $20,799,551.90.

The receipts for the present fiscal year, ending June 30, 1879, actual and estimated, are as follows: Actual receipts for the first quarter commencing July 1, 1878, $73,389,743.43; estimated receipts for the remaining three quarters of the year, $191,110,256.57; total receipts for the current fiscal year, actual and estimated, $264,500,000. The expenditures for the same period will be, actual and estimated, as follows: For the quarter commencing July 1, 1878, actual expenditures, $73,344,573.27; and for the remaining three quarters of the year the expenditures are estimated at $166,755,426.73—making the total expenditures $240,100,000; and leaving an estimated surplus revenue for the year ending June 30, 1879, of $24,400,000.

The total receipts during the next fiscal year, ending June 30, 1880, estimated according to existing laws, will be $264,500,000; and the estimated ordinary expenditures for the same period will be $236,330,412.68; leaving a surplus of $28,179,587.32 for that year.

In the foregoing statements of expenditures, actual and estimated, no amount is allowed for the sinking fund provided for by the act approved February 25, 1862, which requires that 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States shall be purchased or paid within each fiscal year, to be set apart as a sinking fund. There has been, however, a substantial compliance with the conditions of the laws. By its terms the public debt should have been reduced between 1862 and the close of the last fiscal year $518,361,806.28; the actual reduction of the ascertained debt in that period has been $720,644,739.61; being in excess of the reduction required by the sinking fund act—$202,282,933.33.

Secretary Morrill said the same thing two years ago. Secretary Sherman said the same thing last year. Not one of them has applied anything but the surplus revenues to the sinking fund; the present Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Committee on Finance, of which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is chairman and the Senator from Delaware is an honored member, and told them that he is not complying with the laws relative to the sinking fund at all, nor is he complying with any provisions of the so-called sinking-fund laws, but that he is using the surplus revenue, after the satisfaction of all ordinary appropriations, as a means to aid him in resumption by purchasing fractional currency, retiring legal-tender notes; in short, doing as he pleases with it, paying no attention to the sinking-fund laws at all. No member of the Committee on Finance will rise in his place and say that the Secretary of the Treasury is carrying out any provisions of this law. On the contrary, they are obliged to say, as the record will show, that he has not, and that he has so advised them. They have published his statements and indorsed them by refusing to require him to comply with the law or to use the surplus revenue except as it suits him.

I propose simply to suspend for two years the operation of the sinking-fund law. The Finance Committee know it is disregarded; the Secretary has told them that he disregards it; the President and all the Secretaries say we have been anticipating it by over $200,000,000; and because I advocate a simple, honest, and economical proposition like that, when the proposition they make is to increase the bonded debt of the country, I am told, and the country is told, that I am throwing fire-brands into the Senate at the closing hours of Congress and seeking to prevent the careful consideration of weighty measures. Let them withdraw their proposition to increase the bonded debt and let this bill pass, and I will withdraw mine, and take the chances in another Congress to have my views of this law considered.

Mr. EATON. Will my friend permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. EATON. If I understood my friend aright, he said that if the Senator from Vermont would withdraw his proposition, he would withdraw the one which he made.

Mr. BECK. I do say so, because I do not seek to embarrass this bill with any outside legislation, and my amendment was only introduced as a substitute for that of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EATON. That is one question that is answered. And now one more: Would it not be quite as well for us to vote down the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont as to introduce this, which my friend certainly entertains some doubt about; else he would not be glad to exchange it if the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt about it, and I have no desire to exchange it, but I desire, if anything is to be added, that we will place a harmless provision on the bill, one that costs nothing, one that hurts nothing, one that does not change the action of the Department to the extent of a dollar, instead of a proposition now, as I think, unnecessarily and improperly proposed to increase the bonded debt of the country.

Mr. EATON. I think so, too.

Mr. BECK. Therefore, I have offered my amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me a moment?

Mr. WINDOM. I promised to yield to the Senator from West Virginia to make a personal explanation.

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to say that when the vote was taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana who sits on my left, [Mr. VOORHEES,] I had been called to the House of Representatives on some business connected with the legislation involved in this body. If I had been here I should have voted in the affirmative, and am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] providing for the issuing interest-bearing bonds.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I rise to ask whether we may have unanimous consent to vote on these propositions without further debate? I mean these two that are now pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator means the bill?

Mr. WINDOM. I mean the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] and of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the vote may be taken upon the pending amendment without further debate. Is there objection?

Mr. BAYARD. I cannot allow the Senator from Kentucky or anybody else to speak of my being in the counsels of the Secretary of the Treasury. I do not pretend to know anything of what he does except what he publishes. That is all I can say, and I have no other information from or counsel with him in regard to financial matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota, that the vote shall now be taken?

Mr. BECK. I wish to add two words to my amendment to correct it. I wish to add after the words "have been," in line 19, the words, "or may be;" so as to read:

Which from time to time might, under the provisions of either of the sections aforesaid, have been, or may be, applied to the sinking fund aforesaid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those words will be inserted in the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky. The Chair hears no objection to the proposition, and unanimous consent is granted that the vote be taken without further debate. The first question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] which the Secretary will report.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—26.
Bailey,	Garland,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Beck,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Thurman,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. EATON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) On this subject I am paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 19, nays 41; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve the second amendment adopted in committee, now marked as section 2, which was section 9 in the print when it was first offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not yet reached that point. Is a separate vote demanded upon any of the amendments?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the very one I say I demanded a separate vote upon, what is marked as section 2. It was adopted in Committee of the Whole, and I demand a separate vote upon that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont demands a separate vote on the amendment he has indicated. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted as section 2 the following:

All pensions which have been, or which may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or actual disability of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, or from the termination of the right of party having prior title to such pension: Provided, The application for such pension has been, or is hereafter, filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, otherwise the pension shall commence from the date of filing the application; but the limitation herein prescribed shall not apply to claims by or in behalf of insane persons, and children under sixteen years of age.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate in a very few moments indeed to two points in the amendment. One is fixing a statute of limitation within which claims must be presented, or else, just as the old law was, if granted, they shall only take effect from the date of the application or the proof. That was the very fault that was found with the law as it stood before we passed the act of the 25th of January granting arrears of pensions. That act was passed upon the express theory that that limitation was unjust, and it declared in specific terms that all the pensions hereafter granted as well as the old ones should have their effect from the date of death or disability, as the case might be. This proposed act, only a month afterward, is to repeal so much of the act of the 25th of January as is in conflict with it. I do not wish to spend any more time upon that point.

Now, I come to a more important point. By the law of 1861, on which all pensions were founded, the foundation law, it was provided that in case of disability incurred, as distinguished from death in the service of the country, the invalid pension, as it is called, of the soldier who was disabled, should commence from the date of his discharge from the Army. Of course it frequently, it always happened indeed, that the discharge of the invalid soldier who had been injured or was sick was some time after the disability was incurred. During that interval he was taken care of in hospital, was paid his wages, his salary, his allowances, and everything. Therefore the law justly provided that when he had his pension for disability it should only commence from the date of his discharge so that he would not get pay and pension both. Under that law, with which this act of the 25th of January is perfectly consistent, for it follows it, not only those who were entitled to arrears by the act that we passed last month but all the others take their pensions, (the invalids I am speaking of, the one hundred and fifty thousand of them,) from the date of their discharge. Now by force of this amendment, which fixes the date of actual disability, you are to make another lap backwards into the history of the war and give an additional bonus to every soldier who now has a pension, no matter whether he got pay then, or one, or two, or five years afterward, for all the difference in time between the date of his injury and the date of his discharge from the Army. That, to make a guess, because that is all I can do now, will take ten or fifteen million dollars more. If the Senate wishes to do that thing of course I have done my duty.

Mr. KERNAN. I can understand from the statement of the Senator from Vermont that where pensioners had been disabled in the Army and cared for in hospital or in some other way, drawing their pay and allowance, we should not give them a pension for that time; but I think this amendment proposed is aimed at a different class of persons. The complaint when the law of the 25th of January was before the Senate, was that it would enable men who were discharged without being disabled, but whose disability arose a year afterward, or two years afterward, as it was said, and they claimed that they had contracted the seeds of disease while they were in the service, to claim a pension. It was objected to the law of the 25th of January that it would give such persons a pension from the date of their discharge when in fact they did not become invalids for one, two, or three years afterward. This amendment was intended to correct the law of the 25th of January as to that class of cases, and to relieve the law of January 25 from what was objected to it as being too broad. If the Senator from Vermont is right, that all the pensions ought to date from the date of discharge, if that is the most economical for the Treasury, of course I desire to accomplish the same end; but it was said, and I think there is some force in it, that there is a class of applicants, and a large class, who left the Army apparently in good health, who were engaged in their business for several years, and who will now apply and claim that from hardship they became disabled long after their discharge, and for the time before the actual disability I do not think they ought to have pensions.

I do not suppose there is a large class of those who became actually disabled in the Army, and who were cared for as soldiers and under pay for a few months or longer or whatever the time may have been before they were discharged; but I do not think their pensions ought to run back covering the time during which they were paid as soldiers and during which they were cared for. I think the law should give this class a pension from the time they were discharged, being disabled men then and having been for six months before. In that case the pension should date from the discharge; but men who were disabled in health and now claim pensions on account of the seeds of a disease which they contracted in the service, but which was developed in them afterward and caused them disability a year or two afterward, should not have pensions any earlier than they became sick and disabled.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, as I understand it, by existing law the arrear of pensions dates back to the discharge. The amendment adopted to this bill provides that in no case where the disability occurred after the discharge shall the pension go back of the disability; so, that in every case, except where the disability occurred after the discharge, the discharge is the limit. In all cases where the disability developed itself after the discharge, this amendment limits it to the actual existence of the disability. So there are two points of limitation. The discharge is one. Those cases where the disability arises after the discharge have another limitation. Therefore it does not seem to me that there is any trouble about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. Senators may take it as far as I am concerned at their own risk.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator from Kansas to say that under the arrears of pensions act, if the soldier has been discharged and there was no disability existing at that time, and six or seven or eight years after his discharge a disability had developed itself, having its remote origin prior to his discharge, he can under that law get arrears of pension from the date of his discharge?

Mr. INGALLS. I will answer that question in a moment. The amendment to which the Senator from Vermont objects was offered by the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] and was adopted in opposition to my judgment.

As I understand the law now, in response to the Senator from Missouri I will state, that in those cases where the disability developed a long period after the discharge it has been the custom of the Commissioner of Pensions to place the pensioner upon the rolls at a purely nominal rate, so that he would practically be pensioned from the time when the disability developed. In order to preserve and maintain the symmetry of the law that practice has existed since 1861, running back through three different periods of limitation.

To guard against the difficulty which the Senator from Vermont suggests, it is my judgment, as it was in the beginning, that the amendment of the Senator from New York ought not to have been adopted; but of course I yielded to the judgment of the Senate, preferring that rather than to have a protracted debate; but I still think that the amendment was wrongfully adopted and ought not to be concurred in.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to say that there was a precise amendment like this offered to the act of January 25 on the same theory that I offered this amendment to the pending measure. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions then thought the Pension Office construed the law as he now says.

Mr. INGALLS. So I said.

Mr. KERNAN. There was an amendment like this provision offered to the law of January. I said then that I wanted to have the Pension Office construe the law so as to give a man a pension only from the time he was actually sick. I did not want to vote in favor of that amendment because it would send the bill back to the House. The moment the amendment was proposed there was a clamor raised that it was going to do this thing which I have suggested. Now, if the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is satisfied that it does justice as the law stands, I am entirely content to have the amendment I offered rejected. What I desire is to keep the law so that no man can get a pension as an invalid pension dating further back than when he became an invalid. Then I hope the amendment will be non-concurred in if it is against the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HILL. Are you sure the construction of the law will be the same without your amendment as with it?

Mr. KERNAN. I cannot say. I am not a member of the Committee on Pensions; I have not examined these laws with a view to this point, and therefore I am content to have the amendment voted down if the law as drawn effectuates the purpose which I desire to insure.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to say for myself that I shall vote against every amendment to this bill, good, bad, and indifferent. I do not propose, so far as my vote is concerned, to imperil the passage of this bill by helping to adopt any amendment here. So far as I am concerned, the bill shall go back to the House unchanged entirely, so that it may become a law without any question, or doubt, or fear.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, in line 6 of the amendment, to strike out the words "actual disability" and insert "discharge," and in line 8, after the word "granted," to insert the words:

If the disability occurred prior to discharge, and if such disability occurred after the discharge, then from the date of actual disability.

Mr. HILL. That will do.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will settle the whole question and will be in exact conformity with the rulings and decisions of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. KERNAN. You restore the word "discharge" for which the words "actual disability" were substituted in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. COCKRELL. I restore the word "discharge" and strike out the words "actual disability," in line 6.

Mr. PADDOCK. I would inquire if that is not the practice now?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the practice, but still it is not the law.

Mr. PADDOCK. Will the practice be changed by the law that was passed in January?

Mr. COCKRELL. This makes the practice the law.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think that subject was fully discussed before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment of the Senator from Missouri be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I should like to hear the section as it will read in connection.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended, the section will read:

SEC. 2. All pensions which have been or which may hereafter be granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, if the disability occurred prior to the discharge; and if such disability occurred after the discharge, then from the date of actual disability or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension: Provided, The application, &c.

Mr. MAXEY. It seems to me that the construction of the law given by the Senator from Vermont is exactly right. This second section as originally worded here follows the act of 1861. It is perfectly true that if we strike out the word "discharge," as it was stricken out in Committee of the Whole, and insert "actual disability," a pensioner may draw his pay as a soldier from the time that he received the wound up to the time that he was discharged; and then, if he is entitled to a pension on account of actual disability, he goes back again and draws a pension covering the very time that he has drawn his pay. The Senator from Vermont is perfectly correct about that; the amendment does not at all cover that defect. It is provided that in no case shall arrears of pensions be allowed to date from a time prior to the date of actual disability; but in the mean time he has drawn his pay all through up to the very time when he was finally discharged. After he has drawn that pay he commences again, and in that way draws double pay. But the amendment of the Senator from Missouri strikes out the words "actual disability" in line 6 and restores the word "discharge," leaving it as the law of 1861 left it, which prevents double pay. I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is entirely right.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire if any of the amendments already made in Committee of the Whole have been concurred in in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. None of them have been concurred in.

Mr. PADDOCK. Then I appeal to the friends of the pensioners here to non-concur in every amendment and vote down all that may be now offered, so as to send this bill back to the House just as it came to us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the residue of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri rise to propose an amendment?

Mr. SHIELDS. I am not quite sure whether the amendment I wish to propose is in order. If it is, I wish to have it attached to the last section of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the law granting pensions to the soldiers and their widows of the war of 1812 approved March 9, 1878, is hereby made applicable in all its provisions to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico of 1846.

Mr. INGALLS. I believe I will, although I regret to do so, raise the point of order that that amendment is not admissible at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in order. This is not a general appropriation bill. Anything is in order as an amendment to it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall not debate the amendment, but merely ask a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas insist on his point of order?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS.]

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDONALD. Let the amendment be reported again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hereford,	Morgan,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask leave to state that I should be in favor of the amendment just agreed to if it were presented to the Senate as a separate measure; but being opposed to all amendments upon this bill as endangering it, I voted against all the other amendments presented.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Is an amendment now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands not.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Black Hawk war has not yet been included.

Mr. BLAINE. Why are amendments not in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been read the third time, and the question is on its passage.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is the best thing to do with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Howe,	Randolph,
Anthony,	Hamlin,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Booth,	Hereford,	McMillan,	Windom.

Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	McDonald,	Saulsbury,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Oglesby,	Sharon,
Chaffee,	Enstis,	Plumb,	Wadleigh.
Conkling,	Johnston,	Sargent,

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I moved to lay the bill on the table because I saw no probability of getting a vote upon it, and because it would be in order upon the sundry civil bill and could be taken from the table at any time and placed there, and would be more certain to pass than now with the amendment which it contains.

Several SENATORS. Vote, vote.

Other SENATORS. Order, order.

Mr. WINDOM. I think I am in order, and you will get the question when I get ready.

Mr. President, I have no opposition to the bill. I have tried for the last four hours to get a vote upon it, but its friends have manifested a determination to talk it to death. If we can have a vote upon it now, I have no sort of objection and will vote for it with a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that the amendment just adopted will take at least twenty millions more in addition to the thirty-six millions that we have already appropriated. I therefore ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been already ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 38, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—38.
Bailey,	Garland,	McPherson,	Shields,
Beck,	Gordon,	Matthews,	Spencer,

Chaffee,	Kernan,	Sargent,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WINDOM subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the arrearages of pension appropriation bill passed, and I will call it up at the earliest moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that the motion of the Senator from Minnesota will not prevail. It is now ten o'clock at night. The sundry civil bill cannot be read through before twelve o'clock. It comprises one hundred and twenty-eight pages of printed matter. I hope the Senate will take up to-night and pass the river and harbor bill. I suppose it can be passed before twelve o'clock. Therefore, I hope the Senate will vote down the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, and then agree to the motion which I shall then make to take up the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask, then, for a division on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 38, noes 5.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations may be acted upon in their order as the bill is read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I reserve all points of order on the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection is heard to the request of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to all questions of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That reservation will be made.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, a single word in explanation of the general features of the bill. As it comes from the House it appropriates $17,217,209.70. The total amount added by the Committee on Appropriations is $2,735,391.14, making a total as reported to the Senate of $19,952,600.84. The time at the command of the committee in preparing the bill has not been sufficient to enable me to arrange the figures in detail giving the amendments which constitute this addition.

I wish to say a single word with reference to the action of the Senate committee on this and the other appropriation bills which have just been reported from it. The sundry civil bill, the one now before the Senate, as it came from the House of Representatives contained some eighty pages. It was passed—I can state that—but I will say that before it reached the Senate committee it had been considered nowhere except in a committee. The result was that it required a good deal more time and attention than it otherwise would have done. The bill was received by the Senate on Tuesday, but could not be printed and ready for action by the Committee on Appropriations until the day before yesterday. The legislative, executive, and judicial bill was reported to the Senate Wednesday, but not printed and ready for action by the Committee on Appropriations until yesterday morning. So that, as the Senate will observe, the Committee on Appropriations has had but three days to consider and report upon these two most difficult and important of all the appropriation bills.

I make this statement because I have seen statements to the effect that the Senate has been dilatory in preparing these bills. The two bills to which I refer, the sundry civil and the legislative, contain appropriations amounting to nearly $40,000,000, and as I have said are the most voluminous and difficult bills that are presented during the session. I think it cannot truthfully be said that the committee which has considered them both and has reported them to the Senate in three days has been dilatory. I shall not take further time, but ask that the reading may proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill and the question will be taken on the several amendments as they are reached, and all points of order upon them are reserved.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am sorry to ask the presiding officer again to have order. I cannot hear the Clerk when he reads in a clear tone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Sergeant-at-Arms will be instructed to enforce the orders which have been repeated now many times during the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will enforce the order of the Senate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear it when the Senate is in order. No business will be transacted until then.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that the doors be closed in the rear, and that they stop talking aloud at the entrance from the cloak-room. I cannot hear, and the Senators behind me cannot hear, what is going on. I regret to have to refer to it, but it is necessary in order to know what is going on in the Senate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Am I now in order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will enforce the direction of the Senate. Gentlemen standing shall be seated. [Rapping with his gavel.] The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The inquiry I wish to address to the Chair is, will it be in order after the bill has been read through to move an amendment by striking out any portions of the bill that have been read over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Except that an amendment will not be in order to strike out anything inserted until after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The original text of the bill may be amended by striking out after the bill has been read through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order to make that motion after the amendments reported by the committee shall be disposed of. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 15, in the items under the "Treasury Department," to strike out "continuation" after the word "for" and insert "completion;" in line 16, to strike out after "building" the words "three hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred and twenty-five;" and after the word "dollars," in line 17, to insert:

Of which sum $30,000 may be used for fitting up the basement for use of the post-office, and be available immediately.

So as to make the clause read:

Custom-house and subtreasury, Chicago, Illinois: For completion of building, $525,000; of which sum $30,000 may be used for fitting up the basement for use of the post-office, and be available immediately.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not know but that it may be just as well to indicate what I think it my duty to do here as elsewhere. In view of what must be the condition of the Treasury, I do not think we can make these appropriations. When we vote the money we must remember that our people have to pay it in the way of taxes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Shall I make a statement to the Senator from Iowa or will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WINDOM. I do not understand the Senator from Iowa; I cannot hear him.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am about stating to the Senate the reasons why I shall vote against this amendment on the second page, lines 15 to 19. It is an appropriation to be spent in my neighborhood. I was about remarking that the amount of money we have appropriated and which we must appropriate to carry on the ordinary expenses of the Government will be such as evidently to exhaust the Treasury, and there will be a large deficit in view of what we have concluded to pay out; and it seems to me we ought to endeavor in this bill to save something. Therefore I wish to test the sense of the Senate whether or not this amendment shall prevail, and I shall endeavor to apply the same test, unless the sense of the Senate be clearly expressed otherwise, in regard to other items. I ask for the yeas and nays, if that is in order, upon agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. I think that this amendment is in the line of economy. The bill as it came from the House appropriated $350,000 for the continuation of the building at Chicago. The committee were informed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Architect that $525,000 would complete the building. Not to make this partial appropriation would be to postpone its completion one year. We are now paying about $46,000 for rent in Chicago, which we can stop paying as soon as the building is completed, so that the economy proposed by the Senator from Iowa would be this: refuse to add the amount necessary to complete the building; wait one year, save the appropriation of $175,000 for that time, and pay $46,000 interest on it, or 25 or 30 per cent. interest. The Government cannot afford to do that.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I concur with the Senator from Minnesota that it would be true economy to increase the appropriation, but the question I wish to address myself to is, where is the money to come from? That is the point with me. It is no use for us to appropriate money if we do not have it. It is no use for us to appropriate money if we cannot have it. By a recent vote of the Senate we have added $20,000,000 to the national expenditures, and we must if possible save the amount, or a portion of it at least, in some other way.

I had occasion to remark to the Senate to-day already that the capacity to receive money from the Treasury is unlimited, but the capacity of our people to put money into the Treasury is limited. We must consult the wishes, the views, and the opinions of the men who pay our taxes as well as the wishes and views and opinions of those who are to receive the money paid in as taxes. If the object be to make appropriations such as must necessarily swamp the Treasury and bring the Treasury to bankruptcy, we can do that; but certainly as prudent and careful men we should do with public affairs what we would do with our private affairs, and that is not make our appropriations clearly, unmistakably beyond our ability to pay them. I agree fully with the Senator from Minnesota that this, if we had the money to do it, would be a good thing to do, but I repeat the question to him, where is the money to come from?

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator must address the question to the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I should like an answer to it from somebody.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, the soldiers of the Mexican war will pay it out of the bill we have just passed!

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I feel it my duty to say a word on this question. I wish the Senator from Iowa had selected some other item not so deserving as this to raise a question upon. There may be items in the bill on which probably a test vote ought to be taken, but on this particular item I think it is in the line of economy to appropriate the amount recommended by the committee, from the fact that the amount here appropriated will complete this building. There is now in Chicago, as we all know, a post-office that is rambling about, and it is a question now whether or not it can remain in the building where it is temporarily located. As the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has said, the rent costs $46,000 per annum. The Post-Office Committee, the Postmaster-General, and one of the assistants appeared before the committee and urged that this appropriation would be economy, so as to get into the building and prevent the destruction of much valuable matter that they have now exposed. There may be other points in the bill that do not stand as firm as this; but I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays on this item, for the appropriation certainly ought to be made.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am inclined to think with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that this amendment is in the line of economy, but if it were not I should like to suggest to the Senate whether it is important at this moment to be very particular about economy. The Senate have just, by their vote, added to the pension list about $20,000,000; they have made a pensioner of Jefferson Davis, the president of the late confederacy, and now are about to inquire about economy! There is no limitation to the bill which Senators have just voted to create a pension list, and all the army of the confederacy who were soldiers in the Mexican war are embraced and placed as pensioners upon the lists of the United States.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I agree fully with the Senator from West Virginia, as I agreed with the Senator from Minnesota when he stated, as the Senator from West Virginia has just done, that this is a good thing to do. But I addressed a question to the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which he did not answer and said he could not. I will address the same question to the Senator from West Virginia. In view of our action to-night, where is the money to come from? There are a great many good things we might do if we had the money, but where is the money to come from? If the Senator from West Virginia will answer the question, I shall perhaps withdraw my objection to the amendment and be content.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is not for this side of the Chamber to answer where the money comes from.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They only know where it goes to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is a fact that I readily admit. The Senator from West Virginia is hardly the person to ask where the money goes. If you will show me a vote in the way of extravagance that the Senator from West Virginia has given, that the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Vermont have not also given, then I am mistaken myself. I have no interest in the world, any more than the Senator from Iowa, in this amendment. I said to him that I believed there were other things in this bill that he might call the yeas and nays on and get more votes than he will in favor of the rejection of this amendment.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Well, I intend to do that thing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow this item to go on and then reserve it for a separate vote when the bill is reported to the Senate, for we see plainly if we are going to have the yeas and nays instead of a division on every amendment we shall be here two or three days.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to test the sense of the Senate as to what will be the policy of the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest that the Senator can accomplish the same object by a rising vote.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, I would not detain the Senate for a moment but for the fact that this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations happens for once to favor some constituents that I have the honor in part to represent on this floor. The House bill appropriates $350,000 for the custom-house and subtreasury building at Chicago, Illinois. The new building, the custom-house, has been under way for several years. It can be completed in one year from the 30th day of June next. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars will not complete it; $525,000 will entirely complete it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. But will the Senator tell me where the money is to come from?

Mr. OGLESBY. There is no trouble about the money.

Mr. RANSOM. None whatever.

Mr. OGLESBY. None at all. As was stated kindly by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the Government is now paying for rent of public buildings in the city of Chicago over $40,000 a year. I have not the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject, but I think it is not far from $45,000 a year.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Forty-three thousand dollars exactly.

Mr. OGLESBY. Forty-three thousand dollars, my colleague says. In the city of Saint Louis it is paying four or five thousand dollars rent, in the city of Cincinnati from three to five thousand dollars rent. All the public buildings in the city of Chicago were destroyed by fire. Gentlemen upon this floor cannot have forgotten the sad and fearful visitation upon that city of October, 1871. The people in very large part, not only of the city, but of the entire State, have been struggling to pull away from that fearful and persecuting calamity. The public buildings have been as it were on the move, renting here and renting there, and renting about the city accommodations for the public service. But recently a rented building, a very suitable and commodious one for the post-office, was seriously damaged by fire, so that the entire contents of the post-office had to be removed from it, and to-day it is fixed nowhere; it is temporarily located. The interest at $45,000 a year would make a difference of 10 to 15 per cent. of clear gain to the Government in making this additional appropriation. Why should we put it off another year and pay $45,000 extra for another year, when it only requires $175,000 in addition to the appropriation made by the House to complete the building?

It seems to me if there ever was a business matter presented to this body before, a case where intelligent economy could be wisely applied, it is in finishing this building under this appropriation. The committee have taken the responsibility, and I thank them heartily for it, of adding to the appropriations suggested in the House bill $175,000, so as to furnish the means to complete the building in one year from the 30th day of June next. Then this heavy burden of interest, of annual rent-tax, against the Government will cease. All the business of the entire Government in the city of Chicago will be transferred to a fire-proof building, transferred to a permanent and fixed home and quarters; and there will be no more rent to pay; the Government will be free from that tax and will have a substantial building, and even appropriations for that purpose will entirely cease.

Now, my good friend, the Senator from Iowa, who is our neighbor, wishes to apply a severe test to his own home people here. He wishes to test the sense of the Senate under the cry of economy and saving revenues to the Government and apply it to that stricken city, which has been laboring ever since the fearful ordeal it passed through as no city on the American continent free from pestilence has ever labored under before. It is just beginning to recover. It is just beginning to regain its commercial and financial strength; and now for the first time when it asks the Senate to be a little generous, my good neighbor from Iowa asks the Senate to help him to strike it down. I would no more treat Iowa that way than I would the State of Vermont. I hope the Senate will not indulge this freak of economy which has taken possession of the usually well-balanced mind of my friend from Iowa, and, disregarding his kindly suggestions, will stand by the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and give us the $525,000, and we will give you a splendid court-house and custom-house where the public business of the country will be safely taken care of for the future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 50, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—50.

Anthony,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	Ransom,
Barnett,	Dawes,	McCreery,	Rollins,
Bayard,	Dennis,	McDonald,	Saunders,
Beck,	Dorsey,	McPherson,	Shields,
Booth,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Spencer,

Conover,	Jones of Florida,	Paddock,
Davis of Ill.,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,

NAYS—8.

Bailey,	Edmunds,	Hill,	Kirkwood,
Coke,	Harris,	Kernan,	Randolph,

ABSENT—18.

Addison,	Eaton,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Blaine,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Wadleigh,
Bruce,	Hamlin,	Patterson,	Withers,
Chaffee,	Ingalls,	Sargent,
Conkling,	Johnston,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 42, after the word "building," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "ninety;" and in line 43, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And not exceeding $15,000 of this sum may be used in constructing an iron-framed roof—

So as to make the clause read:

Custom house, court-house, and post-office, Nashville, Tennessee: For continuation of building, $90,000; and not exceeding $15,000 of this sum may be used in constructing an iron-framed roof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 47, to insert:

Custom-house and post-office, Raleigh, North Carolina: For completion of building and grounds, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 50, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to purchase, by contract or condemnation, all that part of the block of land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island, not already owned by the United States, bounded by South Main street, Crawford street, South Water street, and Custom avenue, if in his judgment the necessities of the public service require; and for this purpose a sum not to exceed $125,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to inquire what is the object of buying this ground?

Mr. BURNSIDE. The public building in the city of Providence is not large enough for the Government offices there, nothing like large enough; it is very much crowded. It was a recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury last year that the Government buy a piece of ground adjoining the present public building for the purpose of enlarging it. A bill introduced for that purpose passed the Senate, but failed to pass the House. Since that time the ground has been built upon; in fact a very expensive building has been placed upon it, so that it is beyond the reasonable reach of the Government. The Government owns on another street in the city a piece of ground which is covered by the old custom-house, and this provision is for the purpose of buying the remainder of that square with a view at some future day to erecting in the center of the square a new custom-house.

The post-office of the city of Providence now pays into the Government of the United States a sum nearly equal to $100,000, more than $80,000 over and above the expenses; and it is due to the city that room for the public offices should be given to them, and every year that this is deferred will make the ground upon which public buildings can be erected more costly. It is deemed by the Secretary of the Treasury advisable to purchase this ground now while it can be had at a reasonably low rate.

Mr. KERNAN. What has caused the increased necessity for more room for the custom-house?

Mr. BURNSIDE. We have not had any enlargement of the public building for some twenty-odd years in the city of Providence, since the public building that is now there was erected, and the city has more than doubled in size.

Mr. KERNAN. Has the United States business increased at all?

What has caused the necessity for more room for the United States business at that port?

Mr. BURNSIDE. The post-office has had to be quadrupled in its size at least. Postal facilities have been extended, and they require three times the room that they did when the present building was put up.

Mr. ANTHONY. This provision has passed the Senate as a separate bill at this session.

Mr. BURNSIDE. It has passed twice.

Mr. ANTHONY. Once last session and once this session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out of line 52 the words "by contract or condemnation." There is no law of the United States that provides any means of condemnation, and these words therefore would be a reproach to everybody that voted upon them, as they imply that we supposed there was some law for condemnation. I move to strike out these words.

Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. BURNSIDE. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 60, to insert:

That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of purchasing a suitable site, and the erection of a public building in the city of Denver, Colorado, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, land-office, and other Government offices in said city: Provided, That said building shall not exceed in cost $200,000.

Mr. EATON. In the sixty-seventh line, after the word "building," I move to insert "and ground;" so as to read:

That said building and ground shall not exceed in cost $200,000.

Mr. TELLER. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Chair will put the question on all these amendments that involve the expenditure of considerable sums of money, because in our present state of beggary I shall vote "no" every time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator refer to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir, not to that, but to the main amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 68, to insert:

For grading, paving, fencing, and so forth, for court-house and post-office grounds, Lincoln, Nebraska, $12,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to strike out the words "and so forth."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. And also to insert the word "and" before "fencing."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is made. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. EATON. The great difficulty is we cannot hear at all. I do not know what the amendment made was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appeals to Senators to resume their seats and cease conversation, so that they may hear the bill as it is read and the various motions that are made in regard to it. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist that the Senate be in order before we transact business. We cannot hear a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 76, to increase the appropriation "for court-house and post-office at Topeka, Kansas," from $30,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 132, to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses of life-saving stations" from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "United States," in line 159, under the head of "engraving and printing," to insert:

For paper for notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, including mill expenses, boxing, and transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 177, to insert:

For payment of expenses of printing pension checks for fiscal year 1879, $2,500, and for the fiscal year 1880, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 243 and 244, as follows:

For light-house at Stage Harbor, Massachusetts, $10,000.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow the action on that amendment to be deferred until the end of the bill. I may be able to give the committee some information about it before that time.

Mr. WINDOM. The item was stricken out for want of information only; not because the committee thought it should be done, but we wanted information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be reserved.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 260 and 261, as follows:

For establishing a first-class fog-signal at Execution Rocks, Long Island Sound, $15,000.

Mr. EATON. I ask that that amendment may not be acted on until I can present some information that I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WINDOM. That, like the other, was stricken out for lack of information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reserving the question? The Chair hears none, and the question is reserved.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to give notice of an amendment reported from the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River to the pending bill. It can lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 261, to insert:

For a day-beacon on the south end of Harbor Ledge, in the harbor of Stamford, Connecticut, $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know of the Senator from Connecticut if he would not wish to have that amendment reserved also for further information? [Laughter.]

Mr. EATON. I would not care to have it reserved; perhaps my friend from Vermont would.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 264, to insert:

For the construction of a light-house on Forked Rocks, in said harbor, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 266, to insert:

For the rebuilding of the light-house on Jane's Island, in Tangier Sound, Chesapeake Bay, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 267, to insert:

To establish a light-ship and fog-signal at Trinity Shoal, off the western coast of Louisiana, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 295, to increase the appropriation "for establishing lights on the Delaware River, from Deepwater Point to League Island," from $60,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the committee about this range-light business on the top of page 14, where it is provided "to establish said range light without cession of jurisdiction," whether that is intended to refer to the range-light on the tower of the Exchange Building or to the range-light on Fog Island. I presume the last-named one that is mentioned is intended.

Mr. WINDOM. What is the question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to know whether the words "range-light," in line 310, refer only to the range-light to be established on the tower of the Exchange Building.

Mr. WINDOM. I think that is what is meant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I suggest, to make it perfectly safe, to insert after the word "said" the words "last named."

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is no other range-light mentioned there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, one is mentioned immediately before.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. No; that is in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is right. The amendment is unnecessary. I thought it spoke of range-light on the preceding page.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 452, to insert:

For equipping the aforesaid steamer and fitting it up with machinery for the propagation of fishes, including carp, &c., $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 463, to strike out the following words, ending in line 474:

And so much of the act "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, as authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue coin certificates in exchange for bullion deposited for coinage at mints and assay offices other than those mentioned in section 3545 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed; said repeal to take effect at the end of the present fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "discretion," in line 503, to insert "for a period not exceeding five years;" and in line 506, after the word "law," to insert "and such leases shall be reported annually to Congress;" so as to read:

That authority be, and is hereby, given to the Secretary of the Treasury to lease, at his discretion, for a period not exceeding five years, such unoccupied and unproductive property of the United States under his control, for the leasing of which there is no authority under existing law, and such leases shall be reported annually to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 530, after the word "and" to strike out "similar felonies," and insert "other crimes;" and in line 535, after the word "other," to strike out "felonies" and insert "crimes;" so as to read:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses of detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national bank notes, and other securities of the United States, as well as the coins of the United States, and other crimes against the Government, and for no other purpose whatever, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 558 to lines 565, in the following words:

That section 170 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so modified that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized, during the present fiscal year, to pay out of the appropriation for refunding the national debt, a reasonable additional compensation to the clerks of his Department who are actually employed upon the refunding of the national debt, in addition to the usual business hours.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 571, to insert:

That the proper accounting officers be authorized and instructed to examine the accounts between the United States and the several States, growing out of moneys expended by such States for military purposes in the war of 1812 with Great Britain, and apply in each examination the provisions and principles of the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1857, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1858," and that there be paid to such States any sums that shall be found to be due them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that it is in violation of the twenty-ninth rule, the first clause thereof, being legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. WALLACE. The first answer to this point of order is, that this is not a general appropriation bill, but is the sundry civil bill upon which everything is put. The second answer is that it is not general legislation, but that it is simply a mode of appropriating to the States under existing laws money that is actually due them. It is temporary and ephemeral in its application. When this thing is done the purpose of the legislation has ended; hence it is not general and permanent legislation, for the money is applied and paid under this appropriation in pursuance of existing laws. That is an end of the legislation; it cannot therefore be general legislation. It applies specifically to the thing that is contemplated by the words of the amendment, the money due to these States under existing law in a special and particular mode herein pointed out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator point out to us the existing law which shows that we owe these people anything?

Mr. WALLACE. There are several.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear one.

Mr. WALLACE. The act of 1857 which is referred to here makes the application of the money in the case of Maryland. The report of the Auditor of the Treasury, under date of 15th of November, 1858, refers to and explains this whole subject. It is found in volume 5, Executive Documents, second session, Thirty-fifth Congress, and it covers this whole subject-matter. It takes up the subject of the relations between the States and the Federal Government for moneys expended in the war of 1812, and shows the payment to the States of certain amounts of money calculated in a particular way; and under the provisions of this section of the sundry civil bill of 1859 this Auditor's report was made; it shows the amount owing to each of the States that will be covered by this provision.

I suppose it will not be contended that the Federal Government did not agree to pay to the several States the money which she has actually paid. The only question in this case is whether she should pay one State in one way and another in another; whether she is to pay Massachusetts the amount of money that is coming to her under one calculation and Maryland under the same calculation, Alabama under the same calculation, and Pennsylvania, Virginia, Delaware, New York, and South Carolina under another calculation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator permit me to inquire whether this contemplates settlement with all the States upon the basis of settlement with Maryland prior to 1857?

Mr. WALLACE. It contemplates settlement with all the States that were not settled with upon the basis adopted in the settlement with Maryland.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is it. I understand it now. Mr. President, I am somewhat familiar with this subject, having been present when it was thoroughly discussed. In the war of 1812 money was advanced by certain cities and States, advanced for their own protection, advanced without any pledge or understanding from the Government that the money was to be returned. In process of time it was decided to pay to the different cities and States the principal of the money thus advanced. It was paid and credited upon the books of the Treasury. I give this from recollection, but my recollection is usually very accurate. In process of time, I say, this money was credited upon the books of the Treasury and paid as the Government of the United States was in funds to make the payments. After many years the States came in to obtain interest upon this money, and after some years it was decided to pay the different States the interest on that money, and the interest was reckoned at 6 per cent. from the time it was entered upon the books of the Treasury up to the date of final payment, and that again was the second final payment and settlement of the whole question.

In process of time some very adroit financiers in Maryland proposed to open the accounts of Maryland and to settle them in accordance with mercantile usage; in other words, to cast interest from one payment down to another, and thus compound interest to the State of Maryland. Thus Maryland drew a large sum—how much I do not now remember, although I knew it at the time—of compound interest after having been paid every dollar of the principal and every dollar of the interest down to the time of the final settlement and payment. Other States, particularly the older States, wanted the same principle applied to their accounts. I remember we had quite a debate on the question many years ago, and it was finally settled between the new States and the old ones. The new States would not agree to pay compound interest. After a long contest and a bitter fight, on the yeas and nays the new States beat the old States, and the thing has lain dormant from that day to this.

Now, sir, I am opposed to opening those accounts again, although Maryland did get an allowance. I am opposed to opening any accounts and paying compound interest. I give this from my recollection, but my recollection is accurate.

Mr. WALLACE. I am inclined to think that the recollection of the Senator from Michigan is at fault in his statement that there was any compound interest calculated in favor of any State. The mode of calculation of interest under the old rule was simply this: there was no application of a payment made to the interest at all; it was applied to the principal and the interest was allowed to run. It is in effect this, that when a man has one of our coupon bonds and presents the bond at the Treasury Department for payment, the Federal Government pays the amount of the coupons and credits that upon the debt, and lets the interest run, and when the holder comes to demand the principal he is told this is not a part of the principal and no interest can be calculated upon it. The rule of computation contended for and applied in the case of Maryland, contended for and applied in the case of Massachusetts and Maine, and under which they were paid, is the rule of computation of interest adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States, adopted in mercantile transactions; and it is a simple matter of justice and of right between man and man, as it is between State and State that the old States, even if they be such, shall have that which their sister States have obtained under this just and usual rule of computation.

Now, sir, to establish what I have said to be correct, I ask the Secretary to read from the report of the Auditor of the Treasury what is said on page 5 thereof.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, before this matter goes any further I beg leave to inquire what has become of the point of order?

Mr. WINDOM. I am very glad the Senator inquires. I was going to inquire what became of it.

Mr. EATON. I did not desire to interrupt my friend from Pennsylvania, but if this is to go on—

Mr. WALLACE. I answered the point of order as I understood it as made by the Senator from Vermont and sat down.

Mr. EATON. But there ought to be a decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HARRIS.) The Chair will submit the question of order raised by the Senator from Vermont to the Senate. The question will be, Is the amendment in order under the twenty-ninth rule?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, my point is that it is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill. I have got two other points of order besides that, but I will take the sense of the Senate on this one first under the same rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My point of order is that this amendment is not in order because it proposes general legislation to a general appropriation bill, being the first clause of Rule 29. There are two other points of order which are fatal to this proposition, later down in the rule, but I do not propose to mix them up. I first make the point of order on that. It is enough for me; and upon that I should like to be heard in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania when the rest of the gentlemen have done talking.

Mr. President, I deny, and I insist upon the proof, that there is any existing law which recognizes or creates any obligation on the part of the United States in respect of the matter to which this amendment is devoted; and if the Senator from Pennsylvania will read the law upon which he relies to show our obligation I should like to listen to it, and I wait for a reply. I may as well wait also, because there are so many other speeches going on in other parts of the room that it is not easy to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will Senators resume their seats and cease conversation, so that the business of the Senate can proceed?

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, is this question of order debatable? Mr. EDMUNDS. It is when it is submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so holds.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was so decided the other day.

Mr. RANSOM. If the Senator from Vermont will pardon me, I do not understand that it was so decided the other day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was so decided on the Brazilian business on the general Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, no appeal has been taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair has submitted the question to the Senate.

Mr. RANSOM. Ah! I did not understand that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I should be glad to hear the Senator from Pennsylvania read his law which shows that the United States owes these people anything.

Mr. WALLACE. I have but a word to say. I have not the statute here, but I read from the report of an official of the Government this:

It appears that, during the war of 1812, various States and cities made advances—in some cases by loans made and in others from moneys in their treasuries—on account of the militia forces and in aid of the prosecution of the war. These expenditures, although not shown to have been made at the request of the General Government, were held to have been made from patriotic motives and to have been "for the use and benefit of the United States." Accordingly, at the conclusion of the war, provision was made by law for reimbursing the States, &c., that had made such advances. At a later period provision was also made for payment of interest in certain cases.

I have here the report of the Secretary of the Treasury which shows that there were laws on the subject under which the moneys were paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, and every law that was passed was executed and every dollar of money that the law authorized to be paid was paid; and the reason why these people, whoever they are, or these States did not get this money was because the law did not give it to them. There is not any statute, and there never was, that authorized this payment. The State of Maryland found that there was not any statute to authorize it and she got one. Whether she got it rightly and upon just principles, is another question, but she got it; and now after a period of more than twenty years since that mistake, if it was a mistake, was made in favor of Maryland, it is proposed to throw out a general invitation to all the States that can figure up an interest account to come in now, after a period of sixty-five years since this money is said to have been expended and after a period of more than fifty years since the accounts were settled and the States received their pay and gave their acquittance and after the demand has again and again been presented to the Congress of the United States and rejected; and now in the last hours of the session it is proposed to open the flood-gates for still further profusion in the name of justice!

Mr. President, I respectfully submit, in the first place, that this is a general appropriation bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania says it is not. I submit in the second place that this is general legislation as much so as any legislation that can possibly exist.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont raises a point of order that this amendment is not in order because it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill. The Chair submits that question to the Senate. Is the amendment in order under the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule?

Mr. HOWE. I rise simply to inquire whether in voting upon this question of order we are confined to the consideration of the precise reason assigned by the Senator who raises the point? He raises a question of order that this amendment is not in order, and he assigns one reason why it is not. As the matter is submitted to the Senate, are we restricted in our vote to the consideration of that one reason, or may we take into consideration other reasons?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will restate the question. The Chair understands the Senator from Vermont to confine his point of order to the one single question that this amendment is not in order because it is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill. The question is, is the amendment in order under the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule; and that question the Chair submits to the Senate. Senators who believe the amendment in order under the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule will answer "ay;" those of a contrary opinion "no," [putting the question.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays. We cannot spend the time any better.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 31; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question of order raised by the Senator from Vermont is sustained, and the amendment is not in order. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 609, after the words "United States," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That section 349 of the Revised Statutes shall not be applied to the accounts of States under act of July 27, 1861, entitled "An act to indemnify the States for expenses incurred by them in defense of the United States."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this amendment proposes general legislation to a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont raises the point of order that this amendment is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and is therefore not in order. Under the judgment of the Senate, pronounced—

Mr. EDMUNDS. It repeals a statute of limitations.

Mr. KERNAN. It really repeals not a statute, but a decision. The suggestion I want to make is based on the document sent to us, which I hold in my hand, showing that it is not repealing the statute, but declaring its true intent and meaning. I find that the Attorney-General has never given an opinion, but the question has been raised by the Auditor whether the section here named does apply to State claims, and I hold in my hand the opinion submitted to the Secretary of War by Captain Thomas H. Bradley, United States Army, examiner of State claims in the War Department, in reference to this statute of limitations. He examined this statute and is of opinion that it does not apply to State claims, and I can state in a word why he says so; and this is simply to remove a doubt. This section of the Revised Statutes is:

No claims against the United States, for collecting, drilling, or organizing volunteers for the war of the rebellion, shall be audited or paid unless presented before the 30th day of June, 1874.

As this officer thinks, and as I think, this provision does not apply at all to State claims, but it applies to what occurred in 1861 when the General Government authorized certain well-known officers to collect, drill, and organize volunteers under the call of the President. They did collect them in various parts of the country, and Congress from time to time, beginning in 1861—I have the statute referred to here—appropriated money to pay the expenses of drilling and collecting troops all over the country, and provision was made for auditing and paying these expenses not incurred by States but by officers of the Government detailed to collect and drill troops. This officer, Captain Bradley, holds that that statute merely refers to claims that were coming in for expenditures made by these individuals or the debts incurred under them for the collecting, drilling, and organizing of troops, and that it has no application to State claims. But as the question has been raised, and there is no opinion except this one of that officer and another by the Secretary of the Treasury, but none by the Attorney-General, it was desired that this be declared to be the intent of the law by this amendment.

That, I think, is the statement of the question; and it would seem to me that there can be no doubt, looking at the facts, at the action of the Government, at the appropriations made by Congress, that that section was only intended to cut off these claims where individual officers had incurred them on the credit of the Government in raising troops for State service, and it does not apply to what are known as State claims in aiding to suppress the rebellion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point of the Senator from New York seems to be that this is not general legislation because in his opinion it is unnecessary. If that is not a new definition of ascertaining what is legislation and what is not, I am somewhat mistaken. He believes the law to be now just what it will be if this amendment be adopted, and therefore he says this is not general legislation. I submit to his own good sense whether that is a sound proposition.

Mr. KERNAN. I will answer. I may be wrong, but I do not think this is general legislation. The section here referred to is a law of 1873 to put an end to claims for articles furnished officers in raising troops. That was the object of that statute, it is clear. I cannot think that a lawyer would construe it to mean that in cutting off claims for raising and drilling troops, &c., it cut off claims by the States for services that they rendered the Federal Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But supposing the Senator to be perfectly correct, that is not the point.

Mr. KERNAN. It is not general legislation; it is simply instructing the Department that that law does not affect certain State claims and never was intended to do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; suppose in a case as to the statute of limitations we propose to instruct a court that the statute of limitations shall not apply to a particular class of cases, is not that general legislation? Why, Mr. President, I am amazed, I must say with great respect, at the argument of my friend from New York. You cannot legislate but on one thing at a time, and one section at a time, and here is a section of the Revised Statutes which declares that no claims against the United States for collecting, &c., shall be received or audited unless presented before the 30th of June, 1874. Now here comes in a bill, if it were in the form of a bill, which provides that that statute shall not apply to a certain class of claims. Is not that general legislation; or must the definition of general legislation be legislation that embraces every possible subject in one clause of one bill? That cannot be it. General legislation is the law of the land as distinguished from paying a private claim. That is what general legislation is, and it is impossible to define it in any other way. The number of objects that may be affected by it is not the test of the generality of the law. The law is general if it applies to the whole class of subjects that come within its scope, equally. That is what makes general legislation; and therefore, Mr. President, I think that this is a much clearer case, clear as I thought the other one was, than the Brazilian subsidy business, in respect to which I believe the honorable Senator from New York agreed with me that it was general legislation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I rise to order. I understood the Chair to decide as instructed by the last vote of the Senate that this amendment was out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island misunderstood the Chair. The Chair started to so decide, but stopped a moment to read the section to determine in his own mind whether it was general legislation, and while so reading this debate sprang up; but the Chair is now prepared to rule that the point of order of the Senator from Vermont is well taken under the judgment of the Senate pronounced a few moments ago. The Chair sustains the point of order, and decides that the amendment is not in order. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator was kind enough a few minutes ago to give unanimous consent to pass over temporarily an amendment on the eleventh page. I was unable at that time to make the proposed statement in regard to it, and I now ask to return to it and make a very brief statement. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to be good enough to listen to the statement that I make.

Mr. President, the Light-House Board in its report recommended the establishment of a light-house at Stage Harbor, Chatham, Massachusetts, which is a provision contained in the House bill, and that is a very important harbor of refuge, and it is necessary to have an additional light that vessels may get a proper range to go through the channel which is somewhat circuitous, and two vessels have been lost very recently in making that harbor of refuge; one a vessel the property of the Government and another which has been lost within two months. It is a harbor of refuge which is of great importance to all the coast commerce which passes through the sound from New York or which passes from Philadelphia or Baltimore to Boston Harbor or to the Provinces or which passes southward from Boston. Now the Book of Estimates estimated two sums of $5,000 each for Ned's Point light station, Massachusetts, and for Wing's Neck light station, Massachusetts, amounting to $10,000; but the Light-House Board recommended to the House to omit these items which are in the estimates and to expend the $10,000 upon this Stage Harbor light-house which the Light-House Board regarded as very much more important than these two that were estimated for. So, with the consent of the Representative of that district, the House appropriated this $10,000 which was in the estimates to this other light-house and omitted those two. It is a very important public work.

Mr. WINDOM. I am sure if the committee had time to hunt up the facts which the Senator possesses we should not have recommended the striking out.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the item may be retained in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You had better have the motion put.

Mr. HOAR. Let the motion be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee in lines 243 and 244 to strike out:

For light-house at Stage Harbor, Massachusetts, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. As we have gone back to light-houses now, upon page 9, line 190, I want a very brief amendment made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Maine that the Senate has not acted upon the committee amendments as yet.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand that; but the chairman of the committee does not object to my inserting the words "or other" in line 190. The provision now reads:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, upon the recommendation of the Light-House Board, to use any surplus portion of the said sum for the purchase of automatic fog-bells.

I am not sure but there are at least two kinds of fog-bells, and I want to insert the words "or other," so as to read "automatic or other fog-bells," so that the Light-House Board may have all the kinds there are to select from.

Mr. WINDOM. I know of no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, if there be no objection to returning to that part of the bill. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary proceeded with the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 614, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, amounts advanced at the request of Major-General R. C. Schenck, dated June 20, 1863, to aid the United States in the construction of works of defense, the amounts to be passed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, not to exceed the amounts examined, allowed, and approved by the Secretary of War, a sum not exceeding $106,491.07 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise a point of order on that amendment. It is a claim, and forbidden by Rule 30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHYTE. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate if the Senator desires.

Mr. WHYTE. That is what I want done.

Mr. BLAINE. Let the rule be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read Rule 30.

The Secretary read as follows:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. This is to carry out an existing law, to carry out provisions in the original act of 1861 providing for "contingencies of fortifications" and by the act of 1874, June 14, which expressly provides for this class of cases, and it is certified to by the Secretary of War and by the Third Auditor of the Treasury. It is a claim recognized by the Government of the United States and finds its proper place in this appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Read the law.

Mr. WHYTE. The act of 1874 provides that—

It shall be the duty of the several accounting officers of the Treasury to continue to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of all claims under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of said section that may be brought before them within a period of five years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator from Maryland that the rule does not stop with providing that the amendment shall be to carry out an existing law but requires that the existing law shall be cited on the face of the amendment itself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not any existing law, I submit with great respect to my friend from Maryland.

Mr. WHYTE. The clause can be very easily amended by citing the law on the face of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you cite the law, I should like to hear you read it.

Mr. WHYTE. I have cited the law. The act of 1861 provides for the class of cases of which this is one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator just read the part of the act of 1861 which he relies upon?

Mr. WHYTE. I will if I can find it in a moment. It is chapter 54, page 316, of the volume of statutes containing the acts of 1861.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now read the clause.

Mr. WHYTE. It is:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for contingencies of fortifications, to be used and applied under the direction of the Secretary of War.

I will read to the Senator from Vermont what the Third Auditor of the Treasury says on the subject:

I consider the claim a proper charge upon the appropriation for contingencies of fortifications, including field works, and therefore within the jurisdiction of the accounting officers to be expended, considered, and reported to Congress in the manner prescribed in the fourth section of the deficiency appropriation of June 14, 1878.

And I hold here the certificate of the Secretary of War upon the report made by the officer of the War Department detailed to examine the claim:

In view of the foregoing report and conclusions, this claim is approved for $96,152, subject to the further consideration of the same by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, the amount, when it shall be found due by said officers, to form an item of estimate to Congress to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for contingencies of fortifications, and to be paid when an appropriation for the purpose shall be made by Congress.

GEO. W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

I should like to know what stronger claim to a place in this appropriation bill any claim that is mentioned in this bill can have than this claim of the city of Baltimore, approved by these officers and reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that the Senator has read that the Secretary of War thinks there is some claim which I presume is something like this one, for $96,152, he thinks looks very well and ought to be put into an itemized estimate for some other appropriation. I see that this amendment is for the sum of $106,491, which does not appear to be the exact claim that the Secretary of War indorses.

Mr. WHYTE. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that it is identically the same thing. There is a ten-thousand-dollar claim left for future action of the accounting officers, but $96,000 has been approved already.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then we have not even got the recommendation of the Secretary of War in a private letter to somebody for this amount.

Mr. WHYTE. It is not a private letter; it is a communication to the Treasury Department; not a private letter at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not know that the Treasury Department kept its files up here on the desks of Senators.

Mr. WHYTE. What I have read is only a copy, of course. I am not reading the original papers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then my friend has found somewhere in the Treasury Department an official document, of which he has a copy, dated at some time, in which one officer of the Government said to another that there ought to be an appropriation to supply deficiencies for the expenses of fortifications out of which this claim might be paid.

Now, instead of having any estimate submitted to Congress, we have an amendment which provides for paying the city of Baltimore a certain sum of money on a settled account, and the Senator says that is not a private claim first, and in the second place that it is to carry out the provisions of existing law, and the provision of existing law is that in 1861 there was appropriated the sum of $100,000 for the contingencies of fortifications to be used and applied under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Is it to carry out that appropriation? The money was appropriated and has been expended. If it has not been expended it can be drawn for all the purposes that that act authorized.

Therefore it is needless to waste time in saying that the statute referred to by my honorable friend does not support this as a provision to carry out the provisions of that law.

I am not arguing upon the question of whether this claim is not a good one standing by itself upon a bill like all the other claims that we are acting upon on the Calendar of unobjected cases; but I hold that it is against this rule as to appropriation bills, not in hostility to the claim being considered in a proper way.

Mr. WHYTE. I have not got any old document that I found in the Treasury Department. I have got a recent report of the Secretary of War, and it is certified to as late as January 17, 1879; the report is made as late as January 17, 1879.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator from Maryland will allow me to say a word. The Committee on Appropriations not having access to the files of the War Department of which the Senator from Vermont speaks, had a letter from the Secretary of War stating that he had found $96,000 or thereabout due the city of Baltimore; that $10,000 remained unadjusted. We also had a letter from the Auditor stating that he had audited that account. We also had a letter from the Comptroller stating that he had passed on that account, and if there is an item in this bill that has passed the accounting officers of the Treasury this item has, and on that account it comes within the rule.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask whether a claim of this character, recognized as a public claim, furnished by a municipal corporation for the purposes of throwing up earth-works to protect the Army of the United States at the time the southern army was at Gettysburg, can be spoken of as a private claim?

Mr. WINDOM. I raised the point of order because I understood that this claim had not been fully audited. If the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] is right I must be mistaken, but I have understood from the beginning that it had not been audited. I know that it was rejected by the committee when it was proposed on the deficiency bill on the ground that its auditing was not complete. I do not remember to have seen any report of the Comptroller. I may be mistaken, and, as I say, if the Senator from Arkansas is right I am mistaken. If it is fully audited, I certainly would not raise the point; but if it is not, and is a claim which is yet to be passed upon by the Department, I think we ought not to pass it until it has gone through all the forms required by law.

Mr. WHYTE. To prevent any difficulty, those accounts are to be examined on every point.

Mr. BLAINE. The account is to be audited?

Mr. WHYTE. It is to be audited, and if not correct it is not to be paid.

Mr. WINDOM. We are not in the habit of appropriating money for claims to be audited, because until they are audited we do not know what they are.

Mr. WHYTE. But I hold in my hand the report of the Auditor who has audited this.

Mr. DORSEY. I think the Senator from Minnesota overlooks one fact. We had the statement of the Auditor that he had audited this claim; we had a letter from the Comptroller that he had passed upon it, but by the direction of the Secretary had suspended it until there was a deficiency appropriation to pay it. Now we come in here and say we will not appropriate for it because it is not audited. Then they go to the Treasury Department and there they say they will not pay it until it is appropriated for. That is the way the matter stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question to the Senate. Is the amendment on page 26, commencing at line 615 and continuing to line 625, in order under the rule of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under the thirtieth rule. I have another point of order if that is overruled. The point is made under the thirtieth rule, and let the question be submitted in that way.

Mr. WHYTE. How is the question put, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it is the habit of the Senate on such questions to submit whether it is in order under the rule relied upon in sustaining the point. The rules will permit several points of order; but the question was raised under the thirtieth rule, and, as suggested by the Senator from Vermont, the Chair will so state the question. Is the amendment in order under the thirtieth rule of the Senate?

Mr. WHYTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On that question the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. Before the roll is called, let me ask the honorable Senator from Vermont if I understand him to say that this would be a different question of order had this claim been presented here audited by the Department? I ask the Senator from Vermont whether he submitted the point of order that the claim would be different in its parliamentary relations if it had been fully audited?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not present the point; I only spoke of it.

Mr. BLAINE. I thought the honorable Senator made a distinction between a claim that was audited and a claim presented as this had been. This has passed through two ordeals, and it is provided that it shall pass through all the remaining ones of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not made any such point as that.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand that this is an appropriation authorized by two laws, one of 1861 authorizing the expense and one of 1874 authorizing the audit and payment of the expense. Then what is the effect of an appropriation? To carry out the existing laws; that is to say, to find money to execute them. What is the warrant for this payment? Two laws, one of 1861 and one of 1874. They are existing; they never have been repealed; they are operative to-day; but you have not the money to carry them out, and this money I understand is an appropriation to carry them into effect.

Mr. BLAINE. The reason why I made the point is that I am not quite satisfied with it. It seems to me to present a case of that nature, or claim, if you choose to call it a claim—

Mr. BAYARD. It is not a claim.

Mr. BLAINE. It seems to me to present that nature of right, which the honorable Senator from Maryland contends it is, which addresses itself very strongly to our sense of justice. If the general commanding the forces of the United States at Baltimore received an advance on his request from that city, for the general defense of the United States, it certainly presents a very strong case.

Mr. BAYARD. It was under a general law that the money was accepted.

Mr. BLAINE. Even if it was a special law, even if there was no law for it at the time, it presents one of those patriotic claims upon the consideration of Congress which ought not lightly to be laid aside.

Mr. WHYTE. I will state to the Senator from Maine—

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will pardon me. If simply under the laws of war as a commanding general General Schenck had authorized certain expenditures, then undoubtedly it would require a special act to pay for it, but that was not the case here. There was a law authorizing the commanding general to incur these expenses, and that law stands unrepealed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Please read that law.

Mr. BLAINE. What I want to get at is this: of course under this amendment, just as it is in the words from line 615 to line 625, it would be impossible to pay this money out of the Treasury until it was fully made known under the forms of law used by the accounting officers that that money was advanced by the city of Baltimore to Robert C. Schenck, the general commanding, for the use of the Government, and if that cannot be proved it ought not to be paid.

Mr. WHYTE. That is perfectly and conclusively proved.

Mr. BLAINE. Then it ought to be paid.

Mr. WHYTE. The proof of General Schenck is conclusive, as the other persons named as the committee of finance at the time, that the money was loaned upon an express promise that it should be paid by the United States.

Mr. BLAINE. Then it is a debt of honor.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to ask the Senator from Maine whether he is ready to vote to make appropriations in all cases for claims to be audited in future?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator need not put conundrums of that sort to me. I will put one to him. If this be a case, I repeat, where the general commanding the forces of the United States needed for the public exigencies a sum of money, and the city of Baltimore came forward and advanced it, we now say if they can prove that satisfactorily, through all the extreme tests of auditing and comptrolling that are required by law in the Treasury Department, then this rises to the dignity of a debt of honor, and I shall vote for it on that point.

Mr. WINDOM. I am entirely willing to pay this claim when it has gone through the form required by the law; but I say to the Senator that it has not been fully audited. The face of the amendment shows that it has not been audited fully. If the Senate proposes to adopt the principle that when a claim is presented we shall incorporate it in an appropriation bill to be paid as audited in the future, the Committee on Appropriations will take their instructions from the Senate, and they will find a very large number of those claims. The committee-room has been flooded with all kinds of claims, and for one I have felt it to be my duty to hold that until the auditing is complete we are not required to make the appropriation. I do not say one word against this claim. I believe that a large part, if not the whole, of it will be found to be an honest indebtedness, and when that indebtedness is ascertained according to the rules which we have prescribed for auditing accounts; and certainly the only objection I have to it is that it has not been fully audited.

Mr. HOWE. I hear it said that an act was passed in 1874 directing the payment of this very claim. Has the act been read?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No sir, it has not.

Mr. WHYTE. Not directing the payment of this specific claim, but directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to receive such claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Just read the clause you rely on.

Mr. WHYTE. It is as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the several accounting officers of the Treasury to continue to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of all claims under appropriations (the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provision of said section) that may be brought before them within a period of five years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now what is "said section?"

Mr. WHYTE. This balance of the "contingencies of fortifications" had been returned to the Treasury, and it was to open the door to enable parties having such claims to come in and the accounting officers to pass on them that that act was passed. The Third Auditor of the Treasury distinctly puts this claim upon the ground that it comes under the provisions of that law.

Mr. HOWE. But an act of Congress, I respectfully submit, directing the accounting officers to examine a claim is a very different thing from an act providing for the payment of a claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment in order under the thirtieth rule? The Secretary will call the roll.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 37, nays 14; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is held to be in order notwithstanding the thirtieth rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now make the point of order, Mr. President, as it seems to be proved that this is not a private claim, that then it is general legislation under the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule.

Mr. WHYTE. I answer that by saying that it is not legislation; it is carrying out a previous law. It is a mere appropriation to carry out a law already in existence.

Mr. BLAINE. It cannot be general legislation under the very comprehensive definition which the Senator from Vermont gave us a few moments ago. His definition excludes it from being general legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I deny the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE and others. Oh, no.

Mr. WHYTE. Very well; I withdraw the call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the amendment in order notwithstanding the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule? [Putting the question.] The yeas have it; and the amendment is declared to be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 631 to line 638, inclusive, in the following words:

For salary to Charles Bryant, late special Treasury agent of the seal islands in Alaska, from May 15 to June 30, 1877, inclusive, at the rate of $3,650 per annum, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1877, $471.29.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is hardly necessary to read the portions of the bill proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will merely indicate the lines, until otherwise ordered.

Mr. BECK. There will be amendments offered to some of the provisions that have been stricken out, but they can be reserved.

Mr. ANTHONY. In any amendment to be offered the Senator proposing it can indicate it when the amendment is reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out these words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 645 to line 652, inclusive, in the following words:

To pay John Sherman, jr., United States marshal for New Mexico, for services rendered and expenses incurred in paying per diem witnesses, bailiffs, and other similar and necessary expenses in the investigation of the Una de Gato land grant in the Territory of New Mexico, under authority given by the act of July 22, 1854, §351.93.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 652, to strike out the following clause:

To pay B. R. Lewis and J. J. Coffee the balances due them as marshal and clerk respectively at the consulate-general at Shanghai, China, during their absence attending on subpoenas as witnesses before a committee of the House of Representatives, the sum of $2,203.69, to be available at once; and said Lewis and Coffee shall receive no allowance for witness fees and traveling expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 660, to strike out the following clause:

To reimburse expenses incurred and paid by C. H. Lord, United States depositary at Tucson, Arizona, under Treasury Department instructions, $334.87.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 671, to strike out the following clause:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $150,000 made by the act of June 14, 1878, to refund and pay back taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal revenue laws, is hereby continued and made available for the payment of all claims to which the appropriation is applicable, which are not payable from the permanent annual appropriations provided for in section 3629 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 681, to insert:

That the public notice to be given for called bonds required by the acts authorizing the refunding of the public debt shall hereafter be not less than ten days nor more than three months, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the greatest possible diffidence, I humbly submit the point of order that under the first clause of Rule 29 this is general legislation on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope my colleague will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no, it will be decided to be in order; do not worry.

Mr. BLAINE. It is legislation; there is no doubt of that.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that it is very desirable to give the Secretary of the Treasury an opportunity to negotiate the loans that will become redeemable and fundable after the 5.20 bonds are all refunded at a shorter date than three months.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask unanimous consent that the rule be waived so far as this proposition is concerned. The Secretary of the Treasury recommends it; it seems to be important.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the change this makes, if the chairman of the Committee on Finance will state?

Mr. MORRILL. It allows the Secretary to refund the public debt with no more than ten days' notice, if he likes; it makes it optional.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the present provision?

Mr. MORRILL. Three months.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can you point it out to us? While my colleague is finding it, I should like to say of this amendment that if it is such an important affair it is very strange the Committee on Finance should not have discovered it until the last three days of the session and had it stuck in here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent to the consideration of the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will waive the point of order for the moment. I think, though, I will hold on until we see what the present law is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the request is for unanimous consent that the amendment be considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not give unanimous consent, so far as I am concerned, at the present moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the substance of the present law is that ninety days' notice must be given.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I should like is to hear it read. The amendment can be passed by for the time being like the Stage Harbor light, and we can go on with something else, by unanimous consent, while we look up the law.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that it be passed over in order that the Senator from Vermont may refer to the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Secretary proposed this amendment and sent it to the committee, and therefore it is recommended by the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is passed over by unanimous consent.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was read, being to strike out lines 687, 688, and 689, in the following words:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for the maintenance of revenue steamers on the coast of Alaska, $20,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For the protection of the interests of the Government on the seal islands, the sea-otter hunting-grounds, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 720, after the word "Dakota," to insert "Montana, Idaho," and in line 721, after the word "Territory," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "fifty" before "thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Construction, maintenance, and repair of military telegraph lines: For the construction and continuing the construction, maintenance, and use of military telegraph lines on the Indian and Mexican frontiers and in the Northwest, for the connection of military posts and stations and for the better protection of immigration and the frontier settlements from depredations, especially in the State of Texas and the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Dakota, Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, and the Indian Territory, $50,000, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 723, to insert:

For extension of the military telegraph lines from Fort Elliot westward, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 725, to insert:

For the extension of the military telegraph lines from Fort Elliott, Texas, westward, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senate can now go back to the amendment on page 29, so far as I am concerned. Section 3679 does appear to provide that on the calling of the 5-20 6 per cent. bonds, the interest shall cease after three months from the date of the call, and they apparently want to have it cease at a less time.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that a reason for the discretion which this amendment gives?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot say that it is, and it is doubtful whether the amendment covers the point which is desired. Section 3697 reads in this way, and I should like the attention of Senators to it, for that is what they want to get at—

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, with any coin in the Treasury which he may lawfully apply to such purpose, or which may be derived from the sale of any of the bonds which he may be authorized to dispose of for that purpose, to pay at par and cancel any 6 per cent. bonds of the United States of the kind known as 5-20 bonds, which have become or shall hereafter become redeemable by the terms of their issue. But the particular bonds so to be paid and canceled shall in all cases be indicated and specified by class, date, and number, in the order of their numbers and issue, beginning with the first numbered and issued, in a public notice to be given by the Secretary of the Treasury, and, in three months after the date of such public notice, the interest on the bonds so selected and advertised to be paid shall cease.

Withdrawing the point of order for the moment, I wish to call attention to the question if this amendment will effectuate what is desired. The Revised Statutes do not require any length of notice in particular, but the interest terminates only after three months after the date of the notice. This amendment provides—

That the public notice to be given for called bonds required by the acts authorizing the refunding of the public debt shall hereafter be not less than ten days nor more than three months, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is not by any means clear that that is going to stop their interest before three months.

Mr. CONKLING. Apart from the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont, I should like to inquire why this discretion should be deposited with any officer to say that one bond shall continue to bear interest for three months after the call and another for only ten days. If the proposition were to fix a certain time alike for all and to stop the interest on the lapse of that time I could understand it; but even if this amendment were effectual, as it seems to me it is not, to alter the statute which has been read, I should fail to discover why it is right to deposit in any officer, high or low, the right, upon his mere say-so, to give one set of men three months' interest on a 6 per cent. bond and another set of men ten days' interest. I do not believe that the facility of administration can even be pleaded as an excuse for that.

Mr. MORRILL. I may say that I never saw the phraseology of this provision until it was introduced into this bill. All I know in relation to the subject is that within a short time I heard the Secretary say that if he had that right he could make probably a saving to the Government of interest by having the option to make it.

Mr. BLAINE. The language was sent from the Treasury Department, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. The point of order has not been withdrawn, as I understand.

Mr. MORRILL. It has.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I renew it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest that the point of order be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question:

Are the lines beginning at 682 and ending at 686 in order, notwithstanding the first clause of the twenty-ninth rule?

Mr. MORRILL. I will ask permission to allow this amendment to be passed over for action at some later stage in the consideration of the bill, after I can have a little conference about the phraseology.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It can be submitted to the Senate to suit one way or the other. Let us go on with the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. It will not take any time. If we cannot agree upon any phraseology that will suit, it may go out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the chairman of the Finance Committee wishes it, I have nothing to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to passing over the amendment? The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 751, to insert:

For completing the development of the water-power at the Rock Island arsenal, in pursuance of contracts made with the Moline Water-Power Company, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 757, to insert:

For continuing boring the artesian well at Benicia arsenal, Benicia, California; or, if artesian water is procured, for putting down a permanent iron pipe and turbine wheel, to be run by a flow of water, to pump up water to reservoir, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 776 the following clause:

For repairs of smaller arsenals, and to meet such unforeseen expenditures at arsenals as accident or other contingencies during the year may render necessary, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 809, to insert:

For paving with asphaltum the roadway in front of the Executive Mansion, $8,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 812, to insert:

For filling, leveling, and improving the park in front of the Treasury and State Departments and the Executive Mansion, comprehended between Fifteenth and Seventeenth streets, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 821, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And so much as may be necessary to re-cover the roof, not exceeding $2,000, is hereby made available immediately.

So as to read:

Executive Mansion:

For care of and repairs, refurnishing, and fuel for the Executive Mansion, and care of and necessary repair to the greenhouses, and fuel for the same, and re-covering the roof of the mansion with tin, $25,000; and so much as may be necessary to re-cover the roof, not exceeding $2,000, is hereby made available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause of the bill, as follows:

Lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds: For gas, pay of lamplighters, gas-fitters, plumbers, lamps, lamp-posts, matches, and repairs of all kinds; lamps for Anacostia bridge; fuel for office, for the watchmen's lodges, and for the greenhouses in the nursery, $15,000: Provided, That no more than $25 shall be paid per lamp for gas under any expenditure provided for in this bill; and in case a contract cannot be made at that rate, the engineer in charge is hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. BLAINE. That is a remarkable piece of legislation just there.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator allow me to explain it?

Mr. BLAINE. I refer to the provisions in regard to gas. What is meant by that?

Mr. DORSEY. That was the provision last year.

Mr. BLAINE. At the same rate?

Mr. DORSEY. At the same rate and in the same words.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There has been no change.

Mr. DORSEY. There has been no change whatever.

Mr. BLAINE. I thought the Senator from Vermont just informed me that there was a difference.

Mr. DORSEY. The amendment alluded to by the Senator from Vermont is a different department, in another part of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is no change.

Mr. DORSEY. There is no change in the rate by this bill from the amount of last year.

Mr. BLAINE. What I am inquiring is, suppose they do not come to this agreement, what is the illuminating material with which they are to light this city? That is a question which would naturally come up for answer. Suppose they do not come to an agreement. You authorize the commissioners to "substitute other illuminating material." What are they to do? Are they to hang kerosene lamps over the city at night? It is a mere brutum fulmen. It cannot have any meaning at all, and I do not like to vote for a pointless thing like that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. This provision appears to be acceptable all around.

Mr. BLAINE. Can the Senator give any good explanation of it? I should like to ask the honorable Senator from West Virginia what it does mean? Suppose they do not come to an understanding to take $25 per lamp for gas, and I have not the remotest idea whether it ought to be $25 or $75, the bill provides that unless they come to an agreement the commissioners are authorized to use "other illuminating material." Now what?

Mr. DORSEY. I do not know that the point made by the Senator has much weight, when the fact is known that they have come to an agreement more than a year ago.

Mr. BLAINE. Then why repeat if it has been effected already?

Mr. DORSEY. The contract now exists with the gas company to furnish gas at this price. Last year this provision was inserted in the appropriation bill and I suppose it only covered the life of that bill, and I think that this provision simply extends it for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Arkansas is himself chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia and knows more about this subject than I do. We have a gas-lamp light and what is the "other illuminating material" we are to use in case that fails?

Mr. DORSEY. I did not prepare this clause. It came from another body to this, and it was inserted last year very much against my judgment. I do not know of any other illuminating material unless they should use coal-oil.

Mr. BLAINE. That would be a handy thing to hang around on the lamp-posts, there being a thousand or more of them. I think I shall move, for the consistency of the thing, in the line of good sense, to strike this clause out before the bill is passed to a third reading.

Mr. DORSEY. When the Senator makes that motion I will vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 840, before the word "War," to insert "building for State;" so as to make the clause read:

Repair of water-pipes and fire-plugs: For repairing and extending water pipes, purchase of apparatus to clean them, and for cleaning the springs and repairing and renewing the pipes of the same that supply the Capitol, the Executive Mansion, and the building for State, War, and Navy Departments, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars" in line 844, to insert:

And the engineer in charge of public buildings and grounds is hereby authorized to sell any condemned material or lines not needed by the Departments, and cover the proceeds into the Treasury.

So as to read:

Telegraph to connect the Capitol with the Departments and the Government Printing Office: For repair and care of the same, $1,000; and the engineer in charge of public buildings and grounds is hereby authorized to sell any condemned material or lines not needed by the Departments, and cover the proceeds into the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 848, after the word "Department," to strike out "east wing;" and in line 851, after the word "building," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Building for State, War, and Navy Departments: To complete the east wing and its approaches, and for continuation of construction of the north wing of the building, $565,000, of which sum $65,000, shall be immediately available.

Mr. DORSEY. In line 852 the committee intended to strike out the word "of" and also the words "sum sixty-five thousand dollars," so as to read:

Fifty hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars, which shall be immediately available.

The engineer in charge of the public buildings and grounds gave as a reason why the amendment I offer should be made that all moneys appropriated for the construction of public buildings other than this simple item are made immediately available by reason of the law, and this item always before had been made available from the passage of the bill. He thought the public interests would be greatly served by inserting such an amendment as I have proposed.

Mr. BLAINE. You propose to say it shall be immediately available?

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, I move that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That does not accord exactly with my recollection, but I do not think it makes any difference. I think it answers the purpose as it is. However, it makes no difference, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. DORSEY. I am sure the Senator will remember that Colonel Casey, who has charge of this building, stated—

Mr. KERNAN. Why is more than $65,000 required to be made available at once?

Mr. DORSEY. It has always been made immediately available on the passage of the bill until this year. The money appropriated for public buildings everywhere is made available when appropriated. The $65,000 is for the east wing, for furnishing it and for removing the War and Navy Departments into that wing, and the balance of the appropriation is for the continuation of the construction. By some error only $65,000 was made available, when all of it should be made available at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 97, to insert :

For salary for one person, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, to assist in editing and compiling for publication the official records of the rebellion, $2,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to add, after the word "dollars," "to be available immediately," so that the printing may go on without waiting until the 30th of June.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 891, to insert :

For publishing 2,000 copies of eight volumes, comprising the official records of the first year of the war of the rebellion, $15,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I move the same amendment at the end of the word "dollars," in line 894, to add, "to be available immediately."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BECK, (at one o'clock and five minutes a. m.) I believe I shall move that the Senate do now adjourn to meet to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, and that this bill shall be in order first after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope not. We can go on a couple of hours, I think, with great advantage.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BECK. Very well. I left the committee-room about half past one o'clock this morning. We shall lose more time in my judgment by staying up an hour or two now and meeting at eleven o'clock to-morrow, tired and weary, than by going to our homes now and meeting at ten o'clock in the morning and taking up this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope we may go on a while longer and see how we progress. I think if we do not finish this bill before we adjourn to-night it is very doubtful whether we shall get through with the appropriation bills in time.

Mr. BECK. I am willing to go on, but I think we should save time if we were to adjourn now and meet to-morrow at ten o'clock, and we should do more business by taking up this bill then immediately after the reading of the Journal than by sitting up to-night and coming here to-morrow tired and worn out.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it very doubtful whether we can get through unless we sit all night to-night and to-morrow night also.

Mr. BECK. By doing as I suggest we could possibly be ready to proceed with the legislative bill to-morrow afternoon at three or four o'clock, having the sundry civil out of the way by that time.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion for a while at least.

Mr. BECK. I will withdraw the motion for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 899, after the word "postage-stamps," to insert "for the Executive Departments;" in line 901, after the word "countries," to strike out "one" and insert "ten;" and in line 902, after the word "dollars," to insert "(to be available immediately;" so as to make the clause read :

For official postage-stamps for the Executive Departments, as required under postal union, to prepay postage on matter addressed to postal-union countries, $10,000, to be available immediately.

Mr. EATON. That is a very large increase, from one thousand to ten thousand dollars. I should like a little explanation of that.

Mr. WINDOM. It is upon the recommendation of the various heads of Departments, and probably is not nearly as much as will be necessary. It takes no money out of the Treasury; it simply takes money out of one pocket and puts it in another. Probably more will be required than is named in the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. It is simply for official postage-stamps.

Mr. EATON. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill and read the following clause :

For printing and binding the catalogue of the library of the Surgeon General's Office, $20,000.

Mr. WITHERS. There is an amendment that ought to come in there. It ought to read, "for printing and binding the first and second volumes of the catalogue." I have a letter from the Surgeon-General stating that only those two volumes are published, and this amount is required for printing and binding the first and second volumes. I move to insert on page 40, line 966, after the word "the," the words "first and second volumes of the;" so as to read :

For printing and binding the first and second volumes of the catalogue of the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Upon that point I think the Surgeon-General recommends also that that be made available immediately. I move to add that, if there be no objection.

Mr. WITHERS. There will be no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the words "to be made available immediately" will be inserted. The Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 979, after the words "provided that," to strike out the words :

No arrears of pensions shall be allowed or paid to any pensioner being a disabled soldier or sailor for the time during which he has been supported in the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and that.

So as to read :

Provided, That the estimates hereafter submitted for the support of the National Home shall be made in detail, specifying the several items of expenditure, and separating the cost of food and other supplies in the form usually adopted for the Army; and that this specification be made for each soldier's home separately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 987, to insert :

That Benjamin F. Butler of Massachusetts, Frederick Smyth of New Hampshire, and Horace B. Strait of Minnesota, be, and they are hereby, appointed managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, to fill vacancies occasioned by the expiration of the terms of office of Benjamin F. Butler of Massachusetts, Frederick Smyth of New Hampshire, and Thomas O. Osborn of Illinois.

Mr. EATON. I propose to amend the amendment by striking out the names of "Frederick Smyth of New Hampshire" and "Horace B. Strait of Minnesota" and inserting "James Shields of Missouri" and "John M. Palmer of Illinois;" so as to read :

That Benjamin F. Butler of Massachusetts, James Shields of Missouri, and John M. Palmer of Illinois, be, and they are hereby, appointed managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire if it would be in order at this time to move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut by substituting for the name of John M. Palmer, of Illinois, the name of Darius N. Couch, of Connecticut?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such an amendment would not be in order.

Mr. EATON. It would be an amendment in the third degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts would not be in order.

Mr. WINDOM. Frederick Smyth, of New Hampshire, is at present one of the board of managers, and the object is simply to extend his term. I do not know of any reason why he should be turned out of office or why we should refuse to select him and select another man. The place filled by Horace B. Strait, of Minnesota, was occupied by Thomas O. Osborn, of Illinois, who, I think, has been sent to some foreign mission. These names were selected by the managers and brought to the committee of the Senate, and were not selected by the Committee on Appropriations. I do not believe they can be improved.

Mr. ROLLINS. I should like to inquire what objection the Senator from Connecticut finds to Frederick Smyth, of New Hampshire? He is a very worthy man, and is now a member of this board. I see no reason why he should be displaced.

Mr. EATON. The only objection I have that I care to state is that I prefer somebody else, and therefore I named the other man.

Mr. ROLLINS. Mr. Smyth is a very worthy man.

Mr. KERNAN. I think this matter ought to be somewhat non-partisan. Soldiers of all political proclivities go there, and there are twelve of these managers. We are asked to put these three in. The amendment is largely partisan as the names are proposed by the committee. I think in a thing of this kind there should be some of each party, but here the committee recommend all of one party.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not know what the Senator could desire more partisan than the first named. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. How many, if I may ask the Senator from New York, constitute the board?

Mr. KERNAN. Twelve, I am informed, and I have the names here furnished by a man who said he knew.

Mr. BLAINE. I noticed last year that when there were two vacancies to be filled two non-partisan democrats were put in.

Mr. KERNAN. There are two democrats on the board now. I think there should be two more on the board to make it non-partisan at all.

Mr. BLAINE. I suppose, of course, the next Congress will put in some republicans.

Mr. KERNAN. I certainly will never vote to appoint them all of one party. I would certainly give the minority as many as four out of twelve in a board of this kind.

Mr. ALLISON. Who are the present members?

Mr. KERNAN. The present board, I understand, consists of the President of the United States, the Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary of War, Mr. Harris of Ohio, Mr. Cutler of Pennsylvania, General Martindale of New York, Mr. Martin of Kansas, Judge Bond of Maryland, Dr. Wolcott of Wisconsin, General Butler of Massachusetts, General Osborn of Illinois, and Governor Smyth of New Hampshire. The object I desire is to put two in who are not very strong partisans.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator will observe that three of those he has named are ex officio members of the board. The President, the Secretary of War, and the Vice-President, whoever those gentlemen happen to be, are members of the board. Nobody puts them in.

Mr. KERNAN. Certainly, but there are nine others, and I think we might have three.

Mr. BLAINE. Last year two democrats were put in.

Mr. KERNAN. And we thought we could get two in this year, but you object to it.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the thing is growing at a pretty rapid rate, and considering the character and complexion of the next Congress we need not hurry matters.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is an old saying that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand that the other members of the board are fairly divided between the parties. Last year there were two democrats elected, I think, and one republican. So far as the name of Mr. STRAIT is concerned, I can assure the Senator that his sympathies with the soldiers from his own experience, with his creditable service in the Army, would prevent anything like partiality upon his part. The Senator need not be afraid to trust him in an institution of this kind where the interests of soldiers are concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Chair state the question again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the name of Frederick Smyth, of New Hampshire, and Horace B. Strait, of Minnesota, and inserting the names of James Shields, of Missouri, and John M. Palmer, of Illinois.

Mr. PLUMB. Is that divisible?

Mr. BLAINE. No; it is not divisible.

Mr. CONKLING. To strike out and insert is not divisible under the rule.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to take a vote on the substitution of the name of General Shields for that of Mr. Smyth separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is it not in order to move to strike out one name?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is; but the Senator from Kansas does not propose that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then he may accomplish his object in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no such motion pending before the Senate, and the Chair cannot rule upon the motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Of course I am not questioning the ruling of the Chair. I thought the Senator from Kansas wanted a division, and that is the reason why I rose in his behalf.

Mr. PLUMB. I did desire that the vote might be taken separately, as I stated. I understood the Chair to overrule me and to say that the matter could not be submitted in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that in the present condition of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut the motion of the Senator from Kansas is not in order, and the question cannot be divided.

Mr. EATON. In order to gratify my friends I will change my amendment. I move to strike out the name of Horace B. Strait, of Minnesota, and insert the name of James Shields, of Missouri, and then I will try it on the other one afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut as modified by him.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question, which perhaps I ought to be able to answer myself, but which I am not, not being familiar with the law creating this office. I should like to have some Senator answer me whether this is a civil office under the United States? The amendment reported by the committee speaks of these gentlemen as persons appointed to fill vacancies occasioned by the expiration of the terms of office. Perhaps the Senator from Connecticut, who seems to be familiar with the general subject, will tell us.

Mr. EATON. I certainly have not examined the question in relation to that matter. My own impression is that it is a civil, and not a military office. That is my impression.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Minnesota, who reported the bill, perhaps can answer that question.

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot answer it.

Mr. HOAR. The Constitution says:

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether the first-named gentleman in the amendment of the committee is not also a Representative from his State, and whether he was not at the time the law was made?

Mr. HOAR. I did not raise any question upon any individual, and did not propose to discuss any individual. I asked the question simply for general information. I do not know that either of these gentlemen is re-elected.

Mr. VOORHEES. Not only the first-mentioned gentleman is at this time but has been all the time a member of the House, and the last name mentioned, Mr. STRAIT, of Minnesota, I am told is also a member of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 23, noes 20.

Mr. McMILLAN and Mr. BLAINE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Chair have the amendment stated clearly again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to strike out, in lines 989 and 990, the name of "Horace B. Strait," of Minnesota, and insert "James Shields, of Missouri."

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Strait entered the Army from Minnesota and served faithfully during the whole war; he acquitted himself most creditably, and he will discharge the duties of this position as faithfully and efficiently as any other man who can be named. When his name is presented to the Senate in this way it does not seem to me to be the proper thing to strike out that name and insert another. When there can be no fault found with him in regard to his capacity or his integrity, or his sympathy with the soldiers in the institution over which he will have charge, to insert a name that has not been presented to the Senate at all from the committee, seems to me to be an unfair way to treat the person named.

Mr. EATON. I am a little tired, I confess, whenever a proposition is made here to have the soldier thrown in my teeth; and what does it amount to in this case? My friend from Minnesota says that one gentleman served during the war. Did not the other serve during the war, and did he not serve during the Mexican war also? Why throw this thing in here?

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. EATON. I will allow the Senator, of course.

Mr. McMILLAN. I said nothing in regard to the services of General Shields. I said the name of Major Strait had been presented to the Senate, and there was no cause whatever in presenting him here why it may be changed. The only reason is to insert the name of another person that the Senator prefers without any cause.

Mr. EATON. With all due deference to my honorable friend from Minnesota, that is enough. Standing here as I do his peer, his equal, I have a right to move to insert one man's name in the place of another, and when I insert the name of a gallant soldier of two wars, do not talk to me that A B has been in service in one war!

Mr. McMILLAN. I have not denied the right of the Senator to make the motion. I only urged my position as an answer to that motion why it should not be carried.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this and all similar questions with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—29.
Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Barnum,	Dennis,	Kernan,	Voorhees,
Bayard,	Eaton,	Lamar,	Wallace,
Beck,	Garland,	McDonald,	Whyte,
Butler,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Withers.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Maxey,
Coke,	Hereford,	Merrimon,
Davis of Illinois,	Hill,	Morgan,
NAYS—29.
Allison,	Chandler,	Howe,	Paddock,
Anthony,	Conkling,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Booth,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Wadleigh,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Matthews,	Windom.
Burnside,	Ferry,	Mitchell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Morrill,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hoar,	Oglesby,
ABSENT—18.
Chaffee,	Johnston,	Randolph,	Shields,
Conover,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,	Spencer,
Eustis,	McCreery,	Sargent,	Thurman.
Grover,	Patterson,	Saunders,
Ingalls,	Plumb,	Sharon,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EATON. I move now to strike out the name of Frederick Smyth, of New Hampshire, and insert the name of John M. Palmer, of Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. DORSEY called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SHIELDS, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I was paired on political questions with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] I do not wish intentionally to violate my pair. If I could vote, I would vote "yea," and I suppose the Senator from Nevada would vote "nay" if he were here. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. MCCREERY.] I was requested to announce the pair.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, (after having voted in the negative.) I am just reminded that I am, on political questions, paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM.] I desire to withdraw the vote I just gave.

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague [Mr. GROVER] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. PATTERSON.]

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bailey,	Davis of Illinois,	Hereford,	Merrimon,
Barnum,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Morgan,
Bayard,	Dennis,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Eaton,	Kernan,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Garland,	Lamar,	Wallace,
Cockrell,	Gordon,	McDonald,	Whyte,
Coke,	Harris,	Maxey,	Withers.

NAYS—23.

Allison,	Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	Mitchell,
Anthony,	Chandler,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Blaine,	Conkling,	Howe,	Paddock,
Booth,	Conover,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Bruce,	Dorsey,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Burnside,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Wadleigh,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Matthews,	Windom.

ABSENT—20.

Chaffee,	Johnston,	Patterson,	Saunders,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,	Sharon,
Eustis,	McCreery,	Randolph,	Shields,
Grover,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Spencer,
Ingalls,	Oglesby,	Sargent,	Thurman.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON, (at one o'clock and forty-five minutes a. m.) I move that the Senate do now adjourn. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. McDONALD. I ask the Senator to modify the motion so as to take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, no; nobody can get here at ten o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina modify his motion?

Mr. BLAINE. Let us take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. MERRIMON. I move to adjourn; which would give us until eleven o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 21, noes 35.

Mr. BOOTH. I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia. Let us go on a while longer.

Mr. BOOTH. It is nearly two o'clock now, and if we expect to do anything to-morrow we should adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I suppose I have no right to say a word. The motion is not debatable, I understand, but I ask consent to make a brief statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable; but if there be no objection the statement of the Senator will be heard.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask consent to say that it is barely possible to get through with the utmost effort that the Senate can make. I am satisfied if we adjourn now before this bill is completed we cannot get through; but I submit that to the Senate. I take the responsibility from my own shoulders if a recess is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California, to take a recess until ten o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 997, to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell or lease, in his discretion, to the Port Huron and Northwestern Railway Company a strip of land, not exceeding one hundred feet in width, along the westerly line of the Fort Gratiot military reserve, to the Grand Trunk Railroad intersection thereof; thence southeasterly to the southeast corner of the reserve; thence southeasterly through that portion of the reserve lying south of Sedgwick street and north of Pine Grove Park and south of said park and north of Lincoln avenue, together with all the area bounded by Stone street, Thomas street, and the grounds of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. And the city of Port Huron is authorized to grant said railway company the right of way through the easterly portion of that part of the military reserve granted to said city for use as a park, and known and described as Pine Grove Park.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that this is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont makes the point of order that this amendment proposes general legislation to an appropriation bill.

Mr. FERRY. I cannot see how that point of order can be well taken. The amendment allows the Secretary of War to dispose of the reserve. As I understand, the War Department desire it and have so recommended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. FERRY. It is putting money into the Treasury instead of taking it out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not believe it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate. Is the amendment proposed by the committee in order?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 30, noes 12.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERRY. As the question is submitted to the Senate, I desire to say that the War Department have already sold, in three cases, a portion of this reserve. All that is asked for here is the right of way through a portion of this land. The War Department have stipulated that a certain portion, between certain streets described here, shall also be purchased by this railway company. The War Department, through its officer, General Poe, the engineer who has had this in charge, recommends not only the sale of this but of all the reserve; and as I said before, it is placing money in the Treasury instead of taking it out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That clearly makes it in order, as the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] suggests. It cannot be general legislation if it is putting money into the Treasury, because we all know that all general legislation is to plunder the Treasury and take money out of it! It is a very strong argument, and I commend the Senator for putting it in so forcibly!

Here is an amendment which proposes, without the slightest relevancy to this bill whatever, to dispose of a part of the property of the United States to certain specially favored railway companies, &c., in certain particular ways that are satisfactory to the Senator from Michigan, and therefore it cannot be legislation on an appropriation bill! Of course it is nothing to me, Mr. President, but I should like to have the Senate vote upon it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we ought to decide these questions of order according to parliamentary law and not according to our judgment of the expediency of a particular amendment. I have no doubt from what the Senator from Michigan says that this is a measure that ought to pass, but it has no right on this bill, and we stultify ourselves if we vote to put on everything we like as being in order and to reject everything we dislike as being out of order.

Mr. FERRY. The simple proposition is left to the discretion of the War Department either to sell or lease a part of the reserve, which the War Department desires to sell. Where the Department has already sold some two or three hundred acres, and is desirous of selling the remainder, it seems to me there can be no opposition to it.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a reason for voting for it, but that does not make it in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the point of order raised by the Senator from Vermont that the amendment is not in order under the first clause of Rule 29, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Barnum,	Conover,	Kellogg,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Teller,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Burnside,	Garland,	Oglesby,	Whyte,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is decided not to be in order by the Senate. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1013, to insert:

For the completion of the military road from Alamosa, Colorado, to Pagosa Springs, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1015, to insert:

For repairing the military road from Ojo Caliente, New Mexico, to Pagosa Springs, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1017, to insert:

That the sum of $20,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the improvement and repair of the military wagon-road running from Scottsburg to Camp Stewart, in the State of Oregon; said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 1024, to insert:

For the purpose of constructing the necessary buildings, under direction of the Secretary of War, for headquarters of the Department of Dakota, at the military post of Fort Snelling, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates of General Charles H. Tompkins, deputy quartermaster-general of the United States Army, chief quartermaster of the Department of Dakota, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1032, to insert:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as compensation was withheld from, under the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, and which have since been found entitled to compensation by judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with such judgment, to be paid as other Army transportation, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And the Army transportation hereafter performed by said companies shall be adjusted and paid in the same manner.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that the last clause of this amendment in the words "and the Army transportation hereafter performed by said companies shall be adjusted and paid in the same manner," is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont makes the point of order which has been stated by him, that the portion of the amendment in lines 1043 and 1044 is general legislation, and therefore in contravention of the first clause of Rule 29.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Vermont to the facts in this case. In 1874 and 1875, in making the appropriation for Army transportation, it was enacted that land-grant railroads should not receive compensation, but that they might go to the Court of Claims. Under the provisions of that act these railroad companies did go to the Court of Claims, and afterward to the Supreme Court of the United States upon appeal, and rather the Government took the cases there by appeal, and the Supreme Court decided that the railroad companies were entitled to compensation.

I submit to the Senator from Vermont and to the Senate that inasmuch as this restrictive legislation was originally enacted in an appropriation bill, and as the question there raised has since been decided in favor of the railroad companies, it is not improper that in an appropriation bill that restriction should be removed, it having been decided to be invalid by reason of a judgment of the Supreme Court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have not undertaken to prevent the removal of a restriction by my point of order, but I have undertaken to prevent our pledging ourselves in the future, right in the face of the act of 1878, that we provided in respect of a sinking fund, that this money shall go out of the Treasury, when the act of 1878 requires it to be kept and applied to a sinking fund. I make the point of order in order to save the United States from reversing the act of 1878.

Mr. PLUMB. If the Senator will excuse me, I think he will find, if he will observe the facts, that the act of 1878 does not apply to these roads at all. I have here a letter of the Secretary of War of the date of the 24th of February, 1879, in which he names specifically the railroads to which this proposed legislation applies, and to which the legislation of 1874 and 1875 applied, and that expressly excludes the Pacific railroads. There is no railroad to which any provision of the sinking-fund act applies which is at all affected by this proposed legislation or which was at all affected by the legislation of 1874 and 1875. It is an entirely different class of railroads. For the edification, or information rather, of the Senator from Vermont, I will show him the letter of the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will not convince me of a fact that I know myself.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say to the Senator further that this amendment refers to railroads which have had their status fixed and defined by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and those railroads are not at all of the class named or specified in the act of 1878 providing for a sinking fund. They are not a class of railroads which have any obligations of any kind or description whatever to the Government, except that in the act granting lands to them for the purpose of aiding in the building of the railroads the right of the Government was reserved to use the track, nothing more and nothing less. There is no bonded obligation, there is no obligation of any kind or description. As the Supreme Court has decided in these cases, the Government simply has a right to use the track free of cost, but in case it does not choose to use the track it is entitled to a fair deduction on the goods that it has transported over that line in the cars and by means of the engines and employes of the railroad companies for the use of the track of the railroad companies in transporting goods in that way.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I move to strike out of this amendment—

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us settle the point of order first.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to amend the last clause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The last clause is the one upon which I have raised the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only wish to say that I will reply to my honorable friend from Kansas on the subject of the application of this amendment when we come to it, and I hope I shall be able to show, or I hope I shall not, if it suits him better, to get at the fact that he is greatly mistaken in what this amendment covers. But my simple point now is that at the end of this amendment is a clause which does not provide for an appropriation of money to carry out what the present obligations of the Government are. This provision is added at the bottom:

And the Army transportation hereafter performed by said companies—

And that is every company which has received a land grant and from which compensation has been withheld, which under these acts are all the companies—shall be adjusted and paid in the same manner.

I submit, without any argument, that if it is not general legislation then the Senate will so decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in pursuance of the vote of the Senate just had upon a prior amendment, will decide that this portion of the amendment is not in order. From that decision an appeal can be taken if necessary, when the question of order will be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. DORSEY. Why not submit it first to the Senate?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Do not submit it to the Senate. Let the Chair decide it.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Chair has decided it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided it subject to an appeal to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out from the word "1875" in line 1037 down to and including the words "United States" in line 1039, and then I desire to strike out after the word "with" in line 1040 the word "such"—I will see that the Clerk gets it properly—and strike out "judgment" and insert "judgments," and after "judgments" insert the words "of the Supreme Court in cases decided under said acts."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clause will be reported as it will read if amended as the Senator from Iowa proposes.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as compensation was withheld from, under the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with judgments of the Supreme Court in cases decided under said acts, to be paid as other Army transportation, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And the Army transportation hereafter performed by said companies shall be adjusted and paid in the same manner.

Mr. ALLISON. The object of this amendment, Mr. President, is to place all these land-grant roads upon a par with each other. The Supreme Court, as I understand it, has decided in several cases that the Government is only entitled to deduct one-third of the amount of compensation. I have not the details before me, but the Secretary of War reported to the Committee on Appropriations that there is now due to these land-grant roads $980,000 under the decision of the Supreme Court. The Quartermaster-General recommends in strong terms that this sum be paid to the land-grant roads. I find the amendment of the committee provides for only $300,000. Of course that will only pay one or two or perhaps three of these roads, I do not know what roads, but if we are to make appropriations for these land-grant railroads we ought to make appropriations for all of them. They all stand precisely upon the same footing and ought to be treated by any act that we pass here exactly alike.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he means those that simply received grants of lands and nothing else.

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

Mr. McDONALD. And not lands and subsidy bonds both?

Mr. ALLISON. I speak only of land-grant roads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A subsidy road is a land-grant road.

Mr. ALLISON. I am quite willing to put in words to exclude the roads the Senator from Vermont refers to.

Mr. McDONALD. I suggest to add at the close of the amendment as it now stands under the ruling of the presiding officer:

But this section shall not apply to any railroad company to which bonds were issued by the United States to aid in the construction of their road.

Mr. ALLISON. That is wise. There is no objection to that. I think the Senator from Kansas will have no objection to the suggestion I make that all these railways shall be treated alike. They have all transported troops and munitions of war; they have all transported mails. The acts of 1874 and 1875 prohibited the payment of any sum to them on account of these services. Now, if we are to pay one of them, I think we ought to pay all of them.

Mr. PLUMB. I not only have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, but I think it is within his recollection that the amendment which I introduced contemplated the payment of all the indebtedness which the Government to-day owes to all these railroads. It intended also to exclude the class of railroads which are in the mind of the Senator from Vermont, to wit, the various Pacific railroads. No terms of exclusion can be made too strong for me on that point, because no such railroads were designed to be embraced within the purview of this amendment. So far as the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is concerned I think it is entirely fair and proper, but for reason which I indicated the committee saw fit to narrow the amendment and to make it apply to a smaller class of railroads, to wit, to a class of railroads that have been sufficiently diligent to bring their suits in the Court of Claims and obtain an affirmative judgment of the Supreme Court, which of course I was not in a position to accept. But the fact, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, as is evidenced by the letter of the Secretary of War and from the Quartermaster-General, and from the statements of the accounting officers of the Treasury, is that to-day the United States owes actually upon the basis established by the decision of the Supreme Court nearly a million dollars to these roads.

The Quartermaster-General states further that the operations of his Department are embarrassed by the fact that the Government has made no provision for paying this sum, and states further that for years it has been his practice wherever he could to divert the transportation of Army material and supplies over these roads in order to save to the Government this deduction to which it is entitled. It is within the knowledge of many Senators on this floor that some of these railroad companies by reason of the Government having withheld these payments have refused to carry Government supplies unless the Government should pay in advance, because no provision had been made for adjusting these accounts as other Army transportation accounts are adjusted, and consequently they could not get any pay.

Mr. DORSEY. There are a good many hardships imposed upon these railroad companies by the acts referred to in this amendment which I think ought to be removed. Under those acts, if a railway company had received a grant for ten or fifteen miles along its constructed line, the Department withholds all pay to it, although it transports freight over a hundred miles of that line. In the case of one of these very roads which the Supreme Court has rendered a decision in favor of, their land grant I think extends less than half the distance of their mileage. I speak of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad. A great portion of that land grant is not of much value, and notwithstanding that, the Government withholds over the entire line of this railway, its leased line, all Army transportation; and that is a corporation which is now pressing its work forward toward the southwest Pacific coast at the rate of a mile or two miles a day without a single dollar of aid from anybody in the way of land or money. They need this money to build their road, which they are building without coming here for assistance, and it ought to be paid. We owe them about $250,000.

Mr. BOOTH. To what road does the Senator refer?

Mr. DORSEY. I speak now of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad, which is building at a very rapid rate through New Mexico toward Arizona. It is a road that has been conducted admirably in its work of construction and management since it has been constructed, and it is built entirely by private capital from the city of Boston.

That is one case. I know of a number of similar cases that have not yet been adjudicated by the Supreme Court; but the Committee on Appropriations thought that perhaps they had better not go into the whole question, and so they only provide for the cases which had been decided in the Supreme Court the exact sum then due, and not require these railway companies to go into the court every time they had a bill against the Government of a hundred dollars, and sue over again. If this last provision which the Senator from Vermont has made a point of order against is stricken out, these companies will have to go into the court again the next year and the year after, and so on for all time, and they will have to spend more money in securing their pay from the Government than the pay is worth that they get.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why could you not pass a bill to provide for it on its own merits, and not ride it on an appropriation bill?

Mr. DORSEY. I have no doubt the Senator from Vermont would object to the passage of such a bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should unless it was honest, you may be sure.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask if the decision of the Supreme Court does not execute itself without our undertaking the indorsement of the action of the court? If the Supreme Court has settled the rights of these parties and granted them the compensation which has been withheld from them, I apprehend that the accounting officers of the Treasury would be governed by that decision.

Mr. CONKLING. And without our appropriating the money?

Mr. McDONALD. No, sir; not without our appropriating the money, but without our requiring them to conform to that decision. I understand that it is claimed, unless this portion of the amendment that has been ruled out of order shall be continued in the bill, the companies will be compelled to sue at each time that any sum is found to be due them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Cannot an independent act be passed that is right?

Mr. McDONALD. I do not see why it cannot; but on the other hand I do not see why the decision of the Supreme Court is not sufficient, and why if it decides in their favor they are not entitled to it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I agree with the Senator from Indiana that the Supreme Court's decision ought to be sufficient; but the Quartermaster-General does not think that he has any authority to go beyond the particular case that has been decided. He has followed the decision in one case, and in all others he follows the law of 1874. That is his position.

There is another question in connection with this matter that has not been alluded to, and that is the great embarrassment and inconvenience that is constantly arising to the Government from the present state of this law. Many of the railroad companies upon which the Government is depending for transportation refuse to perform its service unless their freight be paid in advance; they will not take the Government's goods. I know of many cases that have come within my own knowledge where the railroad companies said, "We will not take your goods, and the officers of the Government had no authority to pay the transportation. The Quartermaster's Department has been greatly embarrassed on that account. The company says, 'the decision of the Supreme Court gives us a right to demand compensation; the Government has refused to provide the means to meet it.' I think some legislation is necessary. I am not sure whether this is right or not, but I am satisfied that something ought to be done to remedy this evil."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 1037, it is proposed to strike out from the words "eighteen hundred and seventy-five" to and including the words "United States," in line 1039, in the following words:

And which have since been found entitled to compensation by judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States.

And in line 1040, after the word "with," to strike out the word "such" and insert the word "the;" and in the same line, after the word "judgment," to insert "of the Supreme Court in cases decided under the said acts;" so as to read:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as compensation was withheld from, under the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the judgment of the Supreme Court in cases decided under the said acts, to be paid as other Army transportation, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This amendment of the Senator from Iowa opens a very large question that has no place in an appropriation bill, I think. I will ask as the best explanation of the state of the affair, that the letter from the Secretary of War be read. It is going to involve too vast consequences to be gone over in a hurry.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that we are in a hurry to-night, Mr. President. The question is here and we have to deal with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter referred to by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, February 24, 1879.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the United States Senate, in connection with his letter of the 14th of January last to that body relative to Senate bill No. 485, repealing the law prohibiting payments to land-grant railroads for the transportation of property or troops of the United States, a communication from the Quartermaster-General, of the 16th instant, intended to correct a misapprehension which is understood to exist in regard to the scope of said bill.

GEO. W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT
Of the United States Senate.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1879.

SIR: In reply to the letter from Mr. S. R. Hamill of this date, referring to the letter from the War Department of the 14th ultimo, transmitting to the United States Senate the letter from this office of the 6th ultimo, suggesting certain amendments to Senate bill No. 485, providing for paying certain land-grant railroads for the transportation of troops and property of the United States, in which letter Mr. Hamill requests you, if deemed consistent with the interests of the War Department, to make such further communication to the Senate as will correct a misapprehension which exists as to the scope of the bill, in this, that it is thought to authorize payment to the Pacific Railroads for Government transportation contrary to express legislation, and outside of the decision of the Supreme Court in the cases of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé and Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroads, I have the honor to submit, for further information upon this subject, the following as a summary of legislation heretofore had in respect of the transportation of the troops and property of the United States over the land-grant railroads and payment for such transportation, to the end that the matter may be fully understood, and that such legislation may be had during the present session of Congress as will enable this department to secure the prompt transportation of the troops and property of the United States over these railroads, and to make such payment for the transportation as is justly and equitably due under the decision above referred to.

There are three classes of these land-grant railroads, to wit: First. Those railroads to which grants of lands were made on condition that "the railroads should be and remain public highways for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of the property or troops of the United States."

This class embraces the following-named railroads, as now controlled and operated:

Railroads to which certain land-grants were made for the transportation of troops, &c., of the United States.

* Constructed and in operation as a land-grant railroad only from Lansing to Bay City, Michigan, thence northward. That portion of the road from Jackson to Lansing is not a land-grant road.

The third class embraces those railroads to which grants of lands were made with the simple condition (so far as relates to compensation for the transportation of troops and property of the United States) that the railroads shall transport the troops and property of the United States at reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the rates paid by private parties for like transportation, coupled in some cases with the right of Congress to restrict the charges for Government transportation. It also includes those railroads to which bonds of the United States have been issued, with the provision that one-half of the compensation due for military transportation shall be applied to the payment of the bonds and interest thereon. The following are the railroads referred to:

	Name of railroad.	From—	To—	Miles.
1	Burlington and Missouri River, Nebraska.....	Plattsmouth, Nebraska.....	Junction with Union Pacific Railroad.....	191
2	Central Pacific, main line, including the Western Pacific.....	Ogden, Utah.....	San Francisco.....	883

NOTE.—The railroads in this last class, (Class 3,) numbered 2, 3, 5, 9, and 15, are the roads known as the Pacific Railroads, to which bonds of the United States have been issued.

On June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, Congress passed laws forbidding the payment of any money—

"To any railroad company for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States over any railroad which, in the whole or in part, was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land, on condition that such railroad should be a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge, or upon any other conditions, for the use of such road for such transportation." But nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing any such railroad from recovering for the same, if found entitled thereto by virtue of the laws in force prior to the passage of this act."

The Attorney-General construed these laws to embrace and include all the railroads named in the first and second classes, but not to include the railroads named in the third class. The act of March 3, 1873, forbids the payment of any money to the Pacific Railroads that had received bonds of the United States (Nos. 2, 3, 5, 9, and 15, of class No. 3,) that were in arrears in payment of the interest due on the bonds—

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I object to the further reading of that document.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The objection is probably good. I ask the Secretary to give me the paper.

[The document was handed.]

Mr. HOAR. It is evident the Senate does not want to hear it read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Massachusetts considers himself to be the Senate, undoubtedly the Senate does not want it read, and he can go out.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont can proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will proceed with my remarks now, Mr. President, if it is entirely agreeable to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator makes that a condition he will dispense with the reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I will make it a condition-subsequent.

I wish to proceed to state, Mr. President, that—

In pursuance of the provisions of the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, compelling the railroads to bring suit in the Court of Claims to recover whatever sum was due, if any, for military transportation under previous laws, two railroad companies (the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, and the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Companies) brought suit in the Court of Claims for the amount then claimed to be due. The suits were carried to the Supreme Court, and that court decided—

"That the Government, under the land-grant laws, is entitled only to the free use of the railroads, not to the equipment, rolling-stock, &c., and that it is not entitled to have its troops and property transported by the companies over their respective railroads free of charge. That the companies are entitled to compensation for all transportation performed by them, respectively, of troops and property of the Government, subject to a fair deduction for the use of their respective railroads, (3 Otto, 443.)"

That decision, Mr. President, was made under the one class, of which there are three, which the Senator from Massachusetts desires of protecting the public interest no doubt observed with his usual attention to affairs. The first clause was that the railroads should be and remain public highways for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of the property or troops of the United States. Those were the grounds that were in consideration in 3 Otto where the Supreme Court decided that that was merely a right of way and that the company was not bound to furnish transportation, and consequently were entitled to a fair deduction for that as distinguished from the use of the track.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me right there to ask him a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, I am afraid the Senator from Massachusetts will lose the run of this, and I prefer to go on. The Quartermaster-General proceeds:

This decision, though given in the cases above referred to, applies to and affects all the railroads that received grants of lands on like conditions, to wit, all the railroads named in class No. 1, and no others.

Of which the Senator from Iowa wishes to put in all the others that are not affected.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow me a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me I shall go on.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like the Senator from Vermont—

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask to be excused. Mr. President, if you can protect me from the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa both at the same time, I shall feel duly grateful.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont declines to yield.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall wait with patience.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will wait until we can have peace, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not be interrupted and will be protected by the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He certainly will not go on until he is protected, Senators may be quite sure.

These other classes comprise, I will not waste the time of the Senate in counting them, but somewhere between twenty and thirty railroads, which the Senator from Iowa's amendment will include under this supposed decision of the Supreme Court, and will provide for paying money out of the Treasury when it has never been decided and I think never will be decided that they are entitled to any pay at all. Of course it is not a very convenient time, in the hurry of an appropriation bill to carry on the Government, to go into all these questions, but if Senators are determined that these matters shall ride in this omnibus, then I think the proper commentary upon it should go with it. He proceeds to say:

The railroads named in class No. 2, being by their organic acts required to transport the troops and property of the United States free of cost, charge, or expense to the United States, are not affected by the decision of the Supreme Court, for no question affecting Government transportation over those roads was before the court. They have never been paid for Government transportation, and it is not now, by Senate bill 485, proposed to pay them for such transportation.

I believe that this provision under consideration is not Senate bill 485, but whatever was in Senate bill 485 that would affect one class was put into this bill, and whatever was not in it is to be imported by such changes as will provide for making a grand scoop for all these companies at one bite.

The repeal of the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, will leave those roads in just the position they were prior to the passage of those acts. The organic acts forbid payment to these roads, and payment will not be made unless future legislation directs that it be done.

That is what is desired on this appropriation bill, to get the future legislation that will direct it to be done and will repeal all the safeguards of the original grants that secure to the United States these rights.

Senate bill 485 amended as suggested by the Quartermaster-General—

I will not spend time in reading that because that is in a form not before us.

The railroads named in class No. 3—

And I now come to the last class—with the exception of the Pacific Railroads to which bonds have been issued, (Nos. 2, 3, 5, 9, and 15)—

In this vast mass that this amendment is to cover and provide for—have always been paid for Government transportation—

Because it is provided as to those, as the Senator from Massachusetts undoubtedly remembers, that they shall transport the troops and property of the United States at reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the rates paid by private parties for like transportation, coupled in some cases with the right of Congress to restrict the charges for Government transportation.

This third class, as this report proceeds to say, embraces fifteen railroads, and they have always been paid according to the provision of the grant, excepting five of them that received bond subsidies which under other provisions of paying in 5 per cent. of the net income and allowing for half transportation, &c., to keep down the interest on bonds that we have lent them, have not been paid since certain acts of Congress.

That, Mr. President, without spending the time of the Senate to read the residue of this report which would be somewhat useful if we were to go into it, is all that I wish to say at this present time. I have felt justified in asking this letter to be read at the desk, where everybody could hear it, in order that the Senate might see the vast field of legislation beginning you do not understand precisely where and ending nobody can tell where, the effect of which will be to relieve these roads that have received grants of public lands from obligations that are plainly stated in the grants, and in no one of which, except one class, has the Supreme Court ever decided or been asked to decide that their claim to be paid for transportation was well founded. That is what I thought it to be a duty to let the Senate understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President—

Mr. WINDOM. I was going to make a proposition, but I will not submit it at this moment if the Senator from Iowa desires to be heard.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to be heard.

Mr. WINDOM. My proposition is that as it will be necessary for the Senate to remain in session for the great portion of the next three nights, I have consulted with a large number of Senators, and the prevailing opinion seems to be that we shall gain time by adjourning until ten o'clock to-morrow morning, with the understanding that the bill shall be taken up immediately after the Journal is read. I want to make that motion, but the Senator from Iowa appeals to me for a moment, and I will not make it now.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, and others. Make it now.

Mr. WINDOM. I will make it, then.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let us dispose of this matter.

Mr. WINDOM. Can there be a general understanding that we shall proceed with this bill immediately after the Journal is read to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate adjourn until ten o'clock this morning, and that the sundry civil bill be taken up after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. EATON. I hope not. I hope we shall not adjourn. If we are to finish our business and not have an extra session, let us stay. I do not desire an extra session, and therefore I wish to remain here.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. WINDOM. I will withdraw the motion for the present. I want to go on if anybody else does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I offered what I supposed to be—

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the Senator from Iowa give way a moment? I renew the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Illinois will excuse me, he has not the floor to renew the motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I thought it could come up again.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word or two, and then I will yield to the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. I find in this bill a proposition to pay two railway companies for transportation, which a law passed in 1874 prohibited them from receiving until they had tested their right to receive payment in the Court of Claims. There are, as the document read at the Clerk's desk discloses, a large number of railways in precisely the same situation, who have performed exactly the same service. I ventured in the presence of the Senator from Vermont to offer an amendment, the object and aim of which was to place all railways of the same class upon the same footing, and not to stand here at this hour of the night to legislate in the interest of two corporations, to the exclusion of a number of other corporations situated in precisely the same manner. Now because I undertook to do that the Senator from Vermont states that I offered an amendment here the effect of which is to pay railways not included within the decision of the Supreme Court. My amendment has no such purpose, and as I believe will have no such effect. If it has, it is in the power of the Senator from Vermont to so modify it as to bring it within the purpose I have, and I shall so modify it as to bring it within that purpose if he does not propose a proper amendment.

I have no objection to these railways included in this amendment being paid. I think after a decision of the Supreme Court has been made saying that the Government holds money belonging to them it is but fair and just that they should be paid; but the Supreme Court has not held that these two railways alone shall be paid, although judgment was rendered in their favor alone. The principle settled by the decision of the court justifies and requires payment to all land-grant railways having similar provisions attached to their several grants.

Mr. MITCHELL. And the Attorney-General recommends it very strongly.

Mr. ALLISON. And the Attorney-General and the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster-General in letters which I have read, but which I cannot lay my hands upon now at this hour of the night, recommend it. The Secretary of War recommends that all these railways included within the first class mentioned in the letter just read should be paid.

Nobody here proposes, I certainly do not propose, to include within any amendment to this bill or any other bill railways that are not included in the decisions of the Supreme Court. I submit that I should not be charged with a purpose which I did not intend in the amendment I offered. I think I will endeavor as carefully in this bill to guard the Treasury and the just rights of parties as will the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has entirely misunderstood me, and I am sure the RECORD will show that I have not in any single word I have said imputed to him any such purpose as he now thinks I did.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont said that my amendment intended to include two classes of railways that are excluded by the letter of the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said in my opinion the Senator's amendment would do that thing, and that is my opinion.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I then misunderstood the Senator from Vermont. I understood the Senator to say that was the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said it was the effect; I think the Senator will find that the word "purpose" was not used.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he thinks it is fair to select out two railway companies and pay them and exclude all other railways similarly situated?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have said nothing upon that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. The purpose of my amendment was simply to place all these railways upon an equality. I do not ask that the appropriation shall be increased. I ask that whatever sum is appropriated shall be appropriated to these railways alike. And if the Senator from Vermont thinks that is injustice, then his opinion on that subject differs from my own.

Now, Mr. President, I did not expect to occupy so much of the time of the Senate. I shall, of course, make all other necessary amendments to include the railways named by the Quartermaster-General as first class and exclude all others, so that the questions arising under the second and third classes named can be pursued to the Supreme Court for final decision.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it not true that the Quartermaster-General recommended that there should be a settlement on the basis of throwing off 33½ per cent., or something like that, of the gross amount of the claims of these roads which are entitled under the decision? And is it not true that one or two or more of the roads agreed to this proposition, and that some others did not agree to it, and that these are the companies that are seeking to get the additional appropriation, the estimate having been as named in this amendment to cover only those, under the adjustment as proposed by the Quartermaster-General?

Mr. ALLISON. I know of no such agreement and no such understanding. On the contrary, I do know that railroads which have transported for the Government since this law was passed in 1874 and 1875 and which have not received one dollar of compensation have been and are willing to receive the compensation upon the basis of the Supreme Court decision, and have been willing to do so all the time, and these statutes are the only thing that stands in their way.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understand that that is the proposition of the Quartermaster-General, that part of these companies, two or three perhaps, have accepted the proposition, and that others stand out, and they are the ones that are clamorous for the larger appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very clear that no such state of facts exists in reference to any great number of these railroads of the first class.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we have had a great many bitter lessons of late years against taking up this complicated question of the rights and obligations of the land-grant railroads in this country just at the end of the session and dealing with them on appropriation bills. I hope we shall not repeat that error. It is very evident that my objection to the reading of the document from the Clerk's desk was well taken; nobody could fully understand or gather what was the point from the reading as it was read. I move to lay the amendment of the committee, carrying with it the whole subject, upon the table, and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Massachusetts does that, I want to remind him that this question is in this bill, not upon my motion, but it is here singling out two railways to the exclusion of all other railways.

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay that on the table as well as the amendment of the Senator. I move to lay all on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to lay the amendment of the committee on the table.

Mr. HOAR. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to say a word if the Senator will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask unanimous consent to say a single word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent that the Senator from Arkansas may be heard?

Mr. HOAR. If nobody else wishes to speak I will yield with great pleasure.

Mr. BOOTH. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning.

Mr. DORSEY. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has not the floor. He rose to debate, and as the Chair understands, the question is not debatable.

Mr. DORSEY. The Senator from Massachusetts withdrew the motion to permit me to say a word, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was not aware of that.

Mr. DORSEY. The Committee on Appropriations included the roads which I embraced in this amendment because the Supreme Court had passed on these specific cases and no others. That is all I have to say.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer an amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let it go to the table, the bill having been reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so referred.

Mr. BRUCE. I offer an amendment to the river and harbor bill, and ask its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so referred.

Mr. CONKLING. That committee no longer has charge of that bill. It has been reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the Senator has the right to have the amendment referred to the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. I only state that for information that nobody may be misled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Mississippi desires to have it so referred that is his right.

RECESS.

Mr. BOOTH. I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock in the morning.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Was there not a motion to lay the amendment on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from California takes precedence.

Mr. HOAR. My motion stands pending.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I hope the Senator from California will withdraw the motion for a moment. I wish to make a personal statement which will take but a single moment.

Mr. President, just before the vote was taken upon the Shields amendment and upon the passage of the bill relating to pensions this evening I was obliged to go out. I had arranged a pair with my friend the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.] When the Senator from Vermont announced that the bill would be disposed of in twenty minutes I thought I might remain to vote upon it, and consequently voted once or twice after the pair was arranged. But the length of the debate compelled me to go out before it was finished; and the Senator from Missouri, not noticing my absence, voted. If I had been present, I should have voted against the Shields amendment, and also against the bill on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California that the Senate do now take a recess until ten o'clock this morning.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 13; and (at three o'clock a. m.) the Senate took a recess until ten o'clock a. m., (Saturday, March 1.)

MORNING SESSION.

The Senate was called to order at ten o'clock a. m., (Saturday, March 1.)

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate resumes its session. The business in order is the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to lay on the table the amendment discussed last night.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the roll may be called to ascertain whether there is a quorum present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called by the Secretary. The Secretary called the roll.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are only seventeen Senators present.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the names of the absent Senators be called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They will be called.

The Secretary called the list of the absentees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Twenty-six Senators are now present.

Mr. WINDOM. I suppose we must wait.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, (at ten o'clock and thirty minutes a. m.) Thirty-nine Senators are now present, constituting a quorum.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT signed the following enrolled bills, heretofore signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (S. No. 852) granting a pension to Mary E. Pauley;

A bill (S. No. 1763) for the relief of Albert U. Wyman, late Treasurer of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4414) to amend the laws relating to internal revenue;

A bill (H. R. No. 138) for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 1162) for the relief of Alfred Muller, late acting assistant surgeon United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 1301) for the relief of Henry E. Wilkinson, late first lieutenant of Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 4289) for the relief of Thomas W. Segar; and

A bill (S. No. 4392) for the relief of Lucinda C. Dillahanty, of Tennessee.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in answer to a resolution of February 20, 1879, information in relation to the construction of railroads in Mexico; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

HOUSE BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives:

The bill (H. R. No. 6523) providing for the engraving and printing of portraits to accompany memorial addresses on the late Representatives Leonard, Quinn, Welch, Williams, Douglas, Hartridge, and Schleicher, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I stated yesterday that I should object to the second reading of all bills, but I do not object to that one under the circumstances.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The bill (H. R. No. 6524) to remove the political disabilities of H. B. Littlepage, of King William County, Virginia, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be read the second time and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) authorizing the Public Printer to print 20,000 copies of House report No. 53, on the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures, was read by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes to the Calendar, having been read once.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. HOAR. My colleague [Mr. DAWES] presented last night the resolutions of the Massachusetts Legislature in regard to the fisheries treaty. It is a resolution of only about four lines in length, and it is quite desirable that it should be in the RECORD in connection with the public history of this treaty. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD. That order was accidentally omitted last night. I ask unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which the Chair hears no objection. The resolution is as follows.

Resolved, That justice to the fishermen and to the fishing interests of the country requires that articles 18 and 21 of the treaty concluded between the United States and the government of Great Britain on the 8th day of May, A. D. 1871, should be terminated at the earliest possible period.

Resolved, That a copy hereof be sent to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

February 28, 1879.

Passed.

LEVI C. WADE, Speaker.

IN SENATE, February 27, 1879.

Passed.

JOHN B. D. COGSWELL, President.

FEBRUARY 27, 1879.

Approved.

THOMAS TALBOT.

SECRETARY'S DEPARTMENT.

Boston, February 27, 1879.

A true copy. Attest:

HENRY B. PEIRCE,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. EATON presented the credentials of Orville H. Platt, chosen by the Legislature of Connecticut a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1879.

The credentials were read and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented a petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Jefferson County, New York, praying such legislation as will make effective the anti-polygamy act of 1862; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented a resolution of the Legislature of Rhode Island, in favor of an appropriation for the establishment of a signal station on Block Island and telegraphic communication by cable with the main land; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report back the bill (H. R. No. 6126) to establish post-routes in the several States herein named, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute. I ask that it be laid on the table. It is the post-route bill, including all that passed at the last session and the bill passed by the House at the present session, with the amendments made by the Senate Post-Office Committee. It covers nothing but post-routes except a simple extension of mail service where contractors have failed to perform their duty, allowing the Postmaster-General to run the service twelve months instead of six, as in the present statute. There is nothing else in the whole substitute.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it a House bill?

Mr. FERRY. It is. I ask that it lie on the table. My object is at the first moment to call it up and have it passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar subject to the call of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6416) granting the right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and to the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company through the United States Cemetery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 63) requiring the assembling of a court of inquiry in the case of Major Granville O. Haller, late of the Seventh Infantry, United States Army, reported it without amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4967) granting a pension to Calvin E. Pratt, late brigadier-general of volunteers, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1756) granting an increase of pension to James H. Reeve, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4326) granting a pension to Charles Cline, of Clinton County, Ohio, reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 848) for the relief of Francis B. McNamara, of Coudersport, Potter County, Pennsylvania, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Eugene O'Sullivan praying an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1863) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6137) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds to Albert V. Conway, substituted trustee for certain registered United States bonds redeemed or assigned by the Government upon forged assignments, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4143) for the relief of John Adams, William B. Clift, David Dunseath, William Killinger, J. F. Scott, administrator of the estate of Obediah Scott, deceased, Davis C. Peak, Charles Linderman, James Linnane, Patrick Carey, John McMahon, and James Gorman, administrator of the estate of Patrick Gorman, deceased, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That Cole, Sizer & Brink have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate their petition and papers on leaving copies of the same with the Secretary.

On motion of Mr. EATON, it was Ordered, That Harriet E. Edwards have leave to withdraw her petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

COMPILATION OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the reports of the Senate and House Committees on Private Land Claims from the Nineteenth Congress to date, compiled under the direction of the Senate Committee on Private Land Claims, by its clerk, be printed for the use of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. THURMAN, and Mr. KERNAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT, of Georgia, Mr. WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS, of Illinois, and Mr. J. H. BAKER, of Indiana, as managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; and that it had disagreed to certain portions of the twentieth amendment of the Senate to the said bill and agreed to other portions of said amendment with amendments, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT, of Georgia, Mr. HESTER CLYMER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. J. H. BAKER, of Indiana, managers at the conference on its part.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and the amendments of the House to the twentieth amendment of the Senate to the said bill; and,

On motion of Mr. DORSEY, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, disagree to the amendments of the House to the twentieth amendment of the Senate, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. DORSEY, Mr. BLAINE, and Mr. WALLACE the conferees on the part of the Senate.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 6436) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for prior years, and for those heretofore treated as permanent, and for other purposes disagreed to by the House of Representatives; and,

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. WALLACE as the conferees.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DORSEY and Mr. WINDOM demanded the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask leave to make a report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot receive it in the presence of a demand by two Senators for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] which will be read.

Mr. HOAR. The pending question, I think, is on the motion to lay the amendment of the committee on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was informed by the Secretary that the pending question was on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But a motion was made to lay it on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts was in the chair at the time.

Mr. HOAR. I was not in the chair; but I made the motion to lay on the table the amendment reported by the committee, which carried with it the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The entire amendment?

Mr. HOAR. The entire amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on that motion.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If another division is had, I think there will be a quorum voting.

A further division being had, there were—ayes 20, noes 22.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, which will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was, in line 1037, on page 43, to strike out:

And which have since been found entitled to compensation by judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States.

And in line 1040 to strike out "such," and after the word "judgment" to insert "of the Supreme Court in cases decided under the said act."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend this amendment, the whole of which I regard as very dangerous for the reason that it is not sufficiently guarded, (and that appears from the report of the Quartermaster-General himself,) by inserting after the word "railroads," in line 1034, these words:

As have not received aid in Government bonds.

So that it will read:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds as compensation, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 21, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. PLUMB. Let us have another division.

Mr. ANTHONY. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WINDOM. I think another division will show a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be read as now amended. It has been amended several times.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds as compensation was withheld from under the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with judgment of the Supreme Court in cases decided under said acts, to be paid as other Army transportation, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—29.
Allison.	Davis of W. Va.	McDonald,	Saunders.
Beck.	Dawes.	Matthews.	Teller.
Booth.	Dorsey.	Mitchell.	Voorhees.
Burnside.	Ferry.	Morgan.	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.	Garland.	Paddock.	Withers.
Cameron of Wis.	Hamlin.	Plumb.
Chandler.	Harris.	Rollins.
Cockrell.	Howe.	Sargent.
NAYS—15.
Anthony.	Edmunds.	Kernan.	Saulsbury.
Bailey.	Grover.	McPherson.	Wadleigh.
Bayard.	Hereford.	Merrimon.	Wallace.

ABSENT—32.

Barnum,	Dennis,	Jones of Nevada,	Patterson,
Blaine,	Eaton,	Kellogg,	Randolph,
Bruce,	Eustis,	Kirkwood,	Ransom,
Butler,	Gordon,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Chaffee,	Hill,	McCreery,	Shields,
Coke,	Ingalls,	McMillan,	Spencer,
Conkling,	Johnston,	Maxey,	Thurman,
Conover,	Jones of Florida,	Oglesby,	Whyte.

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "for" in line 1060, to strike out "the same on" and insert "observing;" so as to read:

For the United States Naval Observatory the following items, to wit: For solar and stellar photography, $1,000; for illustrations for report on the eclipse of July, 1878, $1,500; for observing the California eclipse, January, 1880, $600; and for thirty-five wood-cuts of nebula in Orion, $350; in all, $3,450, which shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 1081 to 1083, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay J. F. H. Claiborne amount due him on adjusted account, $748.10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1083, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to publish charts of the west coast of Mexico, $10,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1087, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to alter and repair the United States ship Antietam, so as to provide for the marines at League Island station, $7,525.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1104, to insert:

For fire-proofing in part the National Statuary Hall, namely, for taking out gallery and the wooden partition above it; constructing brick walls and extending marble tiling of floor, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. And no work of art or manufacture shall be exhibited in the National Statuary Hall, the Rotunda, or the corridors of the Capitol, unless by the permission of the Joint Committee on the Library.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1112, to insert:

For renewing and repairing portions of the heating apparatus in the Senate wing of the Capitol, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1115, to insert:

For electric clocks for the Capitol, namely: One Howard & Company's regulator, No. 1 movement, with dials, for the Senate Chamber, House of Representatives, old Hall of Representatives, and Rotunda, all to be connected with the Naval Observatory, including wires and electric batteries, $1,453.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My attention was diverted and I ask consent to go back to line 1109. The committee's amendment, I suppose, was adopted embracing that line.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where it reads "and no work of art or manufacture shall be exhibited in the National Statuary Hall, the Rotunda, or the corridors of the Capitol, unless by permission of the Joint Committee on the Library," I wish to put in after "manufacture" the words "other than the property of the United States." It would perhaps so be construed although, literally it would turn out everything there. I presume there is no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I wish to move to strike out in lines 1111 and 1112 the words "unless by the permission of the Joint Committee on the Library." The Committee on the Library have found, gentlemen of both Houses, the extreme inconvenience and annoyance of being continually pressed by people who wished to exhibit their things for sale. They bring everything they have got that they think can be packed off on Congress, and persuade and overpersuade us to let them stick it up somewhere. I should like to have a law absolute that nothing shall come into the Capitol except the property of the United States until it is bought, and then it will be the property of the United States. I move to strike out the words "unless by the permission of the Joint Committee on the Library."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which the Chair hears no objection. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to direct the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the language as it stands. Strictly construed, it would exclude perhaps more than the committee intended, and more than the Senator intends. "And no work of art or manufacture," no manufactured work of any kind, unless the property of the United States, shall be exhibited in any corridor for sale or otherwise. A newspaper is a manufactured work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would hardly be so regarded.

Mr. SARGENT. I think it is a manufactured work. I know that is not the intention or the suggestion of the Senator. Suppose we pass the matter over for the present. It seems to me the language should be a little more carefully guarded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California make any motion?

Mr. SARGENT. Not now.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1122, to insert:

To pay C. Brumidi for retouching and blending the picture in fresco on the canopy of the Dome of the Capitol, and for constructing a scaffolding under said picture, $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1126, to insert:

To Mrs. C. Adile Fassett, for the purchase of the painting of the "Electoral Commission," $10,000.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to have some explanation why that is to be paid for at that sum.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the Senator from New York that the Committee on Appropriations inserted this item on the recommendation of the Joint Committee on the Library, as I understand.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say to the Senator from New York that it is on the bill by a divided vote of the committee.

Mr. KERNAN. I think we had better divide here, too.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The chairman has stated that it is on the request of the Library Committee that the amendment is proposed. I wish to state that I join in that. It was by their request, and not on any special thought of the fitness of it on the part of the Committee on Appropriations—or, at least, of part of the Appropriation Committee—that the amendment is proposed.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not wish to go so far as the Senator from West Virginia. I would vote for the proposition as an independent one. I say the action of the committee and my own vote as a member of the committee was largely because of that; but I do not wish to be placed in the position of throwing all the responsibility on the Joint Committee on the Library. I think I should vote for it myself as a separate measure on its merits.

Mr. DORSEY. As the members of the Committee on Appropriations consider it necessary to explain the reason why this measure is on the bill, I want to say that it is on by my vote without any regard to the Committee on the Library, and will remain on if I can keep it here by my vote in the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. It seems to me that it is a very fitting thing that the Government should buy this picture. That was the sentiment of the majority of the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment was sent to that committee by the chairman of the Committee on the Library. The picture is very valuable, not merely as a work of art, but as preserving in imperishable form the faces of a very large number of the statesmen and jurists of the country. If this picture is bought by the United States and deposited in the Capitol, there is every reason to believe that one hundred years from now it will exist and will remain preserved in the Capitol for future generations to see the faces of the distinguished men who participated in and witnessed the singular scene of the electoral commission.

These considerations are not at all affected by the judgment of any Senator upon the result of the work of that body. Whether the result was fortunate or unfortunate—I believe that both parties, men of each party, have differing opinions upon that; some of both parties believing the result was very unfortunate—I say, however Senators may look upon that consideration, nevertheless it was a great historical event, and this picture groups, in a pleasing and as accurately arranged form as is possible in a work of art, the faces of distinguished men who participated in it and who witnessed it. It is as interesting as the pictures by Trumbull and others which are in the Rotunda, and, unquestionably, much more accurate. There has been no criticism made of this picture which does not grant that the likenesses are striking and remarkable, and I have no doubt that our children's children will be glad to see the face of my friend from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] in the picture, the face of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] the face of the present Secretary of State, of the various members who composed the commission, and those who attended its sessions. Of course, strictly, it is not accurate. There are persons put into it who may not have been at the sessions, but they are all historical faces, and a part of the history of the times. That does not detract from the picture as a work of art, and adds to its interest historically. All the surroundings, I believe, are as literal as it is possible to have them in a picture of that kind, and the grouping is as good as it could be. I think there can be no question that it is valuable as a work of art, and I trust the Senate will do, so far as it can, the meritorious work of securing this picture for the benefit of posterity.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has called attention to this amendment. I said in response to his question that it was put on by a divided vote of the committee. I only desire now to say that I opposed it as a part of this bill, not thinking it was properly any part of a sundry civil bill. If it has merit, it can stand by itself. I have not seen the picture since it was finished; I believe I saw it soon after it was begun, a friend having asked me to go and look at it. I opposed it because I did not think it ought to be put into this bill. It commemorates a scene of which I am not proud, and it commemorates an event which I do not think reflects much credit upon the country; and, therefore, I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. HOWE. Perhaps I ought to say a word about this matter, and the more so as the attitude of the Joint Committee on the Library is not accurately understood. What the Joint Committee on the Library did was to instruct the chairman of that committee on the part of the Senate and House to move an amendment to this very bill appropriating a sum of money which, in their judgment, should be deemed proper for the purchase of this picture. It turned out that the two individuals designated were not able to agree as to the price proper to be paid, so that the precise sum proposed here is a sum which I fixed myself upon consultation with members of the House, leading members of both parties, and with members of the Senate. I put this amendment, therefore, at this sum on my own responsibility, stating, however, I think, to individuals of the Appropriation Committee, if I did not to the committee itself, that, in my judgment, every member of the Joint Committee on the Library would approve this amendment except one, and I was not at all certain but that every one would approve it.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the Senator please repeat his last statement?

Mr. HOWE. I said to members of the Appropriation Committee, I think I said to the committee itself, that it was my judgment that every member of the Joint Committee on the Library would support this amendment with perhaps one exception, and I was not sure that there would be any exception, nor am I at this moment. But the amendment was not moved on the authority of the joint committee for the reason I have already stated.

Now, as to the purchase itself, Mr. President, I have only a word to add. I think the event which the painting commemorates, no matter what gentlemen may think of the circumstances which led to it; no matter what gentlemen may think of the result flowing from it, the event itself is as well worth commemorating as any single event written in the history of free government; and if free government continues and republican institutions survive, I think it will be a landmark centuries hence. As to the merits of the painting itself, I do not propose to speak. I am not qualified for the work of criticism. I am inclined to think, after listening to a great deal of art criticism, that there is no more use in disputing about art than there is about taste. Gentlemen and critics differ as to their accuracy and fidelity. Any one who has seen one of those likenesses and never saw the original will have a very distinct idea of how the original looked.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my friend allow me to ask him how the price was fixed?

Mr. HOWE. I said the price was fixed on consultation with leading members of both parties in the House and in the Senate. They thought the sum named was a proper sum to pay. The artist herself had been advised to ask a much higher sum, as high as $30,000, and I think one consideration which induced my colleague in the House to discourage the purchase more than any other was that the artist was induced to put too high a figure upon it. The price which she finally named upon consultation with her friends was $25,000. We did not think the Government could afford to pay that price, and we made the price $10,000, which I think will be either accepted or rejected. If it is rejected, the Government will not suffer any in point of money; if it is accepted, the Government will get a picture which I think is worth the money.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin how many portraits there are in this painting?

Mr. HOWE. Over two hundred, I think; I do not remember the exact number.

Mr. DORSEY. If there are over two hundred portraits, as I understand there are, it is very easy to arrive at the value of the picture, basing it upon the ordinary price paid for portraits, which is about $250. At that rate the picture would be worth $50,000.

Mr. HOWE. It is suggested by one of my colleagues on the Library Committee that there should be added to this these words, "to be paid when the picture is finished to the satisfaction of the Library Committee."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. "And to be in full."

Mr. HOWE. "And to be in full."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I take it there will be no objection to the Senator's amendment to add these words.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote against the purchase of this picture. I know nothing about its merits as a work of art. I am not a judge in matters of that kind. I do not believe, however, in converting the Capitol into an art gallery, and I do not know why we should purchase every picture that may be offered to the Senate and House. As to commemorating the great event which has been referred to, I do not think we should commemorate that event any more than history generally will do. I am very well satisfied that the result of the action of that commission will live in history, and everybody that participated in it will share in the criticisms of history for the part he took. I do not think that that event is commemorated by this painting at all any more than it will be commemorated by the facts that exist in history. We cannot afford to pay every party that offers a work of art to the Senate, and I do not know why we should select out this particular artist—doubtless she is a very worthy lady—and patronize her when hundreds of others, ay, thousands of other artists in this country have got pictures doubtless of equal merit and would be glad to have them purchased by the Congress of the United States. This picture may be a very meritorious one artistically; I do not know anything about that; but I am opposed to voting away the money of the people for a thing so entirely unnecessary even if the amount is only $10,000. I shall therefore record my vote against the proposition.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suppose I shall not be suspected of having any sympathy with the opinion expressed by the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Delaware who has just taken his seat, and I certainly am desirous of ornamenting this Capitol properly with works of art, whether they be of great merit in themselves or whether they commemorate important events in our history, and I certainly have a very great regard for the worthy lady who is the artist of this work, from what I have seen of her; but I do not think it is reasonable or fair to undertake to fill the Capitol or to expend the public money by purchasing paintings or statues which are commemorative of transactions so recent, about which the political parties of the country are so divided as they are in regard to the important political event which this work commemorates. I do not think it would have been reasonable to have asked the opposition in the time of Washington to have contributed the public money to purchase a painting commemorative of the signing of the Jay treaty, although probably at the present day nearly the whole American people would be agreed in their homage to the great statesman who signed that treaty and would regard that act as one of the great acts of his public life.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator pardon me a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. Does he understand this electoral commission to have been a party event in any sense?

Mr. HOAR. I do not see what I have said that could have suggested that question or what I have not said that could have suggested it to the Senator from Wisconsin. It is an event concerning which the feelings of the American people are divided and upon party lines to-day; divided, and heated, and excited. The heats of that occasion have not passed away. That I think is true. To answer the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, I do not understand that it is a transaction which is a party event in that sense.

Mr. HOWE. Does the Senator mean to say that political parties as they exist in this country divide as upon the question whether the electoral commission was a proper or an improper thing, whether it was a wise or unwise thing?

Mr. HOAR. No, sir, but they are divided on this. I believe with as much conviction as I believe anything which is a matter of opinion, that that was not only an important historic event, but that the judgment pronounced was a righteous judgment asserting principles upon which the preservation of the American Constitution depends. I believe so with all my heart, and I am prepared to defend that opinion against any man who desires to challenge it, on a fit occasion. But there are gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who believe that it was an unrighteous judgment, that the men who rendered that judgment by a majority of one were constrained in a judicial act by party feeling. That is the thing about which the American people are divided to-day; they are about a great many other things. Now, I do not think it is wise, within two years of that event, to select that judgment or the trial which resulted in it to ornament as a subject or a work of art to form an ornament of this Capitol. I do not think it is wise for the Senate to send down to the House of Representatives a proposition to do that to-day or to-morrow. That is the point I am making. There are a great many other scenes; take the passage of the fifteenth amendment in the House or the Senate, or the passage of the fourteenth amendment in the House or the Senate; and there are a great many others to which I might refer; I do not think it would have been reasonable to have asked the democratic party to have selected them for ornamenting the Capitol, although the faces of a great many famous statesmen might have been preserved. If posterity, as I believe it will, shall desire to honor that transaction, it will be time enough to purchase the picture when men look back upon it in the cool light with which posterity surveys the history of the past, and the then democratic party of this country, by whatever name it may be then termed, the party which prides itself on being the party of State rights and against centralization, the party which prides itself on being the party of individual freedom, will be the party that of all others will delight, as I believe, to honor that event by art and by speech and by the pen of the historian.

I am not afraid of that judgment; but I do not think the time has come. I think we must commemorate in the nation's Capitol by the money of the nation, by the authority of its Congress, its National Legislature, those historic events (and there are enough of them) in regard to which the whole nation has agreed to do homage. We have not yet kept our pledge; the vote of a monument to La Fayette remains an empty vote upon our statute book to-day. The great French alliance is not yet fitly commemorated. It is but a year or two or three since any representation of the gallant Greene, whose grave is forgotten and cannot be marked with a grave-stone, was to be found in the Capitol of the Nation. I think I have a right to say, if any man has, that this is not the time to pick out the events of the last two or three years, however creditable or honorable a majority of us may believe them to be, for that species of homage which, if it is to have any value, must be the homage of the united hearts of the whole American people without distinction of party.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I rise to ask the Senate that the five-minute rule may be adopted on this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the rule, which will be read, be applied to the consideration of the pending bill.

The Secretary read the following resolution heretofore adopted:

Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time pending an appropriation bill to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion; and such motion shall be decided without debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota applying this resolution to the pending bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I confess my surprise that opposition to this purchase should come from that quarter, and especially that that opposition should be based upon such reasons as have been presented. I was not ignorant that political parties differed in their judgment on the conclusion to which the electoral commission arrived; but I think it is fair to remind the Senator from Massachusetts that the artist has not recorded that judgment; it nowhere appears on the painting. What the judgment was nowhere appears there.

Mr. President, political parties, happily, did not divide as to the wisdom of constituting that commission. That is the great event, that is the fact which I deem worth recording. I think it one of the most remarkable events in the history of free governments, as I have already said, and I should have said so no matter what conclusion that commission arrived at; that would still have been my opinion. We all boast of the fact that two great governments, that of Great Britain and the United States, differing as to their respective international rights, differing very broadly and very widely, finally came together and submitted by agreement those differences to the arbitrament of men—

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator vote for the purchase of a painting of the Halifax commission?

Mr. HOWE. The Halifax commission? I do not quite understand.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator if he would vote for purchasing a painting of the Halifax commission?

Mr. HOWE. On the fisheries?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. Why, yes, Mr. President, I will, [laughter,] on reflection.

Mr. HOAR. My friend marches straight up to the logic of his conclusion. I wish to express my profound reverence.

Mr. HOWE. It never occurred to me that anybody would want to put on canvas that commission, but if there is a desire to do so I do not know but that in one point of view it deserves handing down to immortality as much as any class of men I know of.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask if the Senator forgets the assembly in the Hall of the House a little while ago to celebrate the reception of the picture of the signing of the proclamation for the emancipation of slavery?

Mr. HOWE. No, Mr. President, I do not forget that, and I hope the Senator from Massachusetts does not forget that. Parties were divided upon the policy of issuing the emancipation proclamation; but when an artist, who doubtless believed in that policy, saw fit to commemorate that event on canvas, and a public-spirited woman offered that painting to the Government, it was accepted, and representatives of both political parties joined in commemorating the event in eloquent terms.

And one thing more I want to say of that. While that picture, which did commemorate a party measure was repeatedly offered for purchase to the Joint Committee on the Library and was as repeatedly declined, I will say of the members who served on that committee that I never heard one offer as an objection to its purchase that it did commemorate a party measure. The event which is spread on this piece of canvas is in no conceivable sense a party measure.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to amend after the word "dollars" by inserting:

When the picture shall be finished to the satisfaction of the Joint Committee on the Library, and this sum shall be accepted as in full for the said picture.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin, I think, overlooks one very important fact which brings the case of the emancipation proclamation within the principle which I stated; and that is this, that although the emancipation proclamation was a party measure, it was a measure so just and wise that at the distance of fifteen or sixteen years from its date the whole American people had agreed in its justice and that it was a great historic event. As I said about Jay's treaty, the time came when men could look at it coolly. John Jay was burned in effigy in Philadelphia by the democratic party of that day, or some of them; but the time came when the whole American people paid homage to the act; and it would be very proper to have a commemorative picture of it. The great pictures in the vestibule of the House of Commons are pictures commemorating events about which the great parties of England differed, the great historic events in the history of liberty; but they were put there when they had ceased to be the commemoration of the triumphs of a party alone, and received the undivided homage and support of the people of England. But I do not think it is wise at a time when the smoke has not cleared off to undertake to fill the Capitol with the representations of those scenes about which party passions are still excited. That is the distinction.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. Does he mean to be understood as saying that the whole American people now approve the wisdom or justice of the emancipation proclamation?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; I mean to say that the whole American people say they do. How much hypocrisy there may be in some particular place, no man can undertake to say.

Mr. HOWE. I am not very accurately informed on that point; but I must be allowed to say, being so challenged, that there is one American citizen I know of who does not think the emancipation proclamation was a wise measure.

Mr. HOAR. He voted for the picture?

Mr. HOWE. He had no voting to do about it.

Mr. HOAR. Who is that citizen?

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to say one word in reply to an obiter dictum that fell from my friend from Massachusetts, that the grave of General Greene was unmarked. That is not owing to any lack of appreciation in the State whose annals his fame illustrates, as it does the annals of the whole country; but he died of yellow fever in Savannah and his body was placed in a tomb, and in the confusion of that terrible time the tomb could not be identified.

Mr. HOAR. But still it is true that no appropriate honor was paid to that great captain until a very recent period. That was the point I was making.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly, that is true.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as amended.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) On questions of this kind I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] I should vote in the negative, if he were present.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Matthews,
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Howe,	Sargent,
Blaine,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Teller,
Booth,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Windom,
Burnside,	Dorsey,	Kellogg,	Withers.

NAYS—29.

Bailey,	Garland,	McCreery,	Thurman,
Barnum,	Grover,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Beck,	Harris,	McPherson,	Wadleigh,
Butler,	Herrford,	Maxey,	Wallace,
Coke,	Hoar,	Merrimon,	Whyte.
Davis of W. Va.,	Kernan,	Plumb,
Eaton,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Eustis,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—27.

Bayard,	Dennis,	McMillan,	Randolph,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Ransom,
Chaffee,	Gordon,	Morgan,	Saunders,
Cockrell,	Hamlin,	Morrill,	Sharon,
Conkling,	Hill,	Oglesby,	Shields,
Conover,	Johnston,	Paddock,	Spencer.
Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Florida,	Patterson,

So the amendment was rejected.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill to line 1153.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that last evening it was understood that where the Committee on Appropriations proposed to strike out clauses of the bill the matter should not be read in full, but a statement made by the Secretary of the lines containing the matter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Unless the reading was requested by some Senator.

Mr. HOAR. Unanimous consent was given to that course at the beginning of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. It so happens that the committee desire that the lines now reached should not be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read at length.

Mr. WINDOM. The clause was recommended to be stricken out for want of information, which has since been obtained.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out from line 1154 to line 1159, both inclusive, in these words:

To pay the American Photolithographic Company, the sum of $2,000 is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Commissioner of Patents to reimburse said company for the actual expenses it incurred in reproducing ten copies of drawings in 1869 1870.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to strike out the words just read.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask if the question is on agreeing with the committee in striking out this clause, because I understand the chairman now desires to restore it.

Mr. WINDOM. I have just so stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A negative vote on this amendment will restore the clause.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary suggests that the word "and" is wanting, to make sense. That word will be inserted after "1869," in line 1159.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1165, to insert:

For stable and building for the better preservation of stock, tools, implements, grain, &c., $1,500.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move, in line 1167, to strike out the words "grain, &c., one thousand" and insert the words "and grain, three thousand;" so as to make the committee's amendment read:

For stable and building for the better preservation of stock, tools, implements, and grain, $3,500.

This relates to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that the Senator's amendment increases the appropriation, and that it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that it is not in order. Does the Senator appeal from the decision?

Mr. PADDOCK. If the Chair will hear me, I think he will decide that it is in order.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It certainly violates the rule in increasing the appropriation.

Mr. PADDOCK. An amendment to this effect was offered by the Committee on Agriculture some days ago, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and by them considered. I do not think it has been well considered. The amendment is certainly in order, because it was referred by a committee of the Senate to the Committee on Appropriations, and by that committee considered, and the amount which had been recommended by the Committee on Agriculture, $5,000, was reduced to $1,500.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator from Nebraska will wait until the committee's amendments are acted upon, then his amendment, as coming from the Committee on Agriculture, will be in order, and he can move it, but not at this time.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will wait until that time, though I think it is in order now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, after line 1165, to insert:

For laboratory, and equipments to the same, at the Agricultural Department, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1182, after the word "lands," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty," and after the word "dollars," in the same line, to strike out:

For depredations on the public timber: Provided, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may be authorized to draw, if necessary, from the Treasury of the United States $25,000 of the fund paid into the Treasury during the fiscal year, accruing from sales, seizures, or penalties on account of public lands.

So as to make the clause read:

To meet expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $40,000.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what necessity there is for increasing this appropriation from $25,000 to $40,000?

Mr. WINDOM. It is not an increase. It is really a reduction. As the bill came from the House of Representatives, the Senator will see on examination, it appropriated $25,000, and by the proviso $25,000 additional was appropriated, to be taken from a certain fund. The committee consolidated the two propositions and made the total $40,000 instead of $50,000, on consultation with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who thought possibly he could get along with $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. That appropriation I think ought to be made immediately available.

Mr. WINDOM. It ought to be so made.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 1182, the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I offer the following amendment to come in after line 1182:

Provided, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office may make settlements with parties who have heretofore cut and removed timber from the public lands, on such terms and conditions as he may deem just, the moneys arising from such settlements to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WINDOM. I understood the Senator to say he was going to propose a mere verbal amendment. I think we had better defer this until we get through with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very well; I withdraw it for the present.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "lands," in line 1190, to strike out "two hundred and sixty-seven thousand five hundred" and insert "three hundred thousand;" and in line 1192, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be available immediately;" so as to make the item read:

For surveying the public lands, $300,000, to be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1212, to insert:

For the survey into tracts of not over one hundred and sixty acres each of that body of public lands lying west of the Indian Territory and north of the parallel of 36° 30' north latitude, $30,000. When said lands are surveyed, and the surveys thereof shall have been approved, they shall be subject to entry under the homestead and pre-emption laws at the nearest United States land office, to be designated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is an entire legislative provision, a special provision about particular lands, and then a general provision as to their general disposition under entry, and the homestead and pre-emption laws. Did it not appear to me to be a dangerous provision in this case, situated as we are, I would not make the point of order; but I feel bound to do it under the circumstances.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, the rule of the Senate being against general legislation on the bill. Does the Senator from Minnesota in behalf of the committee desire the point submitted to the Senate? ["No!" "No!"] The reading will continue.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1230, to increase the appropriation "for enabling the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys now on file, and constituting a part of the records of said office," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1245, to insert:

That in case of any claim to land in any State or Territory which has been or may hereafter be confirmed by act of Congress, and in which no provision is made by the confirmatory statute for the issue of a patent, it may be lawful, where surveys for the land have been or may hereafter be made, to issue patents for the claims so confirmed upon the presentation to the Commissioner of the General Land Office of plats of surveys thereof, approved by the surveyor general of any State or Territory, if the same be found correct by the Commissioner. But such patents shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and shall in no manner interfere with any valid adverse right to the same land, nor be construed to preclude a legal investigation and decision by the proper judicial tribunal between adverse claimants to the same land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Clearly. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire the point submitted to the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nobody wants it. If the Chair will give me unanimous consent to say one word, that provision is reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims in the form of a bill, and I think the bill is right, but it is clearly legislation and ought not to be here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has no doubt of that.

The reading of the bill was proceeded with.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1261, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for lands wrongfully taken from the owners by the act approved March 3, 1875, to establish the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country, $175,049.57: Provided, That the acceptance of such payment by any of such owners shall operate as a relinquishment of claims to said lands on the part of the owners thus accepting; and that one-fourth of whatever may be paid under this act for lands wrongfully taken south of the Arkansas River shall be paid to the proper authorities of the Chickasaw Nation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving the point of order, I should like to hear that explained a little. I think at this stage of the session I will make the point of order on that without waiting for an explanation.

Mr. GARLAND. Is the point of order debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not debatable until the Chair has decided or it is submitted to the Senate. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, but will submit it to the Senate if desired.

Mr. GARLAND. I think if the Senator from Vermont will listen to an explanation of this matter he will withdraw the objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Arkansas will pardon me one moment, I do not make it out of hostility to the nature of the provision itself, because I know nothing about it; but we have only forty-eight hours more, or thereabout, of this session with the legislative bill behind, and still more than half of this bill to go through. I submit to my friend's good sense, therefore, that if we take up the time necessary to consider and understand each one of these amendments, that make new provisions, except to carry out the law as it is, even this bill cannot get through. That is what leads me to make the point of order, and it is entirely distinct from any reference to how much merit there may be in the case.

Mr. GARLAND. I appreciate very fully the position of the Senator from Vermont, but I cannot see for the life of me under the rule under which the objection is made that this can be called in any sense general legislation. This is a provision to pay a matter that has been standing out now ever since the year 1835 between the United States and the Indian Nation as to the eastern boundary line of the Indian Nation. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont how else than by an appropriation bill can this be done? I hold in my hand the report made by the Committee on Public Lands, to which this question was first referred, and among other things there is a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, addressed to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. OGLESBY,] in which he says:

As the aforementioned quantities of land have been wrongfully taken from the Indians, I am of opinion that they should be awarded a reasonable compensation therefor, and that to this end legislation fixing the amount of such compensation is necessary.

How, let me ask the Senator from Vermont, can this reasonable compensation be awarded except by and through an appropriation bill? This is not a legislative appropriation; it is not executive; it is not judicial. Then the question is, where else is the proper place for it except the sundry civil bill? This bill, it has been admitted on the point being raised by some gentleman last night, is a general appropriation bill. Now, there are several classes of appropriation bills; and if the Senator from Vermont will tell me upon what other appropriation bill this belongs, I should be much obliged to him. There is no legislation, says the report in my hand, necessary to fix the boundary; that is already fixed by treaty and by subsequent surveys, as appears in this report, so that all that is left to be done is to award compensation for the land that fell within that boundary when it was definitely fixed by the surveys. You can award this compensation only by appropriating the money.

Now, I cannot see where else or how else this can be done except by and through this very appropriation bill. The Committee on Public Lands considered this matter maturely, and the report which I had the honor to submit from that committee was a unanimous report. Seeing that an appropriation must necessarily be made, and that it was the only way to carry out the requirements of the case, they recommended the very amendment which the Committee on Appropriations have here incorporated and which is now under discussion. After considerable inquiry and considerable investigation, I have not been able to ascertain where else is the proper place for this provision except in this bill.

Mr. President, if this is not appropriate we must go back and strike out at least one-third of the bill that has already been adopted and sanctioned by the Senate. I contend in all sincerity that this has become a chronic matter that should be settled, and settled at an early day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Arkansas kindly send me the report of the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Chapter 140 of the laws of the second session Forty-third Congress, being an act approved March 3, 1875, provided in the first section of that act that the boundary-line between Arkansas and the Indian country as originally surveyed and marked, &c., be declared to be the true boundary-line. The second section provided that the Secretary of the Interior should cause that boundary-line to be marked in a distinct and permanent manner, &c., and they were to compute the area of the land that fell on one side or the other, and cause monuments to be set up in accordance with the true line, and the old monuments in accordance with the erroneous line to be obliterated. That is all the law there is upon the subject. Now it is said—and I do not question the statement, because I know nothing about it—that the effect of this rectification of the line would be to make sundry titles that are on one side or the other—and it is no matter which for this purpose, because I must condense all I can—invalid, and that the people who were occupying under those titles, be they many or few, were entitled to some redress, to the consideration of Congress to have other lands.

Now instead of this being a bill like the hundreds of bills there are on the Calendar, to decide what is right in respect to these various occupants, whose titles have thus been disturbed, and finding out what is right, then to provide for doing it, this piece of legislation proposes to decide in the first part of the amendment that certain lands were wrongfully taken, and having been wrongfully taken, provision shall be made for ascertaining the extent of compensation to be made for them and then it shall be paid.

Mr. President, if there is anything that may be considered as general legislation covering a class of subjects, and that would be the appropriate thing for a bill, it is this.

My honorable friend from Arkansas asks where shall we do this then? I say do it as you do every subject of legislation that is on the Calendar; do it by a bill which provides either by a decision of Congress or what would be better the decision of some tribunal, to ascertain how many different persons have a just claim for indemnity in some form or other, and having ascertained the persons that have these just claims, if no appropriation were made in the same bill, as it ought to be if they were to be indemnified in money, then an appropriation on a general appropriation bill providing money to carry out that law which had thus provided for the ascertaining of the thing would be a proper item. But the trouble here is that you are proposing to determine a general question of legislation in respect of a class of persons whom the rectification of a boundary between two independent States, in the sense in which I am now speaking of the thing, has thrown upon one side of the line or the other. Why, Mr. President, I only need to state it, it appears to me, to show to my friend from Arkansas, whose interest in this matter I perfectly recognize and sympathize with, that this is just as general legislation as any single bill there is on the Calendar. If we had two or three days' time to explore the whole thing, and make adequate provision for settling all these cases justly, then there would be no more objection than there is to any log-rolling bill as it may be called, to putting in this appropriation bill all the bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the pending committee amendment in order under the twenty-ninth rule of the Senate?

Mr. DORSEY. A few years ago an act was passed directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to ascertain accurately the western boundary-line of Arkansas, and in the course of that ascertainment to learn how much land should be taken from the Choctaw tribe of Indians and added to the State of Arkansas that properly belonged to the Choctaw Nation under previous treaties and under the law establishing the western boundary-line of that State many years ago. That survey has been made; the amount of land belonging to the Choctaws has been ascertained; it has been reported to this body; the amount sold to settlers, the money received into the Treasury, all has been stated. There is no further ground to go over on this subject. All the facts that can be obtained have been laid before us, and of the one hundred and thirty thousand and odd acres of this land which belonged to these Indians, seventy-seven thousand acres have been sold by the Government at $1.25 an acre, and the money is in the Treasury. The rest of the land has either been entered upon by homestead entry or now belongs to the Government, or has been appropriated by the Government to railway companies.

I cannot understand what further information the Senate wants before passing upon this question. It is a simple question whether we are going to pay these people for the land we have taken from them and sold to somebody else and got our pay for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the pending committee amendment in order under the twenty-ninth rule of the Senate?

Mr. GARLAND and Mr. DORSEY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 36, nays 9:

YEAS—36.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is admitted as in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 34, nays 8.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move, on page 52, after line 1273, to insert:

For the fulfillment of the obligations of the United States as trustees under the treaty with the Great and Little Osage Indians, proclaimed January 21, 1867, to dispose of the lands described in said treaty at a price not exceeding $1.25 per acre, that sum of money shall be and is hereby appropriated and placed to the credit of the Secretary of the Interior which would have accrued to said trust at the date of the settlement required herein had all of the Osage lands in Kansas that have been alienated by the United States been sold at $1.25 per acre, and the proceeds disposed of as provided for by said treaty, less the sum that has been placed to the credit of said Osages in the Treasury of the United States on account of sales of said lands; and after deducting and paying the cost of survey and sale of said lands as contemplated in said treaty, and the expenses incurred by said Osages in enforcing the proper execution of said trust, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the remainder of the sum herein provided for to be passed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States.

And I ask leave to make a short statement in this connection.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator to withdraw his amendment until it is in order in point of time. It is in order neither in point of time nor in substance now.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well; but I suppose I can occupy five minutes under the rule. Mr. President, I propose—

Mr. WINDOM. Under what rule?

Mr. VOORHEES. Under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WINDOM. On what subject?

Mr. VOORHEES. On the amendment I offer.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not in order and is not debatable.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have a right to speak to that or the whole bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not comprehend the amendment. It has not been reported at the desk.

Mr. VOORHEES. I read it purposely to make some comments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be sent to the desk and reported.

Mr. VOORHEES. I send up my amendment.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota will state his point of order.

Mr. WINDOM. I stated that this amendment was out of order in point of time, but I believe there is no rule that is violated in that regard. So, waiving that, I raise the point of order that it is not recommended by any committee, and therefore is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. VOORHEES. Have I not the right to be heard a moment?

As a matter of course I state to Senators with great frankness that I would not introduce a measure of this kind had it not been very carefully considered by others besides myself. On the 16th of December, at this session, I introduced a bill to carry out our treaty with the Osage Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which my friend, the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] is chairman. Having done that, I entered into a correspondence with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to the justice of this measure. The facts in regard to this matter are as follows:

The State of Kansas was admitted into the Union by an act of Congress approved January 29, 1861. In 1867, January 21, a treaty before that time negotiated between the United States and the Great and Little Osage Indians was duly proclaimed by the President. By the second article of that treaty the Osage Indians ceded to the United States a tract of land twenty miles in width from north to south off the north side of the remainder of their then reservation, to be held in trust for said Indians, and to be surveyed and sold for their benefit, under the direction of the Commissioner of the Land Office, at a price not less than $1.25 per acre. The proceeds of such sales were, after deducting the expenses of surveying and selling, to be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said tribe of Indians.

Congress, however, utterly disregarding the provisions of this treaty, by a joint resolution approved April 10, 1869, provided that the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each township of such lands should be reserved for school purposes in accordance with the act of admission of the State of Kansas. Congress therefore withdrew from sale to purchasers and donated to the State of Kansas two sections, that is, one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of these lands, in every township in direct violation of this treaty. There is not a shadow of justification for it; and that the Indians are entitled to be credited with the proceeds of these lands is as clear as any proposition was ever made under the sun.

In correspondence with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs I received the following on this subject:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 4, 1879.

SIR: In reply to your verbal request I have the honor to state that the number of acres contained in the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections of the Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in the State of Kansas are as follows: Osage trust and diminished reserve lands in place, 447,472.55 acres; Osage trust and diminished reserve lands sold by the Government, 11,034.83 acres; making an aggregate of 458,507.38 acres, for which the Osages have received no compensation.

These figures are correct, and should be substituted for those sent you before, which were furnished in haste by the Land Office, without opportunity for verification.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
United States Senate.

I also received from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the following:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 6, 1879.

SIR: Referring to my letter to you of yesterday suggesting certain amendments to Senate bill No. 1507, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, I have the honor to say that, in my judgment, the addition of the following proviso to section 2 of said bill will answer all the purposes designed to be accomplished by said amendments, and respectfully submit the same for use in lieu thereof, as follows:

Provided, That a like settlement shall be made with the Indian civilization fund for school lands given by the United States to the State of Kansas within the limits of the Osage lands ceded in the first article of the treaty aforesaid.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. A. HAYT, Commissioner.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
United States Senate.

These and other letters were submitted by me to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Iowa, and by him examined, and I am authorized to say that he concurs with me in the statements I am making and that this is a claim of the very highest merit, the very highest dignity and obligation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I speak a moment longer?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. DORSEY. I suggest to the Senator that he present this amendment, and whatever remarks he has to make upon it he can make when the Committee on Appropriations get through with their amendments.

Mr. WINDOM. He might as well finish now.

Mr. VOORHEES. I want to justify myself—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent to the Senator from Indiana continuing his remarks?

Mr. WINDOM. For how long?

Mr. VOORHEES. Just a moment more. I do not want to seem to be intruding on the Senate. This may be regarded by the Senate as a surprise, but it should not be so considered. This matter has been considered by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the measure I present has been recommended by him and recommended by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body, but not having time to get a formal report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, I submitted it and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. I went before the Committee on Appropriations yesterday and made the statement which I have made upon the floor now, and I understood from the committee that there was not a single objection to this measure on its merits, but that it was agreed to be a measure of justice long delayed, and which ought to be provided for at the first opportunity.

We cannot afford to violate our obligations with helpless people. I hope the Senate will embrace this opportunity to do this act of delayed justice, and I appeal to the Senators upon the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations to say whether I have inaccurately stated this matter in any single particular.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to ask the Senator from Indiana is this amendment moved by any standing committee of the Senate, and has it been one day before this day referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir; it has been so referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Was it moved by a standing committee of the Senate?

Mr. VOORHEES. No; it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations through me.

Mr. WINDOM. What standing committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. None.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand this case, which has been very clearly presented by the Senator from Indiana, to be just this: the United States agreed to take from the Osage tribe of Indians, and pay for it at the rate of $1.25 per acre, a certain tract of land. After they had taken it under this agreement, they agreed, by a subsequent enactment, to give to Kansas the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections for school purposes, and they did this without giving any credit whatever to the Indians. In other words, they agreed to give a school fund to Kansas at the expense of the Osage tribe of Indians. Now this amendment certainly does not propose to take a dollar out of the Treasury for any attorney or any job, or anything of that sort. It merely says that the Osage tribe of Indians shall have credited to them on the books of the Interior Department the amount of money to which they are clearly entitled under the treaty, and it is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and, I believe, has had the general assent of every person to whom it has been presented. It is an act of simple and pure justice, in which there is no one interested except the United States to do justice, and the wards of the United States to receive justice.

Mr. WINDOM. Is the point of order debatable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is, having been submitted to the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I concur in the statement made by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Indiana in regard to this claim, but I desire to correct a seeming misapprehension on the part of the Senator from Maine in regard to the General Government, having given to the State of Kansas—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The merits are not debatable.

Mr. WINDOM. I give notice that I will insist on the enforcement of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state the real condition of the question. This amendment, if the rules of the Senate are to be observed, is not in order unless it was originally moved by some standing committee of the Senate. The Senator from Indiana admits that it was not, and the question now is, Shall it be admitted by unanimous consent?

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California objects. Does the Senator from Indiana desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. McDONALD. Do I understand that where an amendment has been submitted by a Senator and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it is not in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule does not recognize that transaction. The rule requires a standing committee originally to move the amendment, and then that it shall be referred one day, before action shall be taken upon it, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McDONALD. Unless a standing committee move an amendment does the Chair rule it out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. BLAINE. I thought the Chair submitted the point in this case to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not. The Chair asked the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] if he desired to appeal.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not want to appeal from the decision of the Chair on a point of order, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill. The Chair desires to say, in order that his ruling may be understood, that in those cases where Senators have introduced amendments and asked that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and they are adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair will not go behind the record of that committee.

Mr. McDONALD. But if not adopted by the Committee on Appropriations they cannot be offered in the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so holds, unless the particular amendment was originally introduced by a standing committee of the Senate and approved by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAINE. That is a good deal larger power than I have ever yet known belonged to the Committee on Appropriations, that their mere ipse dixit could place an amendment beyond all objection. I am glad I belong to that committee with these large powers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A standing committee can do what it pleases in the way of moving amendments. The reading of the bill will be continued.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "survey" in line 1336, to insert "of the Territories;" so as to read:

For the expenses of the geological survey of the Territories and the classification of the public lands, &c.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. SARGENT. What objection is there to this? Unless the intention is also to adopt the proposition that was made in another bill to consolidate the land surveys, the coast survey, and interior geological and geographical surveys in the hands of the Coast Survey, then these words ought to be omitted from the bill. Congress at its last session improvidently authorized a body called the Academy of Sciences to report a plan for the consolidation of the surveys; and they with a singular incongruity, showing little reflection, recommended that a body whose duties are confined entirely to the coasts and which adopts very expensive methods, necessarily on account of the nature of its work, shall be changed into an amphibious animal living upon land and water as well, that this Coast Survey shall be extended all through the interior, that it shall deal with geological and botanical questions, with paleontology and ethnology, and that the surveys, which heretofore have been made under the authority of the United States and which have made the name of American scientific exploration illustrious, shall be dispensed with and thrown over.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations do not believe in anything of the kind. One of these surveys was carried on by Dr. Hayden, very well known for the contribution it has made to the positive knowledge upon scientific subjects on behalf of the American Government, and I hold in my hand a little volume which contains publications which have been made and letters written by eminent men, showing the high estimation in which the work of this exploring expedition has been held.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a letter written by Professor Asa Gray, of Harvard University, referring to this survey. He says:

It has come in my way to know a good deal about Dr. Hayden's territorial surveys for several years past, especially as to their scientific results; and of late my attention has been still more called to them. I wish here, not only to express emphatically my own opinion of their great value and of the importance of continuing them, but also to testify to the deep impression they are making upon the scientific world. In Europe the learned societies, the scientific journals, as also the working naturalists in correspondence, speak with one accord in terms of admiration, not unminged with envy, of what our Government has done and is doing in this regard; and I observe that Dr. Hayden's survey and the resulting publications are put forward as the type and exemplar.

S. H. Seudder, late president of the Appalachian Club, testifies to the same thing, and Professor William B. Rogers, of Boston, Massachusetts; Professor Wolcott Gibbs, of Cambridge; Professor W. D. Whitney, of Yale College; Baron Von Richtofen, president of the Berlin Geographical Society; and Hon. George P. Marsh, United States minister at Rome, in a recent letter also testified to his appreciation and the appreciation of the scientists of Europe of this great survey. Sir Joseph D. Hooker, a distinguished botanist, director of the Garden of Kew and president of the Royal Society of England, gives the same testimony, and Professor A. Geikie, professor of mineralogy in the University of Edinburgh and director of the geological survey of Scotland, testifies the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What document is the Senator reading from?

Mr. SARGENT. I am reading from a book which is a collection of these views.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not a public document from which the Senator is reading.

Mr. SARGENT. It is not. It is a private document.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon. I thought I might get a copy.

Mr. SARGENT. In order to show that this estimation is general, I quote an extract from the Popular Science Review, of October, 1878, London, England:

We have once more to call attention to a long series of valuable publications issued either by the General Government of the United States or by individual States, and we do this with a certain feeling of sadness, as we have heard a rumor that, perhaps, the most important of the sources to which we are indebted for this seemingly perennial spring of a scientific literature, namely, the "geological and geographical survey of the Territories," so ably conducted by Dr. F. V. Hayden, is about to be, if not suppressed, at least considerably shorn of its means of useful work.

The work done by this survey is so exceedingly good, and the importance of accurate information upon the natural phenomena of a new country like these western Territories is so great that we cannot imagine any valid objection being raised to the continuance of its labors. We must, therefore, express a hope that no check will be put upon the activity of Dr. Hayden and his staff of assistants, and that we may still from time to time be able to announce the results of their researches.

I have not time to read more at length from this book. I have named but a small number of the persons who in America and in Europe have testified to the high scientific value of these researches in the Territories of the United States, made under the auspices of the Government. Now comes in a society which never has originated anything, which has published no original work whatever, except a volume of obituaries of some of its members, an association incorporated at its own request, made up of a few specialists, and they ask that this work be devolved upon an institution organized for a useful purpose and carrying on that purpose usefully, but incongruous in organization and methods to this work. The result of this is to be great, immense work for specialists. That can be the only effect of it, and for this we are to break up a system which has been brought to an extremely economical basis, which is producing most valuable results, and which is appreciated both at home and abroad. Among those of my constituents who ask for the publications of Congress there are none so urgent as those who desire Professor Hayden's reports. Other surveys may have their value, but none of their publications are sought for with as much avidity as those of Dr. Hayden.

I think one reason why they are valuable to the people generally is that while they are really scientific works they are written in such a popular way that they facilitate the studies of ordinary students. It is a well-known fact that the school-books of the country are largely indebted to this source for the materials which have been wrought into their text; as, for instance, the best work recently published on botany takes whole pages from the publication of Dr. Hayden, and in all the geological text-books recently edited the researches of Dr. Hayden have been brought into use.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from California, with the leave of the Senate, if the committee's amendment prevails how it leaves this survey? The Senator may now have my time.

Mr. SARGENT. If the committee's amendment prevails I understand that it will continue this survey in the manner it has been done heretofore.

Mr. DAWES. It will continue Dr. Hayden's survey?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; in the manner it has been done heretofore.

Mr. BECK. I rise to ask the Senator from California a question, if he will listen to me for a moment, for what it is worth. The Committee on Appropriations in a bill which will be before us this afternoon, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, have stricken out the second section, in reference to the whole system of surveys. Will it be necessary to restore that section in order to preserve this?

Mr. SARGENT. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BECK. I simply desire to know if the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations prevails to strike out the second section of the legislative appropriation bill, relative to the whole system of surveys, whether it will be necessary to restore, on page 55 of this bill, the lines that are stricken out, which were inserted by the House in order to carry on the present system, my desire being that if we do not have time to adopt the new system we shall not destroy the one that we have.

Mr. SARGENT. It is necessary, if the action of the committee is sustained on the legislative bill, to strike out these words. These words reverse the whole purpose of the committee.

Mr. BECK. That is all I desire to know.

Mr. SARGENT. But the present amendment is a mere formal one. After the words "the geological survey" it adds the words "of the Territories," as this survey has been hitherto called "the Geological Survey of the Territories." My impression is, however, that "the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Territories" is the designation of the present survey.

Mr. BECK. My only desire was to prevent confusion.

Mr. SARGENT. This prevents it, and at the same time preserves a valuable organization that is doing a beneficent work, appreciated by the highest scientific authorities at home and abroad. The field is ample for a continuance of the work. I think the agency of but one organization is needed, but I see no reason why, because there are more than one, the best one should be broken up, and a recommendation should be adopted that reads like a caricature on the whole subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, in the thirteen hundred and thirty-sixth line of the bill, to insert in that and the succeeding line the words "of the Territories."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. To carry the idea a little further and perfect it, I move before the word "geological," in line 1336, to insert the words "geographical and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "domain," in line 1339, to strike out the words:

Provided for under the — section of the act "making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved March —, 1879, to be expended by the director of the geological survey.

So as to read:

For the expenses of the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Territories, and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1346, to insert:

For the preparation of reports, maps, and such other illustrations as may be necessary for completing the office work of the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Rocky Mountain Region, $20,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. WINDOM. There is an error in that which I desire to correct. I move to strike out in line 1349 the words "geographical and geological" and insert "geological and geographical," transposing the words.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WINDOM. In line 1350, I move to strike out the words "Rocky Mountain region" and insert "Territories."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To which the Chair hears no objection.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1351, to insert:

For the completion of the reports of the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Rocky Mountain Region, with the necessary maps and illustrations, $20,000; to be immediately available.

Mr. WINDOM. I move the same amendment to that as the preceding clause, transposing the words "geographical" and "geological," and striking out "Rocky Mountain region" and inserting "Territories."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1355, to insert:

For the preparation of reports, maps, and such other illustrations as may be necessary for completing the office-work of the geographical surveys west of the one hundredth meridian, under the direction of the Secretary of War, $20,000; to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1379, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "seventy;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And of this sum not exceeding $1,000 may be used for transporting patients to their friends.

So as to make the clause read:

Current expenses, Government Hospital for the Insane: For support, clothing, and treatment of the insane of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Revenue Cutter Service, and of all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military or naval service of the United States, and who are indigent, and of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia, in the Government Hospital for the Insane, $170,000; and of this sum not exceeding $1,000 may be used for transporting patients to their friends.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 989) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees and commissions paid on void entries of public lands;

A bill (S. No. 1285) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for furnishing trusses to disabled soldiers," approved May 28, 1872;

A bill (S. No. 1073) granting lands to the State of Minnesota in lieu of certain lands heretofore granted to said State;

A bill (S. No. 362) granting a pension to A. G. Ege;

A bill (S. No. 399) granting a pension to Abigail S. Tilton;

A bill (S. No. 663) granting a pension to William H. H. Buck;

A bill (S. No. 687) granting a pension to William H. Bagley;

A bill (S. No. 872) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann W. Steele;

A bill (S. No. 801) to amend section 2403 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to deposits for surveys;

A bill (S. No. 889) granting a pension to John Etzell;

A bill (S. No. 929) granting a pension to Hiram Howard;

A bill (S. No. 932) granting a pension to Cornelius Le Roy;

A bill (S. No. 969) granting a pension to Mrs. N. E. Belrichards;

A bill (S. No. 971) granting a pension to William Leibig;

A bill (S. No. 996) granting a pension to Edmund Woog;

A bill (S. No. 1310) granting a pension to Edmund R. Batchelder;

A bill (S. No. 1049) granting a pension to Richard Middleton;

A bill (S. No. 1163) granting a pension to Mary E. Parker;

A bill (S. No. 1188) granting a pension to Harmon Vann;

A bill (S. No. 1189) granting a pension to Ellen Devlin;

A bill (S. No. 1214) granting a pension to Amos Argle;

A bill (S. No. 1309) granting an increase of pension to Isabella H. Silvey;

A bill (S. No. 1380) granting a pension to Josiah Kellogg;

A bill (S. No. 1419) granting a pension to Mrs. Rosa Gale;

A bill (S. No. 1509) granting a pension to John Willans;

A bill (S. No. 1625) to remove the political disabilities of William T. Welcker, of California;

A bill (S. No. 1705) granting an increase of pension to James C. Daggett;

A bill (S. No. 1723) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Jane Dunlany;

A bill (S. No. 1741) granting a pension to Elizabeth McNeil Benham;

A bill (S. No. 1742) granting a pension to Frances McNeil Potter;

A bill (S. No. 1759) granting a pension to Sarah E. Webb and minor children.

A bill (S. No. 1775) to remove the political disabilities of Isaac R. Trimble, of Baltimore County, Maryland;

A bill (S. No. 1776) to remove the political disabilities of Henry H. Lewis, of Baltimore, Maryland;

A bill (S. No. 1841) granting a pension to John McNulta;

A bill (S. No. 1844) to remove the political disabilities of S. W. Ferguson, of Mississippi; and

A bill (S. No. 1848) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Smith.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 480) granting a pension to William W. Stephenson, captain of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 491) granting a pension to Henry Brown, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 520) granting a pension to Daniel Middough;

A bill (H. R. No. 550) granting a pension to Mary A. Allen;

A bill (H. R. No. 585) for the relief of Daniel C. Putnam;

A bill (H. R. No. 698) granting a pension to Nathan Udell;

A bill (H. R. No. 830) granting a pension to Elizabeth Teagarden;

A bill (H. R. No. 846) for the relief of Thomas C. Young, late private Company F, Thirty-ninth Iowa Infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 989) granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza A. Semple;

A bill (H. R. No. 1045) to place George W. Browning on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. No. 1055) granting a pension to Samuel B. Robertson;

A bill (H. R. No. 1147) granting a pension to Catharine Brennan, widow of John Brennan, late a private in Company B, Fifty-eighth Illinois Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1842) granting a pension to Henry Grossman, late a private in Company G, One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 1959) granting a pension to John Haley;

A bill (H. R. No. 2172) granting a pension to De Forest Doty, of Timmouthe, Vermont, late a private in Company B, Ninth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (H. R. No. 2289) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria L. Maxwell, widow of William C. Maxwell, Company D, Twelfth Ohio Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2321) granting a pension to Andrew A. Gooding, of Fentress County, Tennessee;

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the report of the select committee to inquire into alleged frauds in the late elections, with the accompanying testimony, of which 800 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,200 copies for the House of Representatives.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask to have the bill which has just come from the House for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers taken up and referred to the Committee on Claims.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6512) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 55) for the relief of John W. Douglass;

An act (S. No. 290) for the relief of James D. Holman;

An act (S. No. 793) for the relief of Edwin R. Clarke; and

An act (S. No. 837) for the relief of the officers and privates of the New Mexico Mounted Volunteers.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out lines 1444 to 1454, inclusive, in the following words:

That so much of "an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1878, as is in the words following, "to pay to Charles P. Birkett the sum of $32,505.71, to reimburse the said Birkett, late United States Indian agent, for amount expended by him for the benefit of the Indians at Ponca agency, Dakota," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. BECK. After further reflection the Committee on Appropriations have requested me to propose to reinstate these words and move to add to the provision inserted by the House of Representatives, at the end of line 1454, the following:

And the said Charles P. Birkett is hereby authorized and empowered to institute and prosecute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the amount claimed by him as provided in the act aforesaid, under the rules and regulations governing proceedings in said court, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to either said Birkett or the United States, from the judgment of the Court of Claims in said case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The matter proposed to be stricken out will be restored if there is no objection. The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the text of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1457, to insert:

For the removal of the Mueche, Capote, and Weeminche bands of Ute Indians to the new reservation provided for; them under the terms of an agreement made by the United States through Edward Hatch, N. C. McFarland, and Lot M. Merrill, commissioners, and the above-named bands of Ute Indians, at Pagosa Springs, in the State of Colorado, upon the 9th day of November, A. D. 1878, and for the erection of suitable agency buildings, including residence for agent upon said new reservation, $20,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the chairman or some member of the committee where this reservation is.

Mr. DORSEY. It is a part of the old Ute reservation, that part lying south of the Rio Grande River, adjoining the north line of Mexico and east of the San Juan River, surrounding Pagosa Springs, which has been reserved by special order for this purpose, and was selected by the commissioners named in the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1500, to insert:

For a fire-proof building for the use of the National Museum, three hundred feet square, to be erected under the direction and supervision of the regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in accordance with the plans now on file with the Joint Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, on the southeastern portion of the grounds of the Smithsonian Institution, $250,000; said building to be placed east of the Smithsonian Institution, leaving a roadway between it and the latter of not less than fifty feet, with its north front on a line with the south face of the buildings of the Agricultural Department and of the Smithsonian Institution; and all expenditures for the purposes herein mentioned, not including anything for architectural plans, shall be audited by the proper officers of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "Court of Claims," in line 1531, to strike out the words "that have been or may be rendered, but have not yet been appealed from, in the event of non-appeal;" and in line 1533, after the word "hundred," to insert "and twenty-five;" so as to read:

For payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph, from line 1574 to line 1592, inclusive:

Expenses of territorial courts in Utah: For defraying the contingent expenses of the courts, including compensation of the United States district attorney, and the fees, per diem, and traveling expenses of the United States marshal in the Territory of Utah, with expenses of summoning jurors; subpoenaing witnesses; of arresting, guarding, and transporting prisoners; of hiring and feeding guards; and of supplying and caring for the penitentiary, to be expended only under the direction and order of the Department of Justice, upon accounts duly verified and certified, $20,000. And this appropriation may be used, under the direction of the said Department, to defray the judicial expenses of the supreme and district courts of said Territory; and the amount so used shall be reimbursed to said appropriation out of the treasury of said Territory; and until such reimbursement shall be fully made, no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

Mr. EATON. I desire to ask the attention of the Senate to this clause, because I think that from line 1584, after the word "dollars," to the close of the paragraph, the matter should be stricken out.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator do the committee the favor to wait until the committee's amendments are acted upon, and defer this matter?

Mr. EATON. Certainly; only I desire to go back to it when the amendments of the committee are acted upon, and I give notice that I shall move the amendment I have suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WHYTE in the chair.) The amendment is not now in order until the amendments reported by the committee are acted upon. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be reported.

The next amendment was to strike out line 1593 to line 1601, inclusive, in the following words:

That so much of the act "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1878, as requires the authorities of the county of Madison, or town of Jackson, Tennessee, to provide suitable buildings, free of any expense to the United States, for holding the United States district and circuit courts, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to appeal to the Committee on Appropriations and to the Senate to non-concur in the amendment proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply wish to say that the provision of the law requiring terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States to be held at the town of Jackson, County of Madison, was upon the condition that is recited in this amendment. In obedience to that condition the people of the County of Madison have tendered to the Federal court a room in the court-house of the county, which from personal knowledge I can say is as good a court-house as can be found within the limits of Tennessee. But the judges of the Federal courts, the circuit and district judges, decline to accept quarters in the court-house building because the State courts are held there; that is, the building the use of which was tendered to the Federal Government free of expense. The courts thus far have failed because of the fact that the circuit and district judges decline to take a room in the court-house of the county which has been tendered them. The question now is, shall the courts fail to be held there entirely because of that fact, or shall the courts at Jackson be put upon the same basis as all the other circuit and district courts in the United States in regard to the court-rooms provided by the Government? I can state to the Senate that from my knowledge of rentals in that locality, suitable quarters can be obtained at a cost not to exceed from three to five hundred dollars a year. I ask that a letter from the Attorney-General upon this exact question which I send to the Chair be reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter. The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, February 1, 1879.

SIR: At the last session of Congress (act of June 20, 1878) it was provided that a term of the district and of the circuit court should be held at the town of Jackson, in the county of Madison, Tennessee, at such times as the judges thereof should respectively fix, "whenever the authorities of said county or town shall provide suitable buildings therefor, free of any expense to the United States."

The rest of the law contemplates obviously the holding of the terms as soon as provision therefor can be made.

There seems to be a difficulty in carrying out this enactment on account of the question as to what accommodations are needed, and how long provision therefor should be made by the county or town, although attempts have been made by the county authorities and by the judges to arrange the matter.

In view of this, I would respectfully suggest that the provision "whenever the authorities of said county or town shall provide suitable buildings therefor free of any expense to the United States" should be stricken out from the law. If this is done, the necessary provision for the holding of the terms (if it is deemed necessary by Congress that they should be held at this place) can be made under the general appropriation for the judiciary fund.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Appropriations Committee, House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS. It is due to the Committee on Appropriations that I should state that the letter from the Attorney-General was not before the Senate committee. It was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the House and was not sent to the Senate. I obtained it from the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations.

I desire to say in addition simply that the present site of the Federal courts for the district of Western Tennessee is at a point one hundred and fifty miles removed from the portions of the district in which a large proportion of the litigations in that district originates. It is a great hardship to parties litigant to be compelled to carry their witnesses distances ranging from one hundred to one hundred and fifty miles in order to have their causes heard and disposed of. This court is located at Jackson with a view to accommodate that portion of the district so far removed from the present site of the court. For these reasons I ask that the clause as it came from the House shall remain, and that the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out the paragraph be rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. I make no opposition to the request of the Senator from Tennessee. The facts which he has stated and the letter of the Attorney-General were not known at the time the committee recommended the striking out of this clause. Upon the face of the clause it did not seem to be a proper thing to do to make this provision. It looked as if under the form of law it was intended to take advantage of having the court at the place, and then to be relieved from the necessity of having a place to hold it. Therefore the committee struck out these lines. I make no objection, however, to the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 1602 to 1615, inclusive, in the following words:

That the second section of an act entitled "An act to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Fort Wayne, Indiana," approved June 18, 1878, be, and the same is, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the clerk of the district court and the clerk of the circuit court for the district of Indiana, and the marshal and the district attorney for said district, shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices respectively for said courts, and the clerks of said courts and the marshal shall appoint deputies, to reside and keep their offices at Fort Wayne, and who shall, in the absence of their principals, do and perform all the duties appertaining to their said offices respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1670, before the word "fire-extinguishers" to strike out the word "portable," and in line 1671, after the word "thousand" to insert "nine hundred and twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purchase of fire-extinguishers $1,925.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry about line 1671 and possibly to offer an amendment to which I think there will be no objection. I inquire of the chairman what are the fire-extinguishers to which this appropriation refers, any in particular or some in general?

Mr. WINDOM. In answer to the Senator from New York I will say that the committee struck out the word "portable" so as not to decide as to any of them. There were quite a number of different inventions for this purpose argued before the committee, and the committee declined to decide as to any of them.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I shall offer an amendment to which I think nobody will object. I move to add at the end of line 1671 the words:

After competitive tests of such apparatus as may be presented by the agents or owners thereof.

Mr. WINDOM. That, I understand, carries out the idea of the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. So I understand. There has been some allegation that the contrary was true and I do not understand that it is, any more than the chairman of the committee does.

Mr. DAWES. This is to be under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand; he is to expend the money.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1676, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay D. T. Corbin, late contestant for a seat in the United States Senate from the State of South Carolina, his expenses of such contest, $10,000.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I do not understand the proposed amendment. I will state to the Senate that the question of compensating contestants for seats in this body has been before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the committee have adopted a rule. They have repudiated the old rule of paying contestants the amount of salary for the time they contest, and have adopted the rule, where there is a reasonable ground of contest, to pay the contestant his reasonable expenses actually incurred; and they require a contestant to produce to the committee an itemized statement of his expenses for the purpose of being satisfied that they are reasonable and correct.

We had before us the case of Mr. Joseph Segar, of Virginia, lately, where this question was discussed. My recollection is that Mr. Joseph Segar was a contestant for several years for a seat in the Senate. He claimed a large amount under the old rule, and asked for the allowance of a salary, but the committee for his several years' contest required him to present a bill of expenditures, and they finally reported the sum of a reasonable bill of expenses to the Senate, which was paid. He could not itemize very correctly, but still he did itemize his accounts and gave the committee a statement of expenses, and they passed upon it and allowed him only $5,000.

This case of Mr. Corbin has not been before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If the standing committees of the Senate are to have rules to govern their action in this body, it seems to me they ought to be respected by the Senate. I do not understand how it is that a case of this sort is taken out of the hands of the proper committee, who know all the facts, who know the character of the contest, and who know the probable amount of expenses incurred by the contestant. I do not see why that case should be taken from the proper committee and passed upon by another committee of the Senate.

Here Mr. Corbin is allowed $10,000. That would be a full salary for two years' contest. His contest really has not lasted two years; at least he has not been an active contestant for two years. The amendment provides for the payment of his expenses. I do not think that a Senator in this body will say that it is possible that his expenses could have amounted to $10,000. With the knowledge of everything that transpired before that committee, with a knowledge of all the labor involved in the contest, I must confess that it is inconceivable to me as one member of that committee that his expenses could have amounted to $10,000. If we are to have a rule let us have it. We reported Mr. Segar's case to the Senate upon that rule, and Mr. Segar was adjudged $5,000 according to that rule, and not fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, which he would have been entitled to under the rule now adopted by the Committee on Appropriations. We allowed him expenses; and that is the rule of the Senate, and I believe it is the rule of the other House. I think it is a reasonable and just rule, and it should be applied to this case as well as other cases. I submit to the Senate, are we to make Mr. Corbin an exception, and not require him to present to the proper committee who had knowledge of his case a bill of expenses; but is he to have the salary of a Senator under the name of expenses? I think not. I do not think it is right. I think this case ought to take the usual course. It ought to be referred to the proper committee; that is, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and let them investigate this question and report under the rule they have established and which has been ratified by the Senate, and which is reasonable and just in itself. Let them report, first, whether Mr. Corbin is entitled to compensation in this contest; and secondly, what is the amount of reasonable expenditure actually incurred by him in the contest.

I therefore move to lay this amendment on the table, with a view of referring the subject to the proper committee.

Mr. BLAINE. The motion to lay the amendment on the table is not debatable, but I ask the Senator from Georgia to withdraw it for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Georgia withdraw his motion?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. This matter came before the Committee on Appropriations by a reference from the desk of the Vice-President of the memorial of Mr. Corbin. In that memorial there was a general statement of his expense, which aggregated between eleven and twelve thousand dollars. He has been here constantly for two years. No one can deny that he staid here upon probable cause. He had the report, after an elaborate examination of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that he was entitled to the seat. The Committee on Appropriations, compelled to decide the case somewhat summarily, because there was not time to have the investigation made by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to which the Senator from Georgia refers, thought that, upon a fair and even balance, some $1,500 less than he claimed they would put in this appropriation bill. Those are the circumstances under which it came here. I think the Senator is mistaken in saying that Mr. Corbin has not been here two years. At all events, it is a difference of only a few days. He has been here continuously since the 4th of March, 1877, every day that Congress has been in session, and he has been here pressing for a seat to which the Committee on Privileges and Elections said he was entitled.

In that connection I desire to state another thing in reference to this case. I have received a communication from about a dozen members of the House of Representatives, of both political parties, referring to matters which probably it would not be proper to state here, the circumstances under which this bill was passed not permitting it to be amended in the House. The communication relates to the case of John D. Young, of Kentucky. Mr. John D. Young, of Kentucky, was regularly elected to the Fortieth Congress. I believe almost the entire delegation, if not all, were kept out, some of them—a portion, some of them—the whole of that Congress, on charges of disloyalty, which upon subsequent examination were not established. Mr. John Young Brown was a conspicuous instance in that Congress. Every member of that Congress from certain States was thus excluded. There was no denial that they were regularly elected; there was no denial that they had a certificate of election; there was no contest on that point at all; but they were kept out, and every one except John D. Young has been paid his compensation for that time; and when we reach the point of the bill immediately below relating to the contestants in the House of Representatives I shall move an amendment in his favor in connection with the other provisions there. I think the Senator from Georgia under the circumstances had better allow the Corbin matter to go just as it stands.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I hope we shall adhere to the rule which the Committee on Privileges and Elections has adopted. There are at times great abuses in paying contestants a full salary for two or three years. Let the case go to that committee and let them report upon it, what time he has spent, what expenses he has had, and then we can judge. I can hardly conceive that this gentleman stayed here two whole years considering what had been done in his case. But I do not say anything about the merits. I think we should adhere to the rule submitting such cases to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and let us act on their report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to say, as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that there has been no action taken by that committee in reference to any compensation to be paid to Mr. Corbin. In regard to the expenses which he has incurred, I desire to say that there never was any examination of witnesses before the committee in the case of Corbin and Butler. The case was presented upon a brief, and a single argument was made on one side by one counsel, I believe. That was the sum and substance of the case. So far as the Committee on Privileges and Elections have any knowledge, certainly this vast amount of $10,000 could not have been incurred by Mr. Corbin in his contest. A brief and an argument, which $500 would have paid for to any lawyer in the country, was all the contest which was made before the committee. There was an argument of an hour and a half in length by Governor Chamberlain and a brief made of the authorities. There was a perfect agreement on the facts. There was no witness called to establish any disputed fact whatever.

I cannot conceive how any great amount of expense could have been incurred. Perhaps Mr. Corbin was at expense in staying here and paying hotel bills, &c. The committee would have done ample justice if they had had the case before them, having a full knowledge of the facts in the case and knowing what contest had been made. I say the Committee on Privileges and Elections would have done full justice to Mr. Corbin in this matter, but it has been taken out of the possession of our committee and an arbitrary sum has been fixed by gentlemen who knew nothing about his case as the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections did, before whom the contest was made.

I shall not vote for any such sum as that proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. I would vote for a reasonable sum, because I am not prepared to say that Mr. Corbin had not some ground of contest; but for this sum I cannot vote in justice to the people of this country who pay into the Treasury the money that we take out of it.

Mr. BLAINE. The honorable Senator from Delaware fails to note, I think, that during all this time which he speaks of, only one brief being put in and one attorney appearing, Mr. Corbin was giving his entire attention to the matter. If his time was worth anything, he was devoting the whole of it to the prosecution of what he regarded as a just and proper claim to a seat in the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will allow me, I have no doubt that the matter was present to the mind of Mr. Corbin during the two years, but I do not conceive how he was giving his attention to it when his case was submitted upon a brief and upon an argument, and the question then rested with the committee. Mr. Corbin had no other matter to attend to in reference to it, for there was a perfect agreement in regard to the facts of the case. Therefore, while it may have been present in his mind, and while he may have felt an interest as to what the Committee on Privileges and Elections would do, there was no act of his required in the contest, because his whole case was in his brief and in the argument which was submitted.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Corbin has done no otherwise than is the custom with Senators and Representatives elect who come here to contest; they stay on the ground; they devote themselves to it; they consider that to be their duty. They do it in a representative capacity. It is not merely a personal matter. Mr. Corbin believed that he was elected by the rightful authority in South Carolina, and I am quite at a loss to see why $10,000 should be regarded as anything else than a quantum meruit and merely a fair compensation.

Mr. HILL. I wish the Senator from Maine to understand that I am not now fighting Mr. Corbin. I am fighting for the preservation of a rule which has been adopted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections after considerable discussion, and unanimously adopted by that committee and acted upon by the committee, upon which reports have been made to the Senate in other cases, and which has been passed upon and ratified by the Senate. The simple question is whether that rule is to be adhered to or not. We adopted that rule because we saw that there were abuses growing up on this question which ought to be corrected.

I will state what the rule is. That committee is personally cognizant of what occurred before it, of the amount of labor and expense incurred so far as the preparation of a case is concerned. That committee knows how long it was in session in the consideration of the contest, and can form a reasonable judgment of the expense incurred by Mr. Corbin. They have adopted the rule of requiring an itemized account of expenses to be presented by the contestant to the committee. For instance, in the case of Mr. Corbin, you say he is to be allowed something for attorney's fees. Very well, let him present to that committee the amount he paid his attorneys, and not leave it open for his attorneys to get unreasonable fees without their being passed upon. That committee is the best judge of what would be a reasonable fee for the counsel of Mr. Corbin; they know what service that counsel rendered, and they have an idea of what would be reasonable compensation.

So they have adopted that rule, and the simple question for the Senate is, will you adhere to that rule? Suppose you depart from it; suppose you say in Mr. Corbin's case that you will not allow the Committee on Privileges and Elections to pass upon this case according to the rule; what do you do?

I have observed in my short service in the Senate that one of the most dangerous things in this country is a bad precedent, for whenever you act in one case in violation of a rule every man who has been injured heretofore by the observance of the rule comes in for reclamation of damages, as I may call it. Take Mr. Segar's case. The testimony before that committee, according to my recollection, was that Mr. Segar had a reasonable ground for claiming a seat in the Senate, and he claimed it for several years, and was at great expense. He stayed here in Washington prosecuting his claim justly and reasonably for a much longer time than Mr. Corbin, and he claimed under the old rule that he should have $20,000. Under the rule now to be applied to Mr. Corbin's case Mr. Segar would have been entitled to $20,000. He had just as good ground for his claim as Mr. Corbin had, I think, and better under the law, for it was a legal question in his case, as it was in Mr. Corbin's. In neither case was there any dispute about the facts; it was simply a legal question. The committee, after grave consideration, refused to allow Mr. Segar the $20,000 he claimed, and they adopted the rule of paying his expenses, and those amounted to $5,000. That sum we allowed him, and that allowance the Senate affirmed and paid.

Suppose you go back and abandon the rule adopted by the committee, and Mr. Corbin's case give him what a Senator's salary would have amounted to during the time of his contest, you will have a bill for the relief of Mr. Segar here at the next session. He will say, "You did me injustice," and he will have reason to say so. He will say, "If Mr. Corbin was entitled to $5,000 a year during his contest, I ought to be entitled to $5,000 a year during my contest." There is the danger, and the Senator from Maine will see it. Now let us have a rule, or let us have no rule.

Mr. BLAINE. Yes, but the Senator leaves out the fact that Mr. Corbin is not responsible for the length of the contest. Mr. Corbin has been asking us for two years to decide it. We are the parties responsible for the delay. We, the Senate of the United States, kept him here on expense, kept him out of other business. Had we done our duty and decided his case promptly, practically there would have been no expense about it; but after we kept the man here dangling by the eyelids for two years, unable to prosecute any other business, subjected continually to expense by our delay, it does not sound to me very gracious to turn around and say, "You ask pay for this time. For what time?" He replies, very justly, "For the time that you have kept me outside at your doors." There is the point in the case.

Moreover, the Senator will remember that it was only on Wednesday last that this case was finally decided. The kind of reference that he speaks of to the Committee on Privileges and Elections is not a practicable thing for this session. If this is not settled this session, then Mr. Corbin is remitted to the long list of hopeless claimants; it becomes an old thing; it is not worth prosecuting, and the money he will get at the end will not pay the expense of staying here for it. If you ever intend to do the man any justice, do it now.

Mr. HILL. I am willing to do Mr. Corbin justice now, but I insist that Mr. Corbin's case shall be governed by the rule. The Committee on Privileges and Elections can pass upon this case in fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HILL. My time was taken up by other Senators; it was not used by me, and I did not know that I was being interrupted in my own time.

Mr. DORSEY. I desire to say a single word. I am sure the Senator from Georgia has no wish to treat Mr. Corbin unfairly.

Mr. HILL. None in the world.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator from Georgia will remember the facts, he will agree with me that under no state of the case could the Committee on Privileges and Elections have passed upon this account before this bill was reported to the Senate after the vote was taken on Mr. Corbin's case. When Mr. Corbin found he could not be admitted to the seat to which he thought he was elected, and to which a majority of the committee, of which the Senator from Georgia is a member, thought he was entitled, he then applied to be paid, not his salary as the Senator suggests, but his actual expenses. He asked to be paid his actual expenses. He could not submit that account to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, because such was the work of the session that it could not go to them; it was a thing that could not be done.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like to ask my colleague a question. The payment proposed to Mr. Corbin is for expenses incurred, $10,000. The House of Representatives have sent over a list on pages 69 and 70 of this bill of a good many contestants, many of whose contests occupied two years, and in no case does the sum to be paid exceed $4,000 for expenses and salary. Some of these contestants came all the way from the State of Colorado and the State of California and other distant points. I want to do Mr. Corbin justice, and I believe I am competent to do it if I know the facts; but will my colleague or some member of the Committee on Appropriations give me the basis by which a conclusion is arrived at so different in the case of the Senator contestant, Corbin, and these various contestants in the House, as reported on pages 69 and 70?

Mr. DORSEY. Of course the Committee on Appropriations of this body had none of the evidence before it on which the committee of the House passed upon the bills of its own members. We did have, however, a statement of expenses in great detail from Mr. Corbin, showing that he had paid over $12,000 in lawyer's fees, personal expenses, and other things in connection with this contest. We cut that down to $10,000, and we thought that was a right and proper sum to be paid. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not insist on his motion to lay this amendment on the table.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to answer one word in reply to the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND.] Will the Senator yield to me a single moment?

Mr. DORSEY. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Arkansas asks why so much less is paid to the contestants in the House. He will observe that what is paid to parties in the House in almost all these cases is to the sitting member who was seated, and who gets all the pay for the two years, besides the amount that is allowed in the bill. Take the case of Mr. SHELLEY; take the case of Mr. WIGGINTON; take the case of Mr. FINLEY; take the case of Mr. Bisbee, of Florida, who lost his seat only last week; they give him in addition to his pay $4,000 for expenses.

Mr. GARLAND. Do I understand the Senator to say that the entire list is of that sort?

Mr. BLAINE. No; but the great majority is, and the other list is shorter, where the contests were decided early, where the expense of delay was not incurred. The Senator will observe that a large majority of that list is for expenses allowed in addition to the entire salary for the Congress.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the Senator from Maine designate one or two of the exceptions?

Mr. BLAINE. I will designate an illustrious Representative from Alabama: "Jere Haralson, $2,500."

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine said that Mr. Corbin has been engaged in this contest since the 4th of March, 1877. On the 30th day of November, 1877, Senator BUTLER was sworn in. What business had Mr. Corbin about here from that day to this? The testimony was submitted, the arguments were made; then, what business had Mr. Corbin here from November 30, 1877, to the present time? None at all. Again, from the 4th day of March, 1877, to November 30, 1877, was almost nine months. If you were to give him the whole of his salary during that length of time it would be only $3,750; yet we are here asked to allow him $10,000. Again, I understand that one of the items in this claim of Mr. Corbin is $5,000 for personal expenses. How could his personal expenses in that length of time have been $5,000? Perhaps he may have paid his board. Well, he would have had to pay his board if he had been in South Carolina or anywhere else.

Again, right in this very bill, as was referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. GARLAND,] there are allowances for twenty-five contested cases in the House of Representatives, and for the whole twenty-five there is only allowed a little over $40,000, whereas it is proposed to give to this man $10,000, which is more than his salary would have amounted to up to the present time if he had been seated on this floor.

Mr. DORSEY. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HEREFORD. For a second, but not very long. I have only five minutes.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator will be good enough to look at the names in the list of House contests he will see that they are sitting members who are to get this sum in addition to their regular pay.

Mr. HEREFORD. That is not true. The Senator from Arkansas is mistaken. Is Mr. Tillman, one of the parties in the list of the House of Representatives contestants, who has been allowed $2,000, a sitting member? Certainly the Senator from Arkansas must know he is not. Is Mr. Pacheco, from the State of California, a sitting member? Certainly he is not a sitting member.

Mr. SARGENT. He did sit for months, however.

Mr. HILL. And Jere Haralson.

Mr. HEREFORD. Is Mr. Belford, from the State of Colorado, a sitting member? Certainly not.

Mr. DORSEY. If the Senator wants an answer, I can give it to him.

Mr. HEREFORD. I have not time just now. Is Richardson a sitting member? Certainly not. So I could go over this list and show others. Frost has never taken his seat. Therefore the statement of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] and the statement of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DORSEY] is not sustained by the facts. If it were sustained by the facts, what is the difference? If you were simply proposing to pay this man what his necessary expenses were, that I am in favor of. If he paid an attorney's fee, let him bring the receipt or evidence of the attorney that he paid him a certain amount; and if it was a reasonable amount, I say refund it to him. Any other reasonable expense he was at I say refund it to him; but do not make a donation to him; do not give to him a bounty out of the money of the people. I think it is high time that we should have retrenchment somewhere in this bill, and stop with your Fassett pictures and your bonuses to Corbin, and let us have a little economy.

Mr. HILL. I will withdraw my motion to lay the amendment on the table. I want to satisfy the gentlemen on the other side that I have no desire in the world but to do Mr. Corbin justice, and I think more than justice. My object has been to preserve the rule. I do not think it respectful to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to treat a case of this kind in this way and to treat the committee in this way.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. HILL. I do not want to be interrupted. I was knocked out of my time before.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the question of order that the Senator from Georgia has spoken twice; and I do it with great respect to him.

Mr. HILL. I rose to change my motion, and upon that I am entitled to the floor. I withdrew my motion to lay the amendment on the table, and now I move to strike out "ten" and insert "five" before "thousand."

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. HILL. The Senator need not interrupt me, for I shall be in order, and I hope he will not take up my time. Every word said by the Senator from Maine in behalf of Mr. Corbin would be more appropriate and could be more forcibly said in behalf of Mr. Segar, if he were to come here and ask the Senate for $15,000 additional pay, for Mr. Segar was kept here three or four years and only got $5,000, and he had to employ lawyers and incur many expenses. He was kept here for several years after the term for which he claimed to be elected expired, and he only got his pay at this session of Congress, although he claimed a seat during the war. I think the rule ought to be adhered to. I think Mr. Corbin ought to have his expenses, and no more than reasonable expenses, paid.

But, sir, in order to show that I am liberal to Mr. Corbin and that I agree with what the Senator from Maine says, that whatever he is to be paid he ought to be paid now; that it is better that he should, that it is right he should, as we only allowed Mr. Segar $5,000 for four years, I think it is liberal to allow Mr. Corbin $5,000 for two years, and that is $1,000 more than any member of the House is to receive who has contested for as long a time. Jere Haralson has contested and is only to receive $2,500. He never had his seat, and reasonably he was put to just as much expense as Mr. Corbin. As a matter of compromise and to show a disposition to be liberal in this matter and not to be niggardly, and in order to have some respect for the rule adopted by the Senate, I shall do more than I think ought to be done; I move to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so as to pay Mr. Corbin $5,000.

Mr. HOAR. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia proposes to strike out "ten," in line 1650, and insert "five."

Mr. HOAR. The question has never been stated from the Chair until this moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has just moved the amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I do not think there is much force in the point made by the Senator from Georgia. The Senate has not adopted a rule that all questions relating to the compensation to be paid to contestants shall be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That committee, it is true, has adopted a rule that when a question of compensation is referred to it it will recommend to the Senate that the contestant be paid his reasonable expenses. In this case Mr. Corbin presented a paper to the Senate through the Vice-President. In that paper he asked to be compensated. That paper by the Senate was not referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Committee on Appropriations heard the case. Mr. Corbin presented to that committee a statement of his expenses, and the committee upon that statement inserted this amendment in the bill.

The rule of the Senate as to compensation up to and including the Pinchback case was to pay the full salary and mileage. The only case passed upon by the Senate since that time was the Segar case. The rule to which the Senator from Georgia has referred has been strictly complied with in this case. A committee of the Senate, the Committee on Appropriations, as competent to pass upon the question as any other committee of the Senate, has reported that Mr. Corbin's reasonable expenses are $10,000. I think myself that the amount is not at all extravagant, and I shall very willingly vote for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If it was stated that there was an account rendered, itemized, giving all the expenditures, the case would be different. The Senate has no information as to what the expenses are. The Committee on Appropriations may be in possession of the statement of expenses incurred by Mr. Corbin, but there has been no exhibit to this body of what those expenses were. I join in the remark of the Senator from Georgia that there has not been the respect paid to the Committee on Privileges and Elections that it is entitled to in relation to this matter. The memorial of Mr. Corbin, instead of being referred to the Committee on Appropriations, ought to have been referred to the appropriate committee. If I occupied the position which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. WADLEIGH] holds as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I should seek to vindicate the rights of that committee to the courtesy of the Senate. The Senator from New Hampshire doubtless is too amiable and too modest as the chairman of that committee to insist upon the observance of its rights, but as a member of that committee, not having the responsibility of its management which the Senator from New Hampshire has, I take it upon myself to say with the Senator from Georgia that there has been discourtesy in referring the case to the Committee on Appropriations rather than to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to which it properly belonged.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, after what has fallen from my friend, the Senator from Delaware, perhaps I should say a word. I do not complain, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections so far as I know have no good reason to complain, of the reference of the case to the Committee on Appropriations, and for this reason: I myself, and I presume the rest of the committee, and my friend from Georgia, I presume from the amendment which he has offered, are aware of the hardship to which claimants are subjected who are compelled to come here year after year and prosecute these claims. The Segar case to which reference has been made is one in point.

For the purpose of having justice, and speedy justice, done to this claimant, I myself should have preferred that the memorial should go to the Committee on Appropriations, because we all know that if it had been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections that committee could only have reported by resolution; that resolution would have gone upon the Calendar; it could not possibly have been reached, and there would have been no result at this session, and Mr. Corbin, who, as I understand, has been nearly impoverished by this contest, would have been forced to hang around the Senate for years perhaps before getting the compensation which everybody admits he should have.

Now a word as to the rule upon which the Committee on Privileges and Elections have acted. As I understand the rule laid down by the Senate in the resolution, and the rule adopted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in accordance with that resolution, it is that a suitable compensation shall be made for the reasonable expenses incurred in the prosecution of his claim by the contestant. What evidence went before the Committee on Appropriations I do not know. It struck me before a conversation which I had with the chairman of that committee that this amount was too high, but I am assured by him that upon the evidence presented to that committee, and evidence which they found conclusive to act upon, not to republican members of that committee alone but to some others, they agreed that this amount was none too large.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from New Hampshire is perfectly aware of this whole case, and I put to him the question, from his knowledge of the facts, does he believe that $10,000 is a reasonable sum to be paid in this case, and does he not believe that $5,000 would be ample?

Mr. WADLEIGH. I have just said what my idea was before conversing with the gentlemen to whom the evidence was presented. I have seen no evidence of what the expenses have been. I am well aware that he has incurred a great deal of loss on account of the contest.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator if he does not know that the Committee on Privileges and Elections would have been the best judge of the correctness of that bill of expenses?

Mr. WADLEIGH. That may be so; but to that committee this memorial was not referred. It went to another committee, and the only committee that could report upon it with any result at this session. Inasmuch as I am assured that this amount is not too large, and that the evidence before the committee justifies this amendment, I am inclined to support it. Of course if it does not succeed I shall support the amendment offered by my friend from Georgia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Frequent reference to the Appropriations Committee and the evidence, or what has been called evidence, that was before it, has been made by different Senators. It will be recollected by the Senate that there were two days to consider this entire bill in the Appropriations Committee. There were probably two hundred cases referred to it, and many of them were rejected. This one had perhaps two or three minutes devoted to it. A bill of items was read, in which I think just two or three items were specified, traveling expenses, board, and attorney fees, amounting to $10,000. That was about the way, according to my recollection, it came before the committee. The case was not, as I understand, referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Senator nor through the Senate. It was sent directly to the Appropriations Committee, as I understand it, and I shall be glad to be corrected if I am wrong. At least, since then the memorial was read from the desk, having been laid before the Senate by the Vice-President and referred to that committee.

As to the amount, this is not the full amount that was asked, it is true. As to the consideration given by the Committee on Appropriations, all the time that the committee had to give to it was very limited indeed. I will state further that the amendment does not come from that committee as a unanimous report. I do not want to take the time of the Senate, for I think we ought to get along a little faster with the bill.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I did not desire to say a word, but as allusion has been made to the amendment not being a unanimous report from the Committee on Appropriations I wish to say now that I voted for it in the committee, and I will state the ground upon which I supported it.

Mr. Corbin had come here with the certificate of his governor and Legislature. He presented a very able brief, which I have read. He had obtained the favorable report of a majority of the committee to which the election contests of this body are sent. He was a member of the dominant party here. I supposed that he had every reason to believe that he would be sworn in and admitted as a member; and that there was not an hour nor a day, being a member of the dominant majority here, with a report of a majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of this body in his favor, that he had not a right to believe that he ought to be in attendance on this contest. It has lasted two years lacking two or three days, and I supposed the whole time of the man was taken up here in attending to the contest, and being wholly unable to attend to anything else, and that if he was fit to be elected and sent to the Senate of the United States, having all those inducements with all those reports at his back and supported as strongly as he was, it seemed to me that he was entitled in one way or another to be paid this. I did not go into detail, and I do not know about the employment of lawyers, but knowing that he was in the same humiliated position that every contestant is placed in, hanging around the lobby and paying all the expenses necessarily incident to a man who is obliged to hang around Washington, I thought $10,000 was not too much according to the rule adopted heretofore.

I may be wrong about it, but looking at it from that stand-point, this question coming to us as it did in the last days of the session, for I confess until the last moment I was not sure that the contestant would not be any day seated in the Senate in the place of the present sitting Senator from that State, the man through those two years being here under all those circumstances, watching this contest, paying lawyers, paying tavern and hotel bills, and all the other expenses of hanging around here all the time, I could not see that he could get along with less than the amount named.

Mr. HILL. I will only say in response to the Senator from Kentucky that if after half a dozen cases we set aside the rule adopted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections after great debate and open this subject again, it will justify any contestant hereafter in claiming a salary.

Mr. BECK. I was not aware of any rule about it. No account was presented to us.

Mr. HILL. That very reason shows conclusively that this matter ought not to have been referred to another committee, but that it ought to have been referred to the regular committee.

Mr. BECK. It was not referred to me. I should have been very glad to have got rid of it.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state in this connection that I oppose the placing of this amendment on this bill on the ground mentioned by the Senator from Georgia, that in the case of Mr. Segar, whose contest as a claimant for a seat had been before this body for many years, the Committee on Privileges and Elections fixed upon a certain sum which they thought was sufficient to reimburse him for the expenses of the contest, and it was declared in open Senate that their purpose was hereafter to adhere to that rule in estimating the amount to be paid to contestants. In consonance with that view, the Senate voting $5,000 in his case, I thought the precedent then established should be applied to the case under consideration, and I favored, therefore, voting the same amount to Mr. Corbin.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Committee on Privileges and Elections recommended the Senate to establish the rule of paying contestants not a salary for services in the Senate, but their reasonable expenses for making contest. This gentleman's memorial was referred by the Senate to the Committee on Appropriations. It was referred in full Senate. The Senator from Ohio, on the other side of the Chamber, [Mr. THURMAN,] called the attention of the Senate to the fact that it was a memorial of a peculiar character, and thereupon in full Senate, the attention of the Senate being called to it, the Senate selected a particular committee to which to refer it. No member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections then objected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will allow me to say—

Mr. HOAR. I ask not to be interrupted, because I have only two or three minutes. No member of the committee then objected. Some members of that committee knew of the reference at that time. I do not know how many; and it has remained under that reference for two or three days. Now the Committee on Appropriations come back to us and say that they have acted upon and carried out the rule, that they have investigated the question, what were this man's reasonable expenses; that they have reported a sum about $1,500 less than he thought his reasonable expenses were; and that they are satisfied that sum is a very moderate allowance of those reasonable expenses. I never heard that in either branch it was the custom to go behind the finding of such a committee as to what was the reasonable expense of conducting a great lawsuit or a small lawsuit. We send to the Court of Claims questions of claims against the Government because the Senate itself cannot possibly inquire into those things, and yet, I suppose, it would not be disrespectful or unbecoming to say that the capacity of the Committee on Appropriations, the principal committee with one or two exceptions, and those exceptions certainly not superior in rank, is a tribunal of far higher character than the Court of Claims.

If the Senate proposes to go behind the finding of that committee and inquire how much Mr. Corbin paid for his washing, and how much he paid for his board, and how much he paid his printer, and how much he paid his lawyer, it is the duty of the Senate to do the same thing as to every one of the numerous claims of the same kind that come from the House. It is a question of jurisdiction, of duty. The Committee on Appropriations have said, without any minority report, on their responsibility, that they have examined this claim and applied the rule of the Senate to it; and it would be a very gross case indeed which would warrant me in denying my confidence to such a report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] to strike out "ten," and insert "five" so as to read $5,000.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 22, noes 23.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WADLEIGH. On the last division I forgot that I was paired with the Senator from Texas, [Mr. COKE,] who was called from the Chamber a few minutes ago, and I should not have voted.

Mr. BECK. The motion is now on fixing the amount at $5,000?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. BECK. I shall vote for that amendment, although I shall vote for giving Mr. Corbin $10,000 if the amendment now pending is rejected.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when Mr. COKE's name was called.) The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] is absent from the Chamber, and is paired with me. If present, he would vote for the amendment of the Senator from Georgia and I should vote against it.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 31: as follows:

YEAS—27.
Bailey.	Eustis.	Jones of Florida.	Morgan.
Bayard.	Garland.	Kernan.	Saulsbury.
Beck.	Gordon.	Lamar.	Voorhees.
Cockrell.	Grover.	McCreery.	Wallace.
Davis of W. Va.	Harria.	McPherson.	Whyte.
Dennis.	Hereford.	Maxey.	Withers.
Eaton.	Hill.	Merrinton.
NAYS—31.
Allison.	Conkling.	Kellogg.	Patterson.
Anthony.	Conover.	Kirkwood.	Rollins.
Blaine.	Dawes.	McMillan.	Sargent.
Booth.	Dorsey.	Matthews.	Saunders.

Bruce.	Edmonds.	Plumb.	Thurman.
Butler.	Howe.	Randolph.	Wadleigh.
Cameron of Pa.	Ingalls.	Ransom.
Coke.	Johnston.	Sharon.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry. Upon reflection I think the Senate is laboring under a mistake. The statement has been made, reiterated, and great stress laid on it by the Senator from Massachusetts, that the memorial of Mr. Corbin was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I am informed that it was never so referred, but was laid on the table, and that if it got before that committee at all it got there without being referred. I do not think the Senate should act without understanding that fact. I do not know about it myself; I was not here when the paper was presented.

Mr. BLAINE. I was not here either, but I knew the memorial was before us, and the general presumption was that it was sent there by the Senate. We do not pick up stray pieces of paper to consider; we take up that which is sent to us.

Mr. HILL. I hope the record will be looked up, for I understand it was not referred by the Senate. If a motion had been carried to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, thus going over the head of the only committee that knew anything about it, I should have asked to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If we are to have a Committee on Privileges and Elections it is to consider such matters. I understand this memorial, as it is called, was not so referred, but was laid on the table.

Mr. HOAR. The memorial was presented and a comment made on it by the Senator from Ohio—

Mr. HILL. And on his motion it was laid on the table.

Mr. HOAR. The statement was made in debate that it had been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I understood it so from the debate.

Mr. HILL. It was laid on the table, and not referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the fact. The Chair directed it to be laid on the table, if the Senator alludes to the communication that came in yesterday morning addressed to the Senate. It was laid upon the table by order of the Chair.

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir; that is what I referred to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I be allowed one word? The Committee on Appropriations had acted upon it before it was laid before the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. It was not the one presented here yesterday morning that we acted upon. This was decided in committee the day before.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And it has been presented to the Senate since then.

Mr. HILL. I respectfully suggest that the Senate ought not to act on the proposition in this shape. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. DORSEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposition is not debatable. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. LAMAR. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw a vote I gave which was cast inadvertently. I understand my colleague [Mr. BRUCE] is away. I was paired with him. So I should not have voted on the last call of the roll.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.]

The yeas and nays were ordered on the question of laying the amendment on the table, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this matter I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.]

The call of the roll was concluded.

Mr. LAMAR. On this vote I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.]

Mr. BECK, (after having voted in the negative.) I change my vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. VOORHEES, (after having voted in the negative.) I was governed in the vote I gave a moment ago by the considerations suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] As he has changed his vote, I change mine. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Barnum,	Eaton,	Hill,	Morgan,
Bayard,	Fustis,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Beck,	Garland,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Gordon,	McCreery,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Grover,	McPherson,	Wallace,
Davis of West Va.,	Harris,	Maxey,	Whyte,
Dennis,	Hereford,	Merrimon,	Withers.

NAYS—32.

Allison,	Conover,	Kellogg,	Patterson,
Anthony,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Sargent,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Matthews,	Sanders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hamlin,	Mitchell,	Spencer,
Chaffee,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Teller,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Oglesby,	Wadleigh,
Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Paddock,	Windom,

ABSENT—16.

Bailey,	Cameron of Pa.,	Johnston,	Randolph,
Booth,	Davis of Illinois,	Lamar,	Sharon,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	McDonald,	Shields,
Butler,	Howe,	Plumb,	Thurman.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HILL. I want to put the facts right. It has been so often stated that this memorial was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that they were therefore authorized by the Senate to examine it and had examined it by authority, that I want now to present the facts which I have before me. Yesterday this letter of Mr. Corbin was read to the Senate, and from the RECORD this morning, page 61, I will read what occurred. After the letter was read the following occurred:

Mr. THURMAN. To whom is that paper addressed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the Senate of the United States.

Mr. THURMAN. It is a very singular paper, I must say. I am half disposed to move that it be returned to the man who sent it here; but I make no motion about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will lie upon the table.

Mr. BECK. When we considered this question about Mr. Corbin a day or two ago in the Committee on Appropriations, I supposed the whole matter had been referred to us regularly. I was not upon the subcommittee that considered this bill; but all these matters were laid before the full committee, and I supposed they were all before us regularly. If they were not, I shall vote against this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair stated the fact precisely as the Senator from Georgia has read it from the RECORD in relation to the communication that came in yesterday morning. He knows nothing of any other.

Mr. KERNAN. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in this memorial there is not a word said about expenses except that he has been at great expense, but there is no sum named. I read it just now in the RECORD.

Mr. MERRIMON. I want to say before the vote is taken that the Senate is about to set a precedent directly in the teeth of that set in the Segar case. I was one of the subcommittee that examined that case and joined in suggesting that an allowance be made to him under the rule established then that a contestant should be allowed his reasonable expenses and no more. That rule did not embrace arbitrary expenses on his part, whether they were expenses for counsel or expenses for staying at hotels or in any other respect. It meant what in the judgment of the Senate would be reasonable expenses for the contest made, all the circumstances considered.

I have the bill of expenses in Segar's case. They run up to the amount of $15,000, and they were incurred in a period of time embracing five years. At one hotel, the Ebbitt House, his hotel bill was $3,062. Here is his petition, here are the arguments of his counsel. He insisted that he was duly elected, and that he was entitled to be paid the salary of a Senator, but upon consideration the Committee on Privileges and Elections were of opinion that $5,000 ought to pay his reasonable expenses, and recommended that sum. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] was instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make a report of the action of the committee to the Senate. He made that report, and it was printed, and the rule agreed upon by the committee was suggested as a just and reasonable rule that ought to be accepted and acted upon by the Senate. The Senate accepted the report and made the allowance, thereby giving its express and direct sanction to the rule adopted by that committee.

It is proposed here now, without any inquiry as to the expenses, without it even being suggested that $10,000 was a reasonable amount to pay the reasonable expenses of Mr. Corbin, that he may be allowed that sum arbitrarily.

Mr. CONKLING. Is not the Senator mistaken in his last statement? It has been stated here that an account was presented amounting to more than twelve, I think thirteen thousand dollars, and the committee before which the matter was presented did fix $10,000 as the sum the committee deemed reasonable. So I think it has been stated.

Mr. MERRIMON. The members of the committee around me here said there was no account, and this memorial does not state any account.

Mr. DORSEY. I am sure the members of the Committee on Appropriations around the Senator from North Carolina will not say there was not an account presented and read in the committee repeatedly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That calls for an explanation, as I am near the Senator from North Carolina. He misunderstood what I said to him. I said there was no account sent there through the Senate. My recollection is that among the items on that account were five or six thousand dollars for personal expenses; $5,000 for counsel fees; and one or two other little items. However, why is not the account brought here if there is a question about it?

Mr. BLAINE. Why did the honorable Senator from North Carolina lay down the Segar case as the one rule of faith and practice for the Senate? Because it happens to be the last. Take Pinchback's case. You gave him $15,000 or $20,000. These cases have been settled as they came up by the merits of each when laid before the Senate; and when the honorable Senator from North Carolina attempts to quote the Segar case as a rule which the Senate has laid down to be applied to all cases, he is stretching it far beyond the intendment of the vote in that case.

Mr. MERRIMON. Ever since I have been in the Senate there has been a contest over every case that has come up as to what ought to be the rule adopted by the Senate; and in Segar's case, after much consideration and inquiry, the committee recommended to the Senate that rule, and it was regarded as a permanent precedent at the time. I so regarded it, and so did the committee, as has been stated by various Senators.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the rule?

Mr. MERRIMON. The reasonable expenses incurred by the contestant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to say just one other word. Suppose a bill of expenses was presented by the contestant, Mr. Corbin, for $12,000, I put it to any reasonable man in the Senate whether it is not manifest that that amount is unreasonable? Every lawyer knows that it is a sum unnecessary by 50 per cent.

Mr. SARGENT. If any such rule was adopted by the committee, it did not come to the knowledge of the Senate.

Mr. MERRIMON. Certainly it was brought to the knowledge of the Senate in the report made by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. SARGENT. I remember participating in the debate in the case of Segar, and the debate turned entirely on the question whether he was ever elected to the Senate or not; and a great many Senators, a minority of the body it happened, did not believe he was. If there has been any rule at all, it has been expressed in resolutions heretofore adopted, and I refer to the case of Sykes, from Alabama, where the Senate expressly provided to pay him "compensation equal to that of a Senator from the 4th of March, 1873, to May 28, 1874," one year and eighty-six days, amounting to $6,178.08; and if Sykes's contest had lasted longer and run two years it would have been $10,000. The same thing was done in the case of Pinchback. He was given compensation not for actual expenses; and I believe both of these resolutions came from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. He was not given actual expenses, but "compensation equal to that of a Senator from the 4th of March, 1873, to May 8, 1876," amounting to $15,068.50.

In other words, the Senate has provided by the terms of the resolutions it has adopted in times past, not that a man shall be paid his actual expenses, not that he shall be paid a round sum, but that his compensation shall be equal to that of a Senator; and I suppose the principle is that a person who comes here and contests a seat, being considered fit to be a Senator, (and the three persons named, Mr. Corbin, Mr. Sykes, and Mr. Pinchback, or some of them at least, had the report of a committee at their back,) his time being as valuable as that of a Senator of the body, his expenses would be as great, and, indeed, greater, because he may have to employ counsel, which Senators do not have to employ in order to procure or maintain their seats. That rule seems to have been well considered by the Senate and acted upon in these cases after debate, after full consideration, and it is a just rule in every sense.

I should like to make one further remark in this connection. Where two gentlemen come forward, claiming to be elected to this body from one State, and there is a great doubt in the minds of Senators whether either of them was elected, whether there was regularity in either case—and certainly it must be admitted that in the case of Mr. Corbin the regularity was as great and the quorum was as fair that elected him, the election was as sound and substantial as in the other case at least—then it seems to me extremely ungenerous on the part of the friends of the man who has prevailed that they shall reverse a well-considered rule like this I have mentioned to the Senate, and to the disadvantage of the other party, that they shall say that he shall not have at least the pittance which heretofore the Senate in numberless cases has given to other persons occupying such a position.

I have no doubt, speaking for myself, that the judgment of the Senate was wrong in seating Mr. Butler and depriving Mr. Corbin of his place; and I believe that that is the intelligent opinion of a very large number of people in this country; and it does not come graciously to say that this man shall not have the amount which is ordinarily given to a contestant on the part of those who have succeeded in keeping him from his seat. I will not throw any reproaches, but I simply say that it would be very much more graceful and handsome on the part of my friends on the left if they would concede these expenses to Mr. Corbin.

Mr. BLAINE. One word. The Senator from North Carolina and several Senators on that side of the Chamber, have brought up the Segar case as the precedent by which all subsequent cases shall be settled. Now, so far from the Segar case being a precedent, it is one which perhaps never can have any parallel hereafter. Segar was not here contesting the right of any man who was sitting in a seat. Segar was not here opposing any other man's rights to be seated. Not only that, he was here during a period of time when, in the judgment of the Congress of the United States, Virginia was not entitled to representation in either branch of Congress. His contest was not against a man; his contest was against a condition of affairs at that time, growing out of the rebellion and out of the war; and in order to quote that for a precedent, you will have to have another rebellion and another war, and another disestablishment of Virginia, and another Joseph Segar election under those circumstances. You are applying, in other words, for a precedent a case that has no parallel, and that in the history of the country I hope will never be again repeated. There is no parallel in the cases at all.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina has spoken once. Is there unanimous consent that he may proceed?

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not know why I cannot speak twice if I wish.

Mr. President, I repeat what I said a moment ago, that in Segar's case the whole subject of what should be the rule was gone into, and after discussion by the committee the Senator from Massachusetts was instructed to prepare a report, and he prepared an able report, which was submitted to the Senate, suggesting this rule, and the allowance was based on that rule. The Senate accepted the report and made the allowance.

Reference has been made to Pinchback's case. I well remember the long and earnest debate over that case, and I believe it was almost uniformly conceded by every Senator who spoke on that subject that the right rule and the just rule was the payment of the reasonable expenses of the contestant, and I well remember a very able speech made by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] in which he contends that that was the reasonable and just rule. The extravagant allowance made to Pinchback was upon the ground mainly that he was a colored man and that it was not wise to make the first precedent in his case. The allowance made to Sykes was made by way of a set-off for the extravagant allowance given to Pinchback. The whole democratic side voted against those allowances, which were coupled together.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of appealing to Senators to vote on this question.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator will permit me a word; he knows I do not occupy much time. I merely wish to say one word in reply to the Senator from Maine, who stated that Segar's case was peculiar, inasmuch as there was no State of Virginia entitled at that time to representation.

Mr. BLAINE. In the judgment of Congress.

Mr. WITHERS. He is inattentive to the fact that the same Legislature which elected Mr. Segar, and from which he presented his credentials, was the identical Legislature which gave its assent to the thirteenth amendment, without which it could not have passed.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator to indulge me for a single moment before I take my seat to say that there are twenty-four pages of this bill which, under the rule adopted for its consideration, need not be read; so that there are only some twenty-four or twenty-five pages left, and they do not involve many difficult questions. Now, if the Senate would only forego debate at length on this question, I am sure we could pass this bill and the legislative bill, unless the political debate shall extend some time, before we adjourn to-night; and if that can be done I think I can assure the Senate, upon consultation with other committees, that the business of the session can be completed. If that cannot be done, and if we are to indulge in lengthy debate upon such propositions as this, it will not be done, and a special session will be a necessity. Now, I want to appeal to Senators to consider that matter, and if possible to let us proceed with this bill, so as to complete both it and the legislative bill before we adjourn to-night. I am sure it can be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the pending amendment from the Committee on Appropriations, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAMAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. BRUCE.]

Mr. MORRILL, (when his name was called.) On this vote I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. HARRIS.] If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea." I do not vote.

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when his name was called.) The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] was just now called to the other House on necessary business, and I am paired with him. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. CONKLING, (after having voted in the affirmative.) The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] left the Senate for a short time and asked me if he did not return in season to pair with him. I do not see him; therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Anthony,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Patterson,
Blaine,	Dorsey,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,
Booth,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Sargent,

Coke,	Howe,	Plumb,	Wadleigh.
Conkling,	Johnston,	Randolph,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. From the Committee on Appropriations I offer the following, to come in after line 1680. This amendment was omitted by mistake; it should have been printed in the bill:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay Frederick Brackett for services as additional clerk to the Committee on Appropriations under resolution of the Senate, in addition to any other compensation he may be receiving, $72.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 1716 to 1727, in the following words:

That hereafter no contestant or contestant for a seat in the House of Representatives shall be paid exceeding $1,000 for expenses in election contests; and before any sum whatever shall be paid to a contestant or contestee for expenses of election contests, he shall file with the clerk of the Committee on Elections a full and detailed account of his expenses, accompanied by the vouchers and receipts for each item, which account and vouchers shall be sworn to by the party presenting the same, and no charges for witness fees shall be allowed in said accounts unless made in strict conformity to section 125, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1799, to insert:

To pay to Albert Ordway for services performed in preparing the General Index of the Journals of Congress, from July 1, 1878, the date on which he entered on his duties, to July 16, 1878, the date on which he took an oath of office, the sum of $101.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1806, to insert:

To enable the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House to pay M. M. Herr for ninety-four days' services as messenger in Sergeant-at-Arms' office, $470.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1809, to insert:

That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund, to the clerks authorized to be employed by the resolution adopted by the House March 7, 1878, such compensation as may be fixed by the Committee of Accounts, upon proper certification by the chairman of the respective committees named in said resolution, whether said clerks were sworn or not at the time they were respectively employed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1818, to insert:

For making the necessary changes and alterations for the proper heating, lighting, and ventilation of the Hall of the House of Representatives, according to the plans and specifications made by the Architect of the Capitol Extension, to be expended under the direction of the commission appointed by resolution of the House, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1824, to insert:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to A. Erdman, for services rendered by him in indexing and analyzing the testimony taken by the Committee on Public Expenditures in relation to the public printing and binding, $300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1835, after the word "Treasury," to strike out:

To be paid out of the permanent appropriation for the above service.

So as to make the clause read:

To meet the expenses of collecting the data upon which to prepare bulletins of health, to be issued from the office of the Surgeon-General of the United States Marine Hospital, $5,000, under direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1836, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to comply with section 1 of "An act to promote economy and efficiency in the Marine Hospital Service," approved March 3, 1875, (Statutes, volume 18, part 3, page 485,) he is hereby authorized to expend $4,000 out of the Marine Hospital fund, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to obtain the information from different vessels necessary to perfect the schedule required by said section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1851, to insert:

To reimburse A. D. Shaw, late consul at Toronto, the sum of $633.37, that being the amount of Government funds deposited by him in the banking-house of H. J. Morris & Company, of Toronto, at the date of their failure in 1873, no part of which has been reimbursed to him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1858, to insert:

For payment to Catharine I. Gillis, of New York, administratrix of the estate of Thomas H. Gillis, deceased, out of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, now in the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $14,522.04, being the amount of a judgment of the Court of Claims rendered in favor of said Catharine I. Gillis, administratrix of the estate of Thomas H. Gillis, deceased, for the proceeds of cotton seized by the military authorities of the United States, now in the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. I raise a point of order under that amendment. It is not in order under the thirtieth rule of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Being a private claim?

Mr. HOAR. Being a private claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert, after line 1868:

That the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated to assist in the erection of an addition to the Corcoran Art Gallery, to be paid to, and expended by, the trustees of said art gallery.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rise to inquire what point of order was raised by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order was that the item to which objection was made embraced a private claim, which is not admissible under the rules.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1872, to insert:

That the joint commission for the construction of the Washington Monument, created by the act of August 2, 1876, be, and is hereby, authorized to expend for the completion of the foundation of the monument, now in progress, so much of the appropriation made by the said act as may be necessary for that purpose, not exceeding $64,000 above the sum now authorized.

Mr. DAWES. The question is on this amendment relative to the Washington Monument. I wish the Senate to be in possession of all the facts in connection with the proposition.

The Joint Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have had a good many hearings of parties in reference to this matter, and they have been unable to recommend this expenditure of $64,000 for this purpose, either the committee of the Senate or the committee of the House. It will be recollected that of the $200,000 that heretofore have been appropriated for continuing the erection of this monument last year, $36,000 the commission were authorized to use in strengthening the foundations of the monument. This authority was given them without any plan, without any particular method being prescribed. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds called the attention of the Senate at that time to the fact that there was some apprehension on the part of the friends of the monument that there was an intention to change the design of the monument, and Congress directed, without any plan at all, the use of $36,000 of that money in general terms to strengthen the foundations. Now it is asked to add to that $36,000 $64,000 more, making $100,000 of those $200,000, for the purpose of digging out the bottom from under the monument and putting a new bottom under it. That is the purpose, to take out what is under the monument, upon which it rests, and put something else in the place of it.

It is the sincere belief, I have no doubt, of the accomplished engineer, Colonel Casey, that that can be done with safety; but in that opinion there is scarcely any other engineer who quite agrees with him.

Since the last session of Congress a change has come over the old Washington Monument Association so that they are desirous of adopting some new design. Colonel Casey is of opinion, however, that it is necessary to expend $100,000 upon changing the bottom of this monument, whatever design may be adopted. In that the committees of both Houses disagreed with him. They are not satisfied that if the design of the monument shall be changed there would be any need of any such large expenditure; and therefore it was that they were unwilling to authorize the expenditure of this $64,000 in addition to the $36,000. However, the Committee on Appropriations—I do not know upon what evidence submitted to them, but without the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of either branch having any knowledge of it—recommended this amendment. The committees have no desire to antagonize it if Congress are disposed to expend $100,000 in an experiment of that kind, taking out what this monument rests on and putting another bottom there. I do not know of any member of either committee who has the slightest faith in the success of that undertaking.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DAWES. I trust the Senate will allow me to go on a few moments longer.

While their opinion is, as certainly they admit, of no such value as that of an engineer, yet they think that Congress would quite as well let the $36,000, a large part of which remains unexpended now, be expended during the summer in this experiment, and by the next year there will be a demonstration of the success or the failure of the undertaking. They were not willing to have $64,000 more put into this experiment until the effect of the $36,000 shall be visible, for, in the opinion of very skillful engineers it will very soon be manifest upon the monument itself what will be the effect of digging out this bottom from under it and putting a new one under it.

This is all the committee have instructed me to say on the subject.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, having been called from the Chamber momentarily, I wish to inquire what became of the amendment on page 76, line 1859, as to which I am told a point of order was raised?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order was made that it was a private claim and was not admissible under the thirtieth rule of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I beg to call the attention of the Chair to the fact as I understand it to be. I have no knowledge of this claim except that several persons have written to me of its merits, and I speak of it only as I see it on the face of the papers. The thirtieth rule contains this qualification as to a private claim:

Unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited.

Now this amendment as I understand it is to appropriate a sum of money to pay a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims under an existing law, and I respectfully submit to the Chair, that the question arises at least whether that is not within the rules—

Being the amount of a judgment of the Court of Claims rendered in favor of said Catharine I. Gillis, administratrix of the estate of Thomas H. Gillis, deceased, for the proceeds of cotton seized by the military authorities of the United States, now in the Treasury.

Congress has passed a law under which law the appropriate tribunal has proceeded to adjudicate this claim, and I had supposed that that came within the rule, as I am quite sure it has been held to do in other cases. I venture to bring it to the attention of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. The Chair does not think a judgment of a court is a law within the meaning of the rule.

Mr. CONKLING. I understood last evening, when the present occupant of the chair I think was not presiding, the Senate either ruled or assumed in two cases that where Congress had by act directed a question to be submitted to a court and it had been submitted, that complied with the rule, and the Senator who made the point of order touching one of the paragraphs to which I now refer confined his point to such of the amendments as provided for the future, conceding that that which had been adjudicated was not offensive to the rule. The Chair will pardon me for asking attention to this, because I repeat again that I was called off only a moment from the Chamber, and on returning I heard of a point of order, which did not reach my ears, that had been made, and therefore I should like to do an act of kindness, if not a duty to these parties by directing attention to the fact that I suppose the distinction which I have pointed out exists, and rescue the amendment from the operation of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York will remember that judgments of the Court of Claims are paid only upon warrant of law embraced in bills.

Mr. CONKLING. So I supposed under existing law, and therefore I had supposed—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. But they must be the subject of appropriations; and the rule simply is that upon a general appropriation bill you shall not ingraft one of this kind of appropriations.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Chair will bear with me one moment—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to turn back to page 43:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant railroads as compensation was withheld from under the acts—which have since been found entitled to compensation by judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with such judgment, to be paid as other Army transportation, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Stating them—

Now follow words to which I ask the attention of the Chair:

And the Army transportation hereafter performed by said companies shall be adjusted and paid in the same manner.

A point of order was leveled at these latter words because they did not fall within the rule, no adjudication having taken place. I submit the cases are on all fours. In each case, by direction of the legislative authority, a court proceeded to determine the amount, and that, I suppose, was in accordance, in the language of the rule, with existing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The present incumbent was not in the chair at the time the clause cited was decided on. He doubts not that the action of the Senate was as stated by the Senator from New York.

Mr. KERNAN. I would ask the Chair to submit the question to the Senate, particularly as my colleague was absent when the decision was made.

Mr. DAWES. Would it not be more convenient to let this pass until we settle the monument question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would first ask, is there unanimous consent that this amendment be admitted? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator has just come in who raised the point of order, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the point.

Mr. CONKLING. The unanimous consent will not be insisted on against the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed the Senator from Massachusetts was in the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. I will state the reason why I made the point of order upon this claim. It is a claim for a large sum of money, a private claim, and of course it is liable to the point of order under the rule. It is recited as being the amount of a judgment of the Court of Claims rendered in favor of the claimant. That would ordinarily commend such a claim at once without question to the judgment of the Senate. It fails to recite, however, that that judgment of the Court of Claims was reversed on appeal. Now it may be, and I believe it is true, that the reason assigned for the reversal by the Supreme Court is a technical one; is one that it could not be properly prosecuted in the name of the assignee of the original claimant; but certainly that ought not to have been introduced into an appropriation bill in these words, leaving the Senate to suppose that they were simply providing for a judgment of the Court of Claims when there is no judgment of any court on earth binding the United States, and no auditing anywhere of this claim. That was the ground of my objection.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say that I did not know the fact which the Senator from Massachusetts has mentioned. Knowing it, however, I submit with great confidence that it does not go to the question of order. As the Senator says, the amendment on its face presents this as a claim adjudicated favorably in the Court of Claims. When you come to the merits of the question, if the appellate court has reversed that judgment on any consideration affecting the merits, that would be a good reason for voting down the amendment; but I respectfully submit that that, not patent but latent argument against it does not obtain on the question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair gave that no consideration whatever as bearing upon the question of order.

Mr. CONKLING. I thought I was right about that, and the Chair agreeing with me I make no further remark about it except that, although I did not know the fact to which the Senator from Massachusetts directs attention, I have been assured by persons upon whom I thought I might rely, who had written in behalf of this claimant, that this came meritoriously considered, has been established in the courts, and is not challenged; but the technicality, except as far as the Senator has indicated it, I did not know of, because I did not know that any such thing had occurred.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand that the point of order was strengthened by the consideration that I suggested, but I was asked in private by Senators why it was that I made this point to this one claim, while others in the same neighborhood were equally liable to it; and I thought it was proper to state. Now, it stands as a private claim, not in pursuance of any law, but as a naked claim. There is no judgment; there is nothing except the assertion of the claimant, or whoever has made the assertion to the Senator from New York, as to its merits. I therefore insist upon the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair at the time thought the point of order was well taken, and thinks so still. The question is on the amendment, from line 1873 to 1880, relative to the Washington Monument.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that vote is taken I desire to say, in answer to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] that Colonel Casey appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in reference to this item and stated that the $36,000 which is now in process of expenditure would not be enough to strengthen sufficiently these foundations, and that in order to carry on this work and make it effectual it would be necessary to expend an additional sum which he thought would not exceed $64,000. He also stated that this was necessary, whatever the future plan might be with reference to the character of this monument or the design of it. One or two things ought to be done; either Colonel Casey ought to be made to quit expending the $36,000, or he ought to have a sufficient sum to enable him to complete his present plan of strengthening the foundations. That is all there is to this proposition, as I understand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think there never has been any plan for the strengthening of the base of the monument that has commended itself fully to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me a moment. Is not Colonel Casey at work there at this monument expending the $36,000?

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is true, but while the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—

Mr. DAWES. I will call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that the $36,000 was appropriated for the purpose of hooping the foundation, if I may use that phrase, compressing it within a wall, and taking out what was under it and putting something else under it. That is the plan which has been adopted by the engineer in charge since that $36,000 was appropriated. It was the opinion of the committee that as much as he could expend during the summer would be that $36,000.

Mr. CONKLING. What is he doing with that?

Mr. DAWES. He is digging the bottom out from under the monument and putting a new one in.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I consented that the experiment might be made with the amount of $36,000 a year ago. I do not now remember precisely the character of the report which was submitted to us in reference to the feasibility of strengthening the foundation of the monument, and I confess the impression which I received from all the information I could get was that it was but an experiment; and the expenditure of $36,000, while we continued the experiment to that extent, was as far as, in my judgment, we ought to go at that time.

Now, I do not undertake to say, as a member of the committee and from all the reports which have been made to that committee, that I have no confidence that it is practicable or possible ever to strengthen the foundations of the monument in a manner that will justify the extraordinary expenditure which will be required to complete it in the manner in which it is designed. But I think it is proper, before we vote this $64,000 in addition to the $36,000 already granted for the purpose of strengthening the foundations, that we should be satisfied that it is not only practicable but that it will prove successful. I believe that after we have expended the $100,000 we shall find that the foundation there is too insecure to erect such a superstructure as is contemplated. No one, I am sure, can be more anxious than I myself to see the monument originally designed erected to the complete height proposed; but as a member of the committee, judging from all the information I can get from the reports which have been made as well as from some inspection, though I am not an expert about this matter, my impression is that we shall never be able to erect that monument in the manner it was originally designed and that much of the money we now expend will be wasted. If I believed it possible to erect the monument according to the plan that was originally proposed I should be in favor of completing it and carrying out the original design. Not believing that, I think we had better halt before we make the appropriation.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the mammoth chimney called the Washington Monument is a meaningless and unsightly thing; its foundations are insecure; and we have buried $100,000 in the ground. Assuming that we succeed in founding or establishing the foot of the monument so that it will not give way, it will still remain as I have ventured to describe it.

Many plans have been suggested and shown to Senators; I might rather call them possibilities of what may or might be done in the future. I do not believe that burying sacks of concrete underneath and round about the foot of this structure, considering the nature of the ground there and the fact that it is already out of perpendicular, will succeed in making it a foundation on which can be built securely any of the proposed superstructures. If I did believe that, however, I would nevertheless vote against this appropriation because before so large an expenditure is made we should at least have some project, some expectation, some plan upon which a majority is likely to unite touching the ultimate destiny of this commenced structure.

So it seems to me there are two sufficient reasons against this. It is said that $36,000 has already been interred, or is to be, near the Washington Monument. That is no reason why we should throw these sixty-four other thousand dollars in the same manner. If the amendment was one that would put a stop to the work which now proceeds until some result finally in this regard is reached, I would vote for that; but certainly I submit to the Senator from Iowa that it is very hard to find an argument in favor of voting $64,000 more in the fact that $36,000 has already been voted, which I judge that Senator agrees with me in supposing is being expended in a very precarious venture.

Let us find out what we want to do with the Washington Monument, and then if we want to attempt the task of strengthening the foundation, let us proceed to do that; but to attempt to strengthen the foundation with no adequate reason to believe that that will succeed, and then with a wholly indefinite purpose afterward as to whether we wish to do anything with the monument which would render it essential to strengthen its present foundation, seems to me to leap a long way before we come to the stile.

Mr. ALLISON. I know very little about this question, and certainly would not set up my judgment against the judgment of Colonel Casey upon this matter if I was quite familiar with it. I only know that he regards this as essential to the completion of what is now in process of construction.

Mr. VOORHEES. I join with the Senator from New York in thinking we ought to know what we are going to do. We have buried enough money there to stop unless we mean to continue it to the end. This seems to be an appropriation without any special purpose. In fact I will not vote for any more money to the Washington Monument standing where it does. There are people in and about Washington City who think the Washington Monument stands on high ground; they think it is a very high and elevated site. During the present session I was in consultation with some of the most intelligent gentlemen in Washington, who have been connected with the Washington Monument from the beginning; and when I spoke of its undesirability as a site, they said to me that it was an ascertained fact that the site of the Washington Monument was within four feet as high as the brow of Capitol Hill, and they absolutely faced me down until I had to stop. They said it had been ascertained, and they knew what they were talking about and that I did not. The next day, however, I invaded a topographical engineer's office, and I got him to make a survey, and it was ascertained that the site of the Washington Monument is about sixty-seven feet below where we are sitting now.

There has been a wonderful want of intelligence of purpose and of common sense connected with this Washington Monument from the beginning, and we should render ourselves more respectable in the eyes of the country and of the world if we would abandon it entirely and build a monument to the father of his country in some conspicuous and beautiful place about this city. I do not believe the present one will ever be finished if we go halting and limping along with dripping appropriations toward a monument whose very foundations are matter of doubt; whose very foundations are not regarded as secure, concerning which a man would feel insecure if he had to go in there and live. I have heard so much from engineers and non-engineers on the subject of the insecurity of the foundations there that this hour I do not know but that there is a bed of quicksand under it, and I would not build a house on it.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator know that the monument is already out of the true line? It has leaned.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have been told so, and there is not a Senator who would build a house for himself and family to live in on such a foundation as that; yet we are asked to appropriate money from year to year to be expended on a site that a prudent and sensible man would not occupy for any purpose of domestic life. I hope every dollar of this appropriation will be stricken out, and I hope the next move may be a commission, if we can get a commission who will act, to report to the next Congress or some future Congress, not merely to ascertain whether that foundation is secure or not, for if there is doubt about it, it ought to be abandoned; a doubt vitiates the whole plan there; but to select some other spot, to utilize the material there if we can, and if not to knock it down and let it go.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, my friend from Indiana forgets that nearly all the expenditure upon the Washington Monument has been provided for by individual subscription and not by the Government of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. No, I do not forget that, and that makes it all the worse. There has been a system of colporteurage to solicit private benefactions by appeals to the patriotic sentiments of the country. There is a feeling in the American heart for General Washington that is appealed to in order to raise money which is worse than thrown away.

Mr. THURMAN. That is a very generous sentiment, but the point I was making is that we could not go very well to knocking this monument down if we did not build it; that a monument built by the voluntary contributions of the people of the United States in honor of the memory of him who was called the father of his country cannot very well be knocked down by an act of Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. I take back the suggestion about knocking it down; but one thing we can do, we can run away from it and let it fall there. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think it will fall. There was a report some time ago that that monument was four or five or six inches out of perpendicular. It turned out that that report made by an engineer resulted entirely from his mistaking the bench-marks and that there is no such deflection of that monument. That there may be some little is true, about an inch or something of that kind it is suggested; perhaps less than there is to be found in any structure of that height in the world. There is a certain leaning tower in this world that has stood for centuries, that is a great many degrees out of perpendicular, and I for one am inclined to think that there is not much danger of this monument falling down.

I do not pretend to say that I think it will be the most beautiful structure in the world, and yet I am not prepared to say that all the criticisms about it are exactly right. I read of late some remarks upon it by a critic who said that it is nothing but a big chimney. This may be a proper criticism; but if so, the ancients, who were thought to have some knowledge of architecture and with whom the obelisk was a favorite erection, were sadly in fault; the people who built the Bunker Hill Monument were sadly in fault. It does seem to me, without undertaking to decide on its merits, for I have no competency to decide them, that there has been a little too much cheap criticism of the Washington Monument.

But no more about that. Mr. President, there is a necessity for a short executive session. I think it need not last more than half an hour at the outside. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope not until about time for the recess. I think it may be better done then. I am going to suggest to the Senate at about half past five o'clock to take a recess until eight if it will meet their approval.

Mr. THURMAN. On that suggestion I withdraw the motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I dislike very much to say a word, for I think we ought to go on with the bill and vote and not talk; but I want to say a word for the Committee on Appropriations. Colonel Casey came before the committee and made this statement in substance, that the $36,000 spoken of by the Senator from Massachusetts had been expended, and about one-third of the work done. With the balance, $64,000, he thought and believed and indeed knew that a good and perfect foundation could be made, and without it the work would have to stop just where it was. One of the two things, he said, must be done, and we all know who Colonel Casey is.

Mr. DAWES. I only want to say that neither of the committees have the slightest desire to do otherwise than carry out as far as they can the wishes of the Monument Association. They have no disposition to change the form of the monument unless that meets the approval of the Monument Association, and they are carrying out their views as well as they can. They are not, therefore, doing anything that will trench upon the sensibilities of the Senator from Ohio. They agree with the Senator from Ohio in reference to the treatment of that monument. They say, however, after a patient examination and on the hearing not only of Colonel Casey but of other engineers and the examination of different forms which have been presented and different methods of strengthening this foundation, that they are unwilling to see $100,000 put into this particular method in which Colonel Casey has the utmost confidence and in which he is singular among engineers. They would say let the $36,000 go, though we never understood until this moment that the $36,000 had been expended. A good deal of money has been expended not in this experiment of taking out one bottom and putting another under, but in getting ready for the great work. A good deal of this $36,000 has been expended in that way, and properly, and will be useful in carrying on the work, whatever form may be adopted or whatever method of strengthening the foundation may be decided on. If Congress is ready to put $100,000 into this place they must be prepared to put another $100,000 next year if they find that the effect of taking out this earth has been as other engineers are so apprehensive will be the result, that the monument will lean more than one inch before next December.

I now move to lay this amendment on the table, and that will determine whether the Senate desires to go on with this expenditure.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 5, noes 25; no quorum voting.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Another division will do. Let us all vote.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the motion. Evidently a majority desire to have the appropriation continued.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a quorum present?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was not disclosed on the vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair to count the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is evidently a quorum here, [counting.] Forty-four Senators are present by the count. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Jones of Florida,	Sargent,
Anthony,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	Thurman,
Barnum,	Edmunds,	Kernan,	Wadleigh,
Beck,	Hereford,	McCreery,	Windom,
Bruce,	Howe,	Merrimon,	Withers.
Burnside,	Ingalls,	Mitchell,

NAYS—22.

Bailey,	Garland,	Kirkwood,	Spencer,
Bayard,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Teller,
Cameron of Wis.,	Grover,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hamlin,	Morrill,	Whyte.
Conkling,	Harris,	Rollins,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—31.

Blaine,	Dennis,	Lamar,	Plumb,
Booth,	Dorsey,	McDonald,	Randolph,
Butler,	Eaton,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Chaffee,	Eustis,	Matthews,	Saunders,
Chandler,	Ferry,	Morgan,	Sharon,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Oglesby,	Shields,
Conover,	Johnston,	Paddock,	Wallace.
Davis of Ill.,	Jones of Nevada,	Patterson,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1880, to insert:

To pay David L. Smith, late captain and assistant quartermaster in the United States Army, $869.47, on account of subsistence of the Army, 1871 and prior years, as per Comptroller's report No. 1597, January 16, 1879.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1887, to insert:

To reimburse William Beantor, of Oregon, for moneys taken from him under the rules of the military prison at Fort Alcatraz, California, in 1877, by First Lieutenant William W. Fleming, Twelfth Infantry, and then treasurer of said prison, and which amount was subsequently embezzled by said Fleming, the sum of $992.57.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1895, to insert:

That the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, for the relief of William Sel-den, late United States marshal for the District of Columbia, authorizing the readjustment of his official accounts, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to include the period of his official term, as shall be determined by the accounting officers of the Treasury: Provided, That no further sum of money is hereby appropriated or payable than that specified in said act; and said appropriation is hereby revived.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1905, to insert:

That the appropriation made by the act approved February 28, 1867, entitled "An act for the relief of certain drafted men," be, and the same is hereby, extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not time to read the statute, but I can show it to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As nobody knows anything about it, it must be right; I will not say anything.

Mr. WINDOM. I hardly am willing to let it stand on that basis. I have not time to refer to the statute now, but I will show it to the Senator and recur to this matter again if he desires.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1911, to insert:

To pay George S. Wright, administrator of the estate of J. T. Wright, deceased, for the value of the steamship Peerless, as adjusted under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1849, (section 3483 of the Revised Statutes,) as per estimate made by the Secretary of War, and transmitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress for appropriation, the sum of $35,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained on the same principles as the last one.

Mr. HOAR. I make the same point of order on that as on the previous claim. There is no time to discuss it.

Mr. WINDOM. That is an account audited and adjusted by the Third Auditor and Second Comptroller. I will read the papers if it is desired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the amendment is liable to the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. I waive the point of order to hear an explanation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is waived.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Several Senators are anxious to interrupt this bill to interpose other business. I feel it my duty to say that I shall object to anything interfering with this regular appropriation bill while it is under discussion. If we are to pass these bills at all, we must go on with them or have an extra session. I hope gentlemen will let the bills go right on without interfering.

Mr. WINDOM. I will read a very brief statement from the Third Auditor with reference to this account:

This is to certify that there has been adjusted in this office an account in favor of the estate of J. T. Wright, deceased, payable to George S. Wright, administrator of said estate, for the value of his steamship Peerless, under the provisions of section 3483, Revised Statutes, and an allowance made of $35,000, which adjustment has been confirmed by the honorable Second Comptroller of the Treasury.

This was sent to the committee by the Secretary of the Treasury. This is what we acted on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to know what the circumstances of this thing are.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to know first whether the Senator from Massachusetts insists on the point of order?

Mr. HOAR. I think I shall insist on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules the amendment out on the point of order that it is a private claim.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It plainly is, but I wish the Chair would allow me to add that I have not a very positive recollection, but I think I remember that this Peerless business is an old customer, a vessel destroyed during the war under circumstances not altogether unquestionable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is ruled out.

Mr. KERNAN. What is the point of order? We could not hear it over here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is that it is a private claim, and that its payment is not directed by any existing law, as required by the thirtieth rule of the Senate.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to suggest that I think the section of the Revised Statutes referred to provides for its payment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the section referred to.

Mr. KERNAN. I will state what I know about it after the section is read. Perhaps I had better read it. The section is as follows:

SEC. 3483. Every person who sustains damage by the capture or destruction by an enemy, or by the abandonment or destruction by the order of the commanding general, the commanding officer, or quartermaster, of any horse, mule, ox, wagon, cart, sleigh, harness, steamboat or other vessel, railroad-engine or railroad-car, while such property is in the military service, either by impressment or contract; or who sustains damage by the death or abandonment and loss of any horse, mule, or ox, while in the service, in consequence of the failure on the part of the United States to furnish the same with sufficient forage, or whose horse, mule, ox, wagon, cart, boat, sleigh, harness, vessel, railroad engine, or railroad-car is lost or destroyed by unavoidable accident while such property is in the service, shall be allowed and paid the value thereof at the time when such property was taken into the service, except in cases where the risk to which the property would be exposed was agreed to be incurred by the owner: Provided, It appears that such loss, capture, abandonment, destruction, or death was without any fault or negligence on the part of the owner of the property, and while the property was actually employed in the service of the United States.

I have here a note from the party interested, I suppose. He says the papers showing what he states in the note are in the hands of the committee. He states that the account for this vessel—

Was adjusted and certified by the accounting officers under existing law and estimated for to Congress by the Secretary of War through the Secretary of the Treasury.

He says further:

The official papers with the committee show these facts. The vessel was lost while in the military service as a part of the Port Royal expedition under circumstances which rendered the United States liable for her value under section 3483 of the Revised Statutes.

Being a vessel in the service of the Government, as this party states, I call attention to the point that the official papers showing these facts are in the hands of the committee. I hope the committee will present them. It would seem from the statement that it comes clearly within the section, and the law provides for paying the value, and the account has been adjusted.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Chair rules the amendment out of order, I insist on going on with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not rule upon the justice of the claim at all, but simply that being a private claim it is not in order upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. KERNAN. Is it because there is no law providing for its payment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is because there is no law providing for the payment of this claim. It should go like other claims reported by the southern claims commission or the Court of Claims; it should not come as an amendment into a general appropriation bill.

Mr. KERNAN. If the Government should have a vessel in time of war belonging to a party, and that should be destroyed, the law provides that it is to be paid for. I do not mean to argue it, but simply state the fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. Is there an appeal? The reading will continue.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1919, to insert:

To provide for a building for the use of the city post-office, Washington, District of Columbia, there shall be appropriated, for the purchase by the Postmaster-General of lots lettered C, D, and E, of square 322, improved by a seven-story fire-proof building, the sum of $325,000; and this appropriation shall be available as soon as the owner of said lots and building shall, by good and sufficient deed, in due form of law, and approved by the Attorney-General of the United States, fully release and convey the said property to the United States.

Mr. KERNAN. I hope we shall have some explanation of this somewhat extraordinary amendment to buy a block at $325,000 here. I hope the Senate is not going to pay now for a city post-office in this way $325,000.

Mr. HOAR. I think the question whether the Senate will enter upon the consideration of the proper site for a Washington post-office and a proper plan at this late hour of the session can as well be decided without debate as not, and therefore I move to lay the amendment on the table to test that question.

Mr. KERNAN. I hope that motion will be agreed to to save time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that this amendment lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to amend, at page 79, by striking out all after line 1 to and including line 16 on page 102.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

The lines stricken out are sections 2, 3, and 4, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That all sums due upon certificates issued, or which may be issued, by the accounting officers of the Treasury in settlement of claims for pay, bounty, prize-money, or other moneys due to colored soldiers, sailors, or marines, or their legal representatives, shall be paid by the officers of the Pay department of the Army, under the direction of the Paymaster-General, who is already charged with the payment of like dues to white soldiers: Provided, first, That no such certificate shall be issued until it shall have been ascertained that the application is made by the original claimant, or, if he be dead, by his true living legal representative, nor until the identity of such claimant or representative, as the case may be, shall have been duly established: Provided, That if an agent or attorney be employed, the allowance for his services shall not in any case exceed that contemplated in the scale of fees and allowances fixed by the second section of a joint resolution approved July 26, 1866, entitled "Joint resolution amendatory of a joint resolution respecting bounties to colored soldiers, and the pensions, bounties, and allowances to their heirs," approved June 15, 1866, and such allowance shall be stated in a separate certificate in favor of the agent or attorney simultaneously with the issue of a certificate for the amount due the claimant: Provided further, That the amount due the claimant, or his living representative, or the balance due after deducting the attorney's fee, if any, shall be paid only to the party named in the certificate, and in current funds or by post-office money-order, and not by checks or drafts; and no power of attorney, transfer, or assignment of the amount of such claims, or any part thereof, shall in any case be recognized; and the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and $10,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, to meet the expenses incurred on account of payment of these claims, for salaries of agents and clerks, rent of offices, fuel and lights, stationery and printing, office furniture, mileage and transportation of officers and agents, telegraphing, postage, and post-office money-orders; and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, under the title "Pay of two and three years' volunteers reapportioned," for the payment of such of the claims in question as may be covered by Treasury certificates issued after the passage of this act, and previous to July 1, 1880: And provided further, That the sum or sums now held by the Treasurer of the United States, turned over to him, under the Attorney-General's decision of December 30, 1878, by the chief disbursing officer of the freedmen's branch of the Adjutant-General's Office, as the balance in said officer's hands of moneys due and unpaid on account of adjusted claims of the class contemplated in the first clause of this section, shall be turned over to the paymaster who may be charged by the Paymaster-General with the payment of such claims, to be by him paid to the proper claimants under the restrictions imposed in said section.

such appropriations be exceeded, either in requisition or expenditure; and the accounts for all disbursements shall be made quarterly to the accounting officers of the Treasury by the auditor of the District of Columbia, upon vouchers certified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, as now required by law. And section 2 of an act approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 4. That the fifth paragraph of that portion of the act of June 20, 1878, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1879, and for other purposes, relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the sum of money therein appropriated to pay the workmen of said District may be paid to those whose claims are due and unpaid from contractors whose accounts against the government of said District had been paid in part or in full prior or subsequently to the passage of the act of June 23, 1874; and that no such claims shall be received, filed, or audited subsequently to the 1st of May, 1879: Provided, That the amount to be paid on each claim shall be paid and received in full discharge of the claim of such workmen.

The next amendment was to insert in lieu of section 2 the following:

That the sum of $1,000,821.78 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of paying one-half of the estimated expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, namely:

For improvements and repairs, as follows: Work on Boundary street auxiliary sewers, $100,000; lateral sewers, $15,000; work upon sundry avenues and streets, $100,000; replacement of pavements, at not to exceed $2.25 per square yard, $250,000; repairs to concrete pavements, $100,000; material issued for permit work, $15,000; in all, $580,000.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me interrupt the reading. Is it proposed to read all these provisions and vote upon them in block, or is it in order to make as we proceed any suggestion a Senator wishes to make?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order to make suggestions or amendments as paragraphs are read.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to call attention to a paragraph which occurs at the top of page 103.

Ordinary care of Benning's, Anacostia, and Chain bridges, which I understand to include the bridge over the East Branch at the Navy Yard.

Mr. President, I do not think the bridge which I refer to, having been built by the public money, should be maintained by the public money as it is now used. That bridge is twenty-one feet in the clear. Fourteen feet of the twenty-one are occupied by a horse-railroad injuriously and unnecessarily; running on a track the gauge of which is four feet eight inches—their cars are seven feet wide; so that they occupy fourteen of the twenty-one feet of this bridge. Their cars run eighteen minutes apart, and they occupy four minutes in traversing this bridge, and in order to do that they need not arrange their timetable so as not to have cars meet on the bridge. They are suffered to maintain two tracks, so that no vehicle, double or single, can cross that bridge with comfort and scarcely with safety.

I remember when they obtained permission to cross the bridge and the restrictions which we sought to put upon them. I call the attention of the Senate, and especially of the committee, to this, in the hope that they will see that an expensive bridge having been built by public money, and having thus far been maintained by public money, which is virtually monopolized by a street-railway company, should not be maintained at the public cost, and certainly not wholly at the public cost.

I hope the committee will consent either to omit this particular bridge, or introduce some amendment which will in some sort assert the rights not only of the Government, but of the public.

I ought in this connection not to forget to say, that assurances having been recently given that one of these tracks would be taken out, which assurances have been going for months and have resulted in nothing, a large number of persons resident across the river came to me, knowing my attention had been called to this matter, with a petition numerously signed, which they were circulating; and unwisely, as it seems now, I said to them that assurances had reached the committee and others which I thought indicated that there was to be relief by this railway company taking up one of these tracks, the remaining track being, as I think after reading their statement, just as useful to them practically as both the tracks are. In consequence of this assurance they forbore further to circulate their petition, but still the complaints go on, and everybody who has crossed the bridge must know how just those complaints are.

I insist upon it that we ought not to go on maintaining and policing a bridge for the benefit of this company from which the public is not excluded, yet is so far inconvenienced in using that practically it is no bridge at all.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will consent to an amendment providing that there shall be but one track across this bridge. At least two years ago attention was called to it, and I was given to understand that the matter would be remedied at once.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will the Senator allow me a moment? This matter was before the Committee on the District of Columbia. The doors of the committee-room were open and a hearing was given to the people who have occasion to cross this bridge often; and they all with one voice protested against the change, very much to my surprise and to that of the other members of the committee. They said to have but one track across the bridge would discommode the travel very much more than to have two tracks, because in passing they could follow a car over in one direction and another back.

Mr. CONKLING. May I be allowed one moment to understand this? Shall I understand the Senator to say that people came before the committee and said that unless there were iron tracks on the bridge they could not drive conveniently in that place?

Mr. ROLLINS. No, Mr. President—

Mr. CONKLING. In other words, if the Senator will pardon me, the bridge is twenty-one feet in the clear; these two tracks with the cars on them occupy fourteen feet, when the cars are abreast of each other. Shall I understand the Senator to say that people came and maintained that with fourteen feet in the clear to drive, to pass and repass, they could not do it as well as they could with seven feet?

Mr. ROLLINS. I merely wish to state that such were the representations made by people living on the other side of the bridge, that they would be very much better accommodated in the present condition of the bridge than they would if the change was made. That is what I mean to say. I did not make a personal examination of the case.

Mr. DORSEY. The parties who appeared before the Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to this railway track failed to state the width that would be left on the bridge if one track was taken up, which makes a very great deal of difference in the propriety of removal. They stated that the carriages could not pass if one track was taken up and the other was left down, which was ascertained not to be true. Carriages can pass without trouble over the track if one is taken up. I hope the amendment the Senator from New York suggests, if he has it prepared, will be agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I wish to say that one man came to me with another one to witness it, who made, or intended to make, the statement the Senator from New Hampshire has reported to the Senate. I took my pencil and drew upon a piece of paper this bridge and the tracks roughly, and then I invited this man to look at me, if he would, so that he saw me and at the same time allowed me to see him while he repeated that statement, to wit, that a carriage crossing a bridge fourteen feet wide could not go as comfortably as if the bridge was only seven feet wide; and the second time he failed to make the statement. I then inquired what his connection with this matter was, and I found that he was one of the employes or officers of this horse-railway company. Now I undertake to say that a proposition more essentially false and ridiculous was never stated or invented than this, that with one track occupying seven feet of a bridge leaving fourteen feet unoccupied and unencumbered, foot-passengers and vehicles cannot proceed in the fourteen feet as well as they could if they were confined to seven feet.

I venture to make one other remark upon this subject. Anybody who has seen single vehicles cross this bridge, as I have a good many times and been asked to stop and look at it, knows that there is no mode of driving across it with ease, unless a horse were specially educated to the purpose so that he does not sway enough to drag the wheels and to scrape the wheels along these tracks first one way and then the other. A team of double horses may straddle one of these tracks and thus get across, but for single vehicles it would be difficult to imagine an arrangement rendering it more impossible with ease to cross this bridge than it is now.

I move, Mr. President, at the end of line 27 to add these words:

Provided, That one of the two railroad tracks now on said Anacostia bridge shall at once be removed.

Does the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia see any objection to that?

Mr. DORSEY. None at all, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Some very astute District of Columbia lawyer may say that this proviso is a mere limitation upon an expenditure of the money, and that if the tracks are not removed the money shall not be spent. I would suggest instead of saying "provided" to say "and," as a positive command.

Mr. CONKLING. "And one." I think the Senator is quite right. I change it, Mr. President, so as to read, "and one of the two railroad tracks," &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As thus modified will the Senate agree to the amendment to the amendment of the committee?

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment proposed as section 2 was continued, as follows:

For maintaining institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons, as follows. Washington Asylum: One commissioner, $200; one intendant, $960; one matron, $600; one visiting physician, $1,200; one resident physician, $480; one resident physician, $300; one clerk, $180; one baker, $420; six overseers, at $600 each, $3,600; one watchman, $300; three watchmen, at $180 each, $540; one driver, $120; one hostler, $60; one cook, $120; two cooks, at $60 each, $120; five nurses, at $60 each, $300; contingent expenses, including provisions, fuel, forage, lumber, hardware, shoes, dry goods, medicines, and miscellaneous items, $35,300; total Washington Asylum, $45,160.

Georgetown Almshouse: Support of inmates, $1,800.

Hospital for the Insane: Board and clothing of inmates, $17,000.

Transportation of paupers and conveying prisoners to workhouse, $2,500.

Reform School, District of Columbia: Salaries, fuel and incidentals, repairs and improvements, $20,000; and section 13 of the act entitled "An act revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School of the District of Columbia, approved May 3, 1876," is hereby continued in full force.

For the support and maintenance of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, $12,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to inquire if that amendment will be subject to amendment hereafter if it is agreed to now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be subject to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I doubt whether the clause ought to be agreed to in its present form. That appropriation is one of the expenditures of the government of the District of Columbia. That hospital is one over which the authorities of the District of Columbia have no control; they have no voice in its management; and so long as that is the case I do not think they ought to be taxed for its support. Under this clause the District of Columbia will have to raise by taxation $6,000 as its proportion of the appropriation. Unless the hospital can be subjected to the control of the authorities of the District, for one I am opposed to agreeing to an amendment that makes such an appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This institution is not under the control of the three gentlemen who manage the District of Columbia, neither is the Children's Hospital named in the next clause that follows it; neither is the St. Ann's Infant Asylum in the next clause that follows that; neither is the Industrial Home School, if I am correctly informed; neither is the National Association for Colored Women and Children named in the next clause; neither is the Women's Christian Association. These are all private and religious charities of various denominations that devote themselves by large private contributions, and have done so for years, long before Congress aided them at all, in trying to take care in their respective ways of the unhappy and sorrowful and sick, of whom so many are in this District.

Congress some years ago undertook to make small contributions to these simple charities, because they did so much public good. They are all I believe at present most thoroughly well administered on all sides, in all these denominations and in all these ways. It is simply, therefore, a contribution to fill a need for aid to the poor and the sick and the distressed in these respects, for which there is no public provision by general hospital.

That being the state of the case, I hope my honorable friend will not undertake to cut off these four or five religious charities that cover all denominations by any interference of control on the part of any of the authorities of the District. When we discover that any abuse exists, then, certainly, let us stop the appropriation; but as long as we all believe that they are all doing the very best they can in the best way, let us contribute this small pittance for their aid.

Mr. HARRIS. In justice to myself, I desire to state to the Senator from Vermont and to the Senate that my suggestion was prompted in some measure by information (how reliable I cannot tell and I do not know, hence I cannot state upon my own responsibility the facts) that has left an impression on my mind that this particular institution, at least, is not managed with that degree of economy and prudence with which a public charity might be, and possibly ought to be, managed. If I am not right in the facts, I hope the Senator will correct me, for I do not desire to make a false impression upon the mind of any one or to labor under an incorrect impression myself in regard to it; but I understand that the treasurer of this institution is paid a salary of ten or twelve hundred dollars for disbursing the charities that are given by Congress and by others for the support of this institution. I understand that there is a salaried surgeon in the institution who receives a salary of $1,800 or $2,000 a year, in addition to which he has his quarters, he has his board, he has his horse and buggy furnished, and has all the means furnished him as an outside practicing physician, in the face of the fact, if I am correct in my information, that if needed the most prominent, the most respectable and able physicians of this city have time and again tendered their services gratuitously to this charity to take in turn all the duties professionally that devolve upon it.

Now, if it be true that two or three or five thousand dollars can be saved to this charity, it seems to me it ought to be saved. The people of the District of Columbia are to be taxed, it seems, to the extent of six or ten or twelve thousand dollars for the support of this charity, a very proper charity and one that ought to be supported; but I think if it is supported by the contributions of Congress and of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia it ought to be managed with a proper respect for economy and prudence, and the funds ought not to be wasted in unnecessary salaries. If it is subjected to the control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, I should hope that if there be abuses those abuses would be corrected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Tennessee that if the little contribution which we make annually to this private corporation is being squandered in excessive payments to anybody, we ought to stop the contribution; but I know of no authority for turning this private charity, controlled by people quite as respectable as the commissioners of the District of Columbia, all and singular, over to their authority. I should be glad to know what principle of justice and of law would justify that?

There is a natural desire on the part of a good many people besides Senators to increase their jurisdiction and grasp for power, and they sometimes attend in the lobbies and sometimes in this very Hall pressing legislation that shall increase their functions and enlarge their jurisdiction. They may sometimes take an enlarged view of what are economical expenses and fill the ears of Senators with complaints.

I do not know how much the treasurer of this institution receives. If the Senator will do me the honor to go up during the recess to the institution or to the Surgeon-General of the Army of the United States, who I believe is at the head of it, we can readily ascertain what the truth is.

I am informed that this hospital, which has done so much good, thinks it necessary, and I believe rightly, to have a resident physician of special skill in respect of the objects for which this institution is founded, and that he shall reside there and be there all the time, and that he does, and that he is paid for it. If you can take up the itinerancy notion and carry on a hospital of that kind with safety to human life and benefit to the suffering, I hope the public will try the experiment and not force it upon this people.

I know very well that my honorable friend from Tennessee, in respect of the objects that he has in view, does not differ from me a single atom or I from him; but I feel very confident that there is no occasion for interference, knowing as I do the gentlemen who for a year or two have had control and charge of that institution. A few years ago they had some directors who were not altogether to my taste, but it has been all reformed. Being now under the control of the Surgeon-General of the Army, the Adjutant-General of the Army, the rector of one of the leading parishes in this town, I do not believe there is any wrong in respect of squandering this little sum that they try to expend for the benefit of suffering people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee submit a motion?

Mr. HARRIS. My motion is to subject the institution to the control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator please reduce his amendment to form.

Mr. HARRIS. I will prepare a proviso to this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pending its preparation the Chair will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 791) to establish a land district in the Black Hills, in the Territory of Dakota;

A bill (H. R. No. 5103) to extend the time for payment of pre-emptors on certain public lands in the State of Minnesota;

A bill (H. R. No. 1051) for the protection of settlers on the public lands of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1160) to extend the provisions of an act approved June 22, 1874, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers on railroad lands;" and

A bill (H. R. No. 1737) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to convey by deed to the board of education of the district of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, a lot of ground, (No. 2, in block B,) with the buildings thereon, for the use of the common schools.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 480) granting a pension to William W. Stephenson, captain of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 529) granting a pension to Daniel Middough;

 A bill (H. R. No. 4391) granting a pension to Susan Humes; and
 A bill (H. R. No. 4494) granting a pension to John Grubbins.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] proposes an amendment to the pending paragraph; which will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed at the end of line 64 of section 2, proposed as an amendment, to add:

Provided, That said hospital shall be subject to the government and control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

So as to read:

For the support and maintenance of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, $12,000: Provided, That said hospital shall be subject to the government and control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SARGENT. I raise the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to say a word before the Chair decides the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has decided the point of order, that the amendment embraces new legislation. He, however, will hear the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DORSEY. I believe it was the understanding of the committee that the clause should go out. I am quite willing it should go out, but not on the ground of legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not this provision appropriating money. The Senator refers to a paragraph on the next page.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules on the point of order on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment proposed as section 2, as follows:

For the support and maintenance of the Children's Hospital, $5,000.
 For Saint Ann's Infant Asylum, $5,000.
 For the Industrial Home School, $5,000.
 For the National Association for Colored Women and Children, $6,500.
 For the Women's Christian Association, $5,000: Provided, That the above-specified amounts shall be paid to said institutions, by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, quarterly only, upon the presentation of a detailed report, accompanied by the proper vouchers, showing the receipts and disbursements for the preceding quarter; and if the commissioners shall at any time become satisfied that said institution is not being conducted in the most economical manner possible, or in a way not calculated to best serve the ends of charity, they shall withhold all further payments; And provided, That hereafter no appropriation shall be made for any charities within the District of Columbia unless the same be included in the annual estimates of the commissioners, whose duty it is hereby made to include in said estimates such charities as they may think proper objects of public aid and support; and shall also appoint two trustees for every other charitable organization receiving aid under the provisions of this act, and shall include in their annual report a statement, made by the trustees and visitors so appointed, as to the respective institutions so aided by the public funds: Provided, That said board of visitors and trustees shall serve without compensation.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask that the proviso be stricken out, all after the word "dollars" in line 72 to and including line 93, so as to read simply:

For the Women's Christian Association, $5,000.

Mr. SARGENT. That is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right, but I make the point of order that every word of it is legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not examined it yet. [A pause.] It is clearly new legislation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order against it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask that it be stricken out, but not on the point of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It has gone out on the point of order.

Mr. DORSEY. If there is any special reason why this proviso should be stricken out on the point of order in preference to striking it out on motion of the committee, I should be glad to know what it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, my reason is that a motion to strike out would be subject to debate; the point of order cannot be debated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is not in order. The entire proviso goes out.

The reading of the amendment proposed as section 2 was continued, as follows:

Relief of the poor, $15,000; in all, $138,300.
 Howard University: For maintenance, $10,000; one-half thereof to be paid by the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask why one-half of this appropriation for Howard University is to be paid by the District? What has the District of Columbia more to do with that university than any other similar number of people in any one town? Unless it is explained otherwise than I think it can be, I shall move to strike out the last line which provides that one-half of this appropriation for the Howard University shall be paid by the District of Columbia.

Mr. WINDOM. The Committee on Appropriations were of opinion that the colored population of the District was very largely interested in it, and therefore thought it advisable to make that provision. If the Senate think not, I for one will yield very readily to their judgment.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not propose to interfere with the wisdom of the appropriation to this university. I take it for granted that the committee who reported it had good and sufficient grounds for inserting the provision; but I do not know any reason why the people of this District should be saddled with one-half this expense when they have no more to do with it than any similar number of inhabitants anywhere else in the country.

Mr. DORSEY. There is no objection to dropping the words "one-half thereof to be paid by the District of Columbia," but the District of Columbia supplies greatly more than its proportion of indigent persons who are supported and receive education at that institution. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware move to amend the amendment of the committee?

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the amendment be amended by striking out after the word "dollars" the words:

One-half thereof to be paid by the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendment proposed as section 2 was continued, as follows:

For the Washington Aqueduct, as follows: Engineering, maintenance, and general repairs, $20,000.

tee of accounts, board of trustees, $150; one clerk, $900; one clerk, $800; five teachers, at $1,650 each, $8,250; one teacher, $1,600; two teachers, at $1,350 each, $2,700; one teacher, $1,300; one teacher, $1,200; one teacher, $1,100; fifteen teachers, at $1,000 each, $15,000; one teacher, $960; two teachers, at $950 each, $1,900; twelve teachers, at $900 each, $10,800; ten teachers, at $850 each, $8,500; twenty teachers, at $800 each, $16,000; thirty-one teachers, at $23,250; fifty-one teachers, at $700 each, $35,700; fifty-seven teachers, at $650 each, $37,050; eighty-three teachers, at $600 each, $49,800; twenty-five teachers, at $550 each, $13,750; ten teachers, at $500 each, $5,000; five teachers, at $450 each, $2,250; twelve teachers, at $425 each, $5,100; fifty teachers, at $400 each, $20,000; one temporary teacher, $350; six teachers, at $250 each, $1,500; one janitor, $1,140; one janitor, $1,102; one janitor, $1,057; one janitor, $922; one janitor, $914; one janitor, $900; one janitor, $880; one janitor, $850; one janitor, $662; one janitor, $622; one janitor, $602; one janitor, $588; one janitor, $584; one janitor, $522; one janitor, $540; one janitor, $430; two janitors, at $344 each, $768; two janitors, at $288 each, $576; one janitor, $250; one janitor, $230; one janitor, $225; one janitor, $216; one janitor, $192; three janitors, at $172 each, $516; one janitor, $180; one janitor, $150; two janitors, at $160 each, $320; one janitor, $140; one janitor, $92.22; six janitors, at $8.40 each, $51.40; twelve janitors, at $8.00 each, $96.00; three janitors, at $120 each, $360; four janitors, at $60 each, $240; eleven janitors, at $54 each, $594; nine janitors, at $50 each, $450; additional teachers and increase of pay by continuous service, $22,000; rent of school-buildings, $30,000; fuel, $12,000; repairs to school-buildings, $25,000; contingent expenses, including books, stationery, printing, insurance, and miscellaneous items, $21,567.37; for the construction of two new school-buildings, purchase of lots, and furniture, complete and ready for occupancy, at $37,500 each, $75,000; Provided, That two lots on square 158, south side of Massachusetts avenue and west of Seventh street, belonging to the United States, may be used by the commissioners of the District for school purposes, and they may erect one of said school-houses thereon; And provided, That the inspector of buildings of the District shall have authority and control over and supervision of the construction and repairs of all school-buildings if the commissioners deem best to delegate the same to him; in all, $475,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest that the Secretary omit the enumeration of these items and announce the total appropriation at the end of each paragraph.

Mr. DORSEY. I will say to the Senator that this enumeration is exactly in accordance with the estimates.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to omit the reading of the enumeration.

Mr. DORSEY. And I say the reading may be omitted, because it is exactly in accordance with the estimates and there is no use in reading it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island suggests that the aggregate amount only be reported at the end of each clause, to which the Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment proposed to section 2, omitting the details in each paragraph and reading only the footing of each. The remainder of the amendment is as follows:

For the Metropolitan police, as follows: One major and superintendent, $2,600; one captain, $1,600; one property clerk, $1,800; one clerk, $1,200; three surgeons, $450 each, $1,350; six detectives, at $1,320 each, $7,920; ten lieutenants, $1,200 each, $12,000; twenty sergeants, at $1,140 each, $22,800; seven acting sergeants, at $1,080 each, $7,560; seventy-three privates, class 1, at $900 each, $65,700; one hundred and twenty privates, class 2, at $1,080 each, $129,600; sixteen station-keepers, at $516 dollars each, $82,536; eight laborers, at $120 each, $960; two telegraph operators, at $70 each, $140; one messenger, $900; one messenger, $300; one major and superintendent, mounted service, $360; one captain, mounted service, $240; fifty lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each, $12,000; increase of pay by continuous service, $3,187; rent of police station-houses and police headquarters, $6,200; fuel, $1,543; repairs to station-houses, $1,200; miscellaneous expenses, including stationery, gas, telegraphing, ice, washing, printing, meals to prisoners, repairs to van, &c., $12,184; in all, $305,210; Provided, That all new appointments shall be made to class 1; And provided, That the number in any class shall not at any time exceed the number herein designated.

For the fire department and fire-alarm as follows: Two commissioners (one of whom shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to represent the interests of the General Government on said board of commissioners) at $200 each, $400; one commissioner and secretary, $400; one chief engineer, $1,800; one assistant engineer, $1,400; one superintendent of fire-alarm telegraph, $1,500; two telegraph operators, at $1,000 each, $2,000; eight foremen, at $900 each, $7,200; six engineers, at $900 each, $5,400; six firemen, at $800 each, $4,800; two tillermen, at $800 each, $1,600; eight hostlers, at $800 each, $6,400; forty-eight privates, at $720 each, $34,560; six privates, at $720 each, temporarily employed, $4,320; repairs to engine houses, $1,000; fuel, $500; purchase of horses, $2,000; repairs to apparatus, $5,000; contingent expenses, including hose, forage, stationery, horseshoeing, washing, and miscellaneous items, $25,420; in all, $165,700.

For the courts, as follows: Police court, one judge, $3,000; one clerk, $2,000; one deputy clerk, $1,000; two bailiffs, at $3 per day each, $1,878; one messenger, $900; one doorkeeper, $540; one justice of the peace, acting as judge in judge's absence, $620; United States marshal's fees, $2,316; rent of building for police court, $1,700; contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, ice, gas, witness fees, and miscellaneous items, $2,046; judicial expenses, $2,500; in all, $18,500.

For the streets, as follows: Removal of garbage, $10,355; street-lamps, lighting, extinguishing, and gas, $130,630; repairs to street-lamps, $1,000; erection of street-lamps, $1,500; matches for use of lamp-lighters, $30; one superintendent, $800; four lamp-lighters, at $480 each, $1,920; one lamp-lighter, $120; parking commission, one superintendent, $1,200; one assistant superintendent, $700; contingent expenses, including laborers, cart hire, trees, tree-boxes, tree-straps, tree-stakes, planting and care of trees, whitewashing, care of parks, and miscellaneous items, $13,400; current work of repairs of streets, alleys, county roads, &c., one overseer of repairs, $2,000; one clerk, $1,900; four supervisors of roads, at $900 each, $3,600; labor, cart hire, materials, and miscellaneous items, $90,500; sweeping, cleaning, and sprinkling streets and avenues, $35,100; cleaning alleys, $7,500; repairs to pumps, $2,500; cleaning Tiber sewer, $10,000; in all, $326,455.

Mr. EATON. If I am not mistaken, I should like to move an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. DORSEY. The question will be on concurring in this amendment in a moment, if the Senator will withhold his amendment until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. EATON. Very well.

The reading of the amendment proposed as section 2 was continued, as follows:

For miscellaneous expenses, as follows: Markets, one market-master, $1,650; one market-master, $1,500; two market-masters, $1,800; contingent expenses, including gas, repairs, and miscellaneous items, $4,550; rent of market site and property yards, $1,175; hay-scales, $200; rent of District offices, $6,000; general advertising, $7,000; miscellaneous items, books to register of wills, printing checks, damages, &c., $6,500; in all, $30,375.

For the health department, as follows: One health officer, $3,000; six sanitary inspectors, at $1,200, $7,200; two food-inspectors, at $1,200 each, $2,400; clerks, $7,000; one poundmaster, $1,000; contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, rent, disinfectants, and miscellaneous items, $3,800; in all, $24,400.

For the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $1,155,535.55. And there is hereby appropriated, out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will, with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, be sufficient to pay the principal of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, issued under the act of Congress approved June 30, 1874, at maturity; which said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually invest in said bonds at not exceeding the par value thereof; and all bonds so redeemed shall cease to bear interest, and shall be canceled and destroyed in the same manner that United States bonds are canceled and destroyed.

For general contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, $20,000.

All moneys appropriated under this act, together with all revenues of the District of Columbia from taxes or otherwise, shall be deposited to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States, in the Treasury, as required by the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1878, and shall be drawn therefrom upon requisition of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, such requisitions specifying the appropriation upon which the same is drawn; and in no case shall such appropriations be exceeded, either in requisition or expenditure; and the accounts for all disbursements shall be made monthly to the accounting officers of the Treasury by the auditor of the District of Columbia, upon vouchers certified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia as now required by law. And section 2 of an act approved March 3, 1877, entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 3. That the fifth paragraph of that portion of the act of June 30, 1878, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1879, and for other purposes, relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the sum of money therein appropriated to pay the workmen employed in the public improvements under the late board of public works of said District may be paid to those workmen whose claims for work and labor are due and unpaid from contractors under said board, whose accounts against the government of said District had been paid in part or in full prior or subsequently to the passage of the act of June 23, 1874; and that no such claims shall be received or filed subsequently to the 1st of May, 1879; Provided, That the amount to be paid on each claim shall be paid and received in full discharge of the claim of such workmen.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that section 3 be all stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator explain why he makes that motion?

Mr. DORSEY. I feel convinced that the re-enactment of the law alluded to in that section will prevent the workmen that we intended to pay from getting any money for many months to come. I think it is going to operate as a very great hardship. The accounting officers of the Treasury say if that clause is re-enacted they will not be able to pass upon these accounts until some time late in the coming summer. If that $75,000 was given for any purpose at all, it was given to do some good; and to do any good, the poor people need it most in the winter when they are out of work and out of fuel and food. I think it is a very unwise and a very unnecessary provision. I hope my colleague on the committee will agree with me.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am not opposing the Senator; I am only asking for information. This comes from the District Committee. This whole paragraph, in fact all relating to the District of Columbia, was adopted by the Committee on Appropriations without examining it very carefully themselves. The chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia knows so much better than I do what ought to be done that I submit to anything he may suggest in this connection. His explanation will be satisfactory.

I rose more especially to say to the Senate that all the provisions here relating to the District of Columbia came from the Committee on the District of Columbia. They were examined only casually by reading them over in the Committee on Appropriations. My friend from Arkansas being the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in a great measure the Appropriation Committee relied upon him.

Mr. DORSEY. The Committee on the District of Columbia of this body did not originate this section; it came from another place to us; but after the Committee on the District reported it to the Senate, and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the accounting officers of the Treasury explained to that committee that its passage would prevent the payment of these workmen for a great many months to come. The workmen and the Government alike protest against it, and I hope it will be stricken out without objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask that two bills on the Secretary's table be referred.

Mr. DORSEY. Let us dispose of this question first.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I gave notice a short time ago that I would object to anything interfering with the progress of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment to insert an additional section, as section 3, which the Senator from Arkansas asks be stricken from the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which is to insert an additional section as section 4 of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Section 4 and the matter following it provides for turning over to certain parties named in it—Gibson Brothers—possession of the Government Printing Office, and the material and property pertaining thereto, property worth half a million of dollars, at an annual rent of $5,000, a most improvident arrangement for the Government of the United States. As the shortest way to dispose of a proposition of that character I raise the point of order that it is new legislation changing existing law, and has no place on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken and will sustain it.

Mr. SARGENT. That applies to section 4, section 5, section 6, section 7, section 8, section 9, and section 10; it applies in fact to every one of the remaining sections of the bill proposed to be inserted by the committee.

Mr. DORSEY. Do I understand the Chair to rule that the point of order is well taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled all the remaining sections reported as amendments to the bill to be out of order.

The sections referred to are as follows:

SEC. 4. That the President of the Senate and the present Speaker of the House of Representatives are hereby authorized and required, in lieu of existing provisions and requirements of law, to enter into a contract for all of the public printing and binding, including the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the following manner: that is to say: That whenever Gibson Brothers, printers, of Washington, District of Columbia, shall, on or before the first Monday in June next, present to the said President of the Senate and the present Speaker of the House of Representatives a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $300,000, which bond shall be payable to the United States, and shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Senate, conditioned that the said contractors will pay $5,000 per annum for the rent of the Government Printing Office, and the use of the material and property belonging thereto, wherever the same may be deposited; that they will maintain the said material and property at its present state of efficiency, ordinary use and wear and tear and extraordinary casualty alone excepted; that they will faithfully execute all the printing, lithographing, map-printing, engraving, and binding now, or that may hereafter be, required by law, and for which appropriations shall be made, in a manner fully equal as to workmanship and promptness of execution to the present grade of such work, at a rate 10 per cent. less than the average rate paid by the Government for the same class or classes of such work respectively; the said rate or rates to be ascertained in each case by taking the average of the prices actually allowed and paid by the Government for each of said classes of work for the year ending December 31, 1878; that upon the execution of said bond, the said President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives are directed to place the said Gibson Brothers in full possession of the said Government Printing Office, and the material and property pertaining thereto, taking therefor a receipt, by special inventory, in duplicate, setting opposite each article therein described the estimated cash value thereof at the time of taking the same, to be signed by the Sergeants-at-Arms of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, respectively, and by said contractors. And in case of material on hand, such as paper, ink, gold-leaf, and binding and printing materials of any nature, in regular use, the cost of the same to the Government shall be ascertained by the said Sergeants-at-Arms, and shall be accounted for as used by said contractors at the price so ascertained, and the value thereof, as used, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States by said contractors on the 1st and 15th of each month, upon the certificate of the custodian of said property as hereinafter provided for.

SEC. 5. That all printing, binding, mapping, lithographing, or engraving, or work of a like character, hereafter to be done, for which appropriations are or may be made by Congress, except printing of a confidential nature which is paid for out of the contingent fund of either of the departments or Houses of Congress, shall be procured and executed of and by the said contractors.

SEC. 6. That the Joint Committee on Printing of the House and Senate shall, on or before the first Tuesday in March next, or as soon as said contractors shall take possession of the said Government Printing Office and property, designate the present Public Printer to act as the custodian for the Government of all of the said property, real and personal, and material belonging to the Government Printing Office, the use of which, for the purposes hereinbefore named, is granted to the said contractors, and shall guard the same from waste or disposal; that in case of the material on hand in regular use, such as paper, ink, gold-leaf, binding material, and the like, he shall certify on the 1st and 15th of each month the amount used by said contractors, together with the cost thereof as fixed by the said Sergeants-at-Arms, which certificate shall accompany the payments to be made by the said contractors as hereinbefore directed; and the person designated and appointed as custodian of the property aforesaid shall receive the same salary, and shall be required to execute a good and sufficient bond in the manner and for the amount as now required by law of the present Public Printer, for the faithful performance of his duties as aforesaid.

SEC. 7. All bills for printing and binding herein provided for shall be paid by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department on the 1st and 15th of each month, upon vouchers to be approved by the said Sergeants-at-Arms, upon a certificate by the custodian that the work charged for has been duly performed in a manner and quality as to workmanship and material as hereinbefore required.

SEC. 8. In the event that any class of work is required to be done of a different kind or character from that executed at the said Government Printing Office during the year ending December 31, 1878, the rates for the same shall be fixed by the said Sergeants-at-Arms at a price or prices corresponding as nearly as possible to similar classes of work executed at said office during said period.

SEC. 9. In the event of the failure for any reason of the said contractors to fully comply with the requirements of this act, then the law as at present existing shall remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 10. All laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I now renew the request I made to have two bills taken from the table and referred.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I renew my objection. That I cannot consent to. I have said that I would object to everything that interfered with the progress of this bill. My friend from Minnesota knows that I am as sorry to interpose against him as any other Senator, but if we are to be interfered with every few minutes when we are on the appropriation bills, we had as well say that we are going to have an extra session, and that I do not want.

Mr. DORSEY. Turning back, I ask, on page 116, line 339, that the word "six" be stricken out and "eight" inserted; so as to read:

One captain, $1,800.

That is the present pay of the captain of police, and by some error it was reduced in preparing the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on the District if that has been the salary heretofore paid to that officer?

Mr. DORSEY. That officer has occupied his present place, I believe, for eighteen years, and he has always had that salary.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. At what sum?

Mr. DORSEY. Eighteen hundred dollars. He is the captain of the police.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. On the line below, line 341 of section 2, I move to strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to read:

One clerk, $1,500.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question. This is a general advance of salaries. Now, I understood from the Senator that the District Committee had considered and thoroughly considered this portion of the bill which relates to District affairs and reported it at the salaries fixed here. They are even higher than the salaries fixed in the bill as it came to us from the House. I do not want to interfere with the Senator in the changes of these provisions in regard to the District of Columbia. I said a moment ago that the Committee on Appropriations had submitted to him as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia almost everything connected with the District. I understood him to say—and he will correct me if I am wrong—that the amendment as offered by him and incorporated in the bill by the Committee on Appropriations was what the Committee on the District of Columbia had agreed upon. Now I understand that he is going back to different lines and moving to strike out "six" and insert "eight," and proposing to strike out "five" and insert something else, and each time I notice it is an advance of so many hundred dollars in somebody's salary.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator will allow me, the bill as reported from the House reduced the salaries of all the officers of the Metropolitan police. The Committee on the District of Columbia, if I am permitted to state it, by a very decided majority were averse to that reduction, against my view. Hence, all I desire to know from the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is what has been the former salary of these officers because the action of the Committee on the District of Columbia recommended that they should be paid the same salary that they have been heretofore paid.

Mr. DORSEY. I am obliged to the Senator for his reminder. The District Committee directed its clerk to restore these salaries to what had been paid heretofore. The clerk in writing the proposition failed in the two or three instances I have alluded to and left the salaries at the reduced price the House fixed.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas simply restores the salary heretofore fixed by law and heretofore paid?

Mr. DORSEY. Certainly, that is all.

Mr. HARRIS. That is in accordance with the action of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DORSEY. That is exactly it.

Mr. THURMAN. Are the amendments of the committee through with?

Mr. DORSEY. No. The Senator will allow me a moment. In line 341 of section 2 I ask to change "two" to "five," so as to read "$1,500" instead of "$1,200." That restoration is on the same principle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. In making up the list, on page 110, after the word "dollars" in line 209, "one inspector of asphalt pavement, $2,000," should have been inserted. That was omitted in the House bill and omitted by the committee. I move to insert those words. The officer is now employed and has been.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. On the same page, in line 193, after the word "office," I move to insert "one chief clerk, $1,700." That is also omitted. It is the chief clerk of the engineer's office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. On line 178, page 109, after the word "dollars," I offer the following amendment:

That from and after the passage of this act a certain piece of property situated about two and a half miles north of the Capitol, being the property known as "Edgewood," of the estate of the late Chief-Justice of the United States, Salmon P. Chase, and all the buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith, in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes and assessments, national, municipal, or county: Provided, That such exemption shall continue only so long as the title to said property shall continue in the possession of any child of the late Salmon P. Chase and shall be used by such as a residence; and all taxes, together with the interests and penalties now due and unpaid upon said property, shall be, and they hereby are, remitted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I raise the point of order. Is not that new legislation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will allow, the Chair will state the question. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. Upon this question the Senator from Delaware raises the point of order that it is new legislation under Rule 29. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Those who are of opinion that it is in order under Rule 29—

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him to withdraw the point of order?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I cannot do it.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire him to do so because there were peculiar circumstances presented to the Committee on the District of Columbia which induced it to assent to this proposition.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I withdraw the point, to hear the Senator if he wishes to make a statement.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to say this: the property referred to belonged to the daughter of Chief-Justice Chase. During her absence in Europe a considerable amount of taxes, and not only taxes but penalties and charges, have accumulated under the general law.

The Committee on the District of Columbia sometime ago reported a bill, releasing all those penalties, interest, and charges, but it has not passed the other House. Under the peculiar circumstances surrounding the case and the fact that it amounts almost to confiscation, if not quite to confiscation, of the home of the late Chief-Justice, the Committee on the District were inclined, perhaps not from any principle that can be very well sustained, to make an exception to all general rules in this case, and release the property from the incumbrances that hang over it and restore it to the child of the late Chief-Justice free from those incumbrances. It is a measure suggested and advocated for the benefit of that family, to which we at least owe a very high degree of respect if not this pecuniary benefit. But if the taxes, the penalties, the interests, and the charges that have accumulated upon that property are held upon it as a lien, it amounts to almost, if not quite, confiscation of the property. Hence I hope without question it may be exempted.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if the Committee on the District of Columbia were not unanimous in the proposition?

Mr. HARRIS. My recollection is that the Committee on the District of Columbia were unanimous in desiring that in this particular case the taxes should be released.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope no point of order will be made, and that we can have a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall leave it to the Senate to pass upon the question, but I shall not vote to release this particular property. There are properties of the mass of the people here who can scarcely live that are burdened by the accumulation of taxes, and I should like to see the same rule of justice extended to everybody that is proposed to be extended to this very worthy lady and her property. There are, I suppose, thousands of people in the District who can scarcely raise the means to pay their taxes, and I should like to have the same measure of justice meted out to the poorest and humblest individual that it is proposed to extend to the owner of this particular property. If the committee will include everybody who is unable to pay his taxes, I do not know but that I would vote for a proposition of that kind; but to select out one individual and exempt the property of that individual while the burdens rest upon others equally as indigent, I am not prepared to vote for such a proposition.

Mr. HARRIS. While I am not prepared to assert that, according to the strict rules of logic, the argument of the Senator from Delaware is not sound, I am prepared to say that in the case of a man who has devoted the greater part, if not all, of his life to the public service, who unfortunately died poor, (which is the highest guarantee of his integrity,) who was for a long number of years a distinguished and influential member of this body, for other years the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who left this little estate to his heirs, I do not know but that a sufficient excuse may be found why we may exempt this property and not confiscate it upon the accumulated taxes.

I do not propose to detain the Senate at this late hour of its session.

Mr. WINDOM. If the friends of this amendment propose to debate it, I shall move to lay it on the table.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us vote.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to a vote.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am inclined to oppose this measure, but I should like to have the latter part of it read again to know how far this relief extends, whether it goes beyond the present owners, the immediate heirs of the late Chief-Justice.

Mr. HARRIS. It does not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am assured by my friends all around me, and I shall not call for the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. THURMAN. Let it be read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, if I am correctly informed, that property was overvalued, and owing to the absence of the owner that overvaluation was not corrected. I should be very glad to correct it; but I cannot vote for this proposition. I cannot vote to make a class of people in this country exempt from taxation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EATON. One word. It is not, as my friend from Ohio has said, class legislation—in any sense. It is a simple act for one individual in the world. That is all; it is not class legislation. Every day we legislate in favor of a particular individual because he was a distinguished officer in the Army; we legislate for his representatives; and now I am perfectly willing to legislate in favor of the representative of a distinguished civilian.

Mr. HARRIS. I will simply say that the statement of the distinguished Senator from Ohio a few minutes since is true; that is, that there was evidence before the Committee on the District of Columbia that this property was largely overestimated in value; was assessed very far beyond its reasonable value, and the bills that stand against it to-day are two or three times as large as in justice they ought to be under a faithful administration of the law. But the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas looks beyond correcting that error, and exempts the property from taxation while it remains in the possession of the family of the deceased Chief-Justice.

Mr. THURMAN. It is the most painful duty I ever felt in my life to oppose this amendment, for I knew the late Chief-Justice many more years than any man in this Senate, and I have known the estimable lady who now owns this property longer perhaps than any person in this Senate; and there is not one here who would feel more disposed, following the impulses of his heart, to do an act of kindness to that family than I. But, Mr. President, this amendment goes upon a wrong principle. We have never in this country agreed to have a civil pension list. We have provided, from the very necessity of the case, in order to get rid of them, to speak in plain, blunt language, that judges who had served ten years on the bench and had attained the age of seventy years might retire and receive their full salaries afterward, because there was no other way of getting rid of them; but never in this Government has there been a civil pension list. If there had been, certainly there would be some of us who would not have left the daughters of Roger B. Taney serve in the poorest and humblest clerkships in this city and scarcely eke out a living by very hard labor. There are others who have distinguished themselves in the civil history of this country and whose children are in poverty that we would provide for if it was the policy of this country to establish a civil pension list; but it has never been so, and of all the forms of establishing a civil pension list, or what is equivalent to it, the form of exempting property from taxation is, in my judgment, the worst.

There is a great complaint already that hundreds of millions of dollars of property are exempt from taxation in the United States. Shall we go further? Shall we say that the property of every distinguished man in this country after his death shall be exempt from taxation? Why, Mr. President, one of the greatest causes of the French revolution was that the property of the nobility of France was not subject to taxation at all. One of the greatest grievances of that country was that all the taxation fell upon the mercantile, the manufacturing, the mechanical, the trading, and the laboring portions of the kingdom.

I am compelled most reluctantly to vote against this. I would cheerfully vote to rectify the overvaluation of that property and to cut down the taxes accordingly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will vote for any measure which will refund to the owner of this property any excess of taxation which has been imposed upon it. I should be glad, if I could, to extend relief to every person that has been oppressed; but I cannot consent to single out one individual, though it may be a very distinguished party, and exempt him or her from taxation while there are other people for whom no relief is proposed. I do not know anything about the amount of taxes imposed upon this property; but the Congress of the United States can give a remedy for all excessive taxation, and for that I will vote. But to exempt this property absolutely from taxation while the property of the humblest citizen of this District is burdened with taxes, I cannot consent.

The homes of hundreds of people have been sold, as I understand, for taxes; they have not been exempted, and even churches where the people assemble to worship Almighty God have been taxed; and it is now proposed to exempt the private property of the daughter of a distinguished citizen simply because of the great respect that is entertained for her father. I honored Judge Chase; I admired his noble character; and I would be willing to extend to his family as much relief as I would to the family of any other citizen; but I cannot consent to single them out and make them an exception while I know there are hundreds and thousands of people in this District who can scarcely get the means of subsistence and who are burdened with taxes to whom no relief whatever is proposed.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I will not prolong this debate, but I wish to state a single fact. We do not want to make an exception of this case any more than Senators on the other side. We are not in favor of class legislation. In some sense a rival of the late Chief-Justice of the United States was President when he died. To the representatives of that rival we voted and we paid $3,000. A former President of the United States left no representatives, and we voted $5,000 to decorate only a year ago the grave of Mr. Jefferson. Mr. President, this Chief-Justice died poor, in spite of numerous opportunities, and he left two representatives. It is proposed to remit assessments which will actually confiscate the little property he left to his representatives. This is a mere tribute to his memory. It does not strike me as a novel and unprecedented case. I shall vote for it with cheerfulness.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 20, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to here call attention to an amendment on page 29 between lines 682 and 686. I think now it had better be stricken out as a bill has come over from the House, although I have not yet seen it, on the same subject. It was left over for future consideration and I move to strike it out.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that about the notice for bonds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the public notice to be given for called bonds required by the acts authorizing the refunding of the public debt shall hereafter be not less than ten days nor more than three months, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. No, I wish to strike it out.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What is to be done?

Mr. MORRILL. A bill has come over from the House on the same subject.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It may not pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to strike out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I have one or two amendments from the Committee on Appropriations. On page 37, lines 888 to 891 inclusive, an amendment was proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and agreed to. I desire to have it stricken out, for the reason that I have since been informed from the Adjutant-General that the clerk is not necessary. I have a letter in my hand to that effect. I move to strike out these lines:

For salary for one person, to be appointed by the Secretary of War, to assist in editing and compiling for publication the official records of the rebellion, $2,000; to be available immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the words just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On page 56, after line 1370—

Mr. BECK. We do not know what has become of the last amendment. We do not know over here what was the result announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that the ayes had it.

Mr. BECK. Yes; that was upon the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was to strike out a clause.

Mr. SARGENT. On the ground, as I understood the Senator from Vermont, that the provision had come over from the House in another bill.

Mr. WITHERS. Is it provided for in another bill?

Mr. SARGENT. It is so provided for.

Mr. BECK. There is so much confusion that I could not understand it. What was the last motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last motion was to strike out lines 888 to 891, on page 37. The Chair announced that the motion prevailed.

Mr. WITHERS. Upon what ground did the chairman state he desired it stricken out? I could not hear.

Mr. WINDOM. On the ground that since the action of the committee I have received the following note:

The Secretary of War authorizes me to say that there is no need of the provision embraced in lines 888, 889, 890, and 891, page 37 of the sundry civil bill, reported to Senate February 27. That work is now in good hands, and the provisions of the bill are ample for the purpose.

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Adjutant-General.

Mr. WITHERS. That is satisfactory. We could not hear it before, though.

Mr. WINDOM. One other amendment. I offer an amendment on the recommendation and earnest request of the Secretary of State, and I submit it to the Senate without any further remark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After line 1370 it is proposed to insert:

For the use of the diplomatic and consular service, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $20,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I submit that upon the request of the Secretary of State.

Mr. CONKLING. What is it for?

Mr. WINDOM. Miscellaneous purposes connected with the diplomatic service.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask if there is not already a provision giving a certain discretionary sum to the Secretary of State?

Mr. WINDOM. The Senate will recollect that there were $20,000 appropriated for this purpose as the bill came from the House for the diplomatic and consular bill, and it was stricken out. That is my recollection.

Mr. WITHERS. Was it stricken out in conference?

Mr. WINDOM. That is my recollection.

Mr. WITHERS. I believe that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I have but one other amendment. On page 39 I move to strike out, on line 935, the words "four thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "seven thousand nine hundred and thirty-four dollars and sixty cents;" so as to make the appropriation read "for the United States Artillery School at Fortress Monroe" $7,934.60, instead of $4,750.

In support of that motion I have a letter from the Secretary of War, stating that this amount is made up of small items and that it is absolutely necessary in order to meet the necessities of the case that it should be increased. I will not take time to read the letter unless the Senate desire it. The amendment was agreed to by the Committee on Appropriations, but was omitted in the report of the bill with the printed amendments. It was agreed to by the subcommittee after the committee had adjourned, I will state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I offer the following amendment to the bill:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, namely: For the arrears of pensions due on claims in which the pensions were allowed prior to January 25, 1879, $25,000,000; the amounts paid out respectively for Army and Navy pensions to be accounted for separately to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department. For pensions for Army and Navy invalids, widows, minors, and dependent relatives, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $1,800,000, in addition to the amounts heretofore appropriated for those purposes; the amounts paid out on account of Army and Navy pensions respectively to be accounted for separately to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department. For temporary clerks in the Pension Office, and for furniture, rent of additional rooms, and other contingencies, $52,200, in addition to the appropriations which have been or shall be made under other acts; the same to be available until June 30, 1880: Provided, That no more than $3,500 shall be used for furniture, contingencies and rent.

That the rate at which the arrears of invalid pensions shall be allowed and computed in the cases which have been, or shall hereafter be, allowed shall be graded according to the degree of the pensioner's disability, from time to time, and the provisions of the pension laws in force over the period for which the arrears shall be computed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate now take a recess until eight o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate do now take a recess until eight o'clock this evening. The question is on that motion.

Mr. SARGENT. We want to finish this bill.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senate is to take either a recess or an adjournment, I am informed by the journal clerk that it would be much better for the sake of the record to take an adjournment until eight o'clock. It seems to me the Senate might pass this bill in a very short time, however.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we can get through the bill before we take a recess. I think the Senate is pretty much talked out about this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved that the Senate now take a recess until eight o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now, on the amendment just read I raise the question of order and submit it to the Chair. It is certainly, beyond question, legislation, and of course it has not been referred to the Appropriations Committee. That of itself would prevent its being in order.

Mr. INGALLS. I know this question is not debatable, and I ask permission to say a single word. This is the identical proposition that passed the House of Representatives upon this subject, that was reported favorably by the Committee on Appropriations, and also has been acted upon by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I ask the Senator from Kansas whether this measure is not offered here for the purpose of getting rid of the amendments attached last night to the other bill granting arrears to the survivors of the Mexican war?

Mr. INGALLS. It is merely for the purpose of securing arrears of pension to those entitled to it under the act of January 25, 1879.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is the same bill that passed last night leaving off the amendment which pensioned the survivors of the Mexican war. That is what I want to get distinctly before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. It strikes out all the amendments that were adopted in the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well.

Mr. INGALLS. Both administrative and substantive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds Senators that the question before the Senate is not debatable.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question before the Senate?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The question of order. I raise the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. What is the point of order?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is a double one, either of which is good, in my judgment; first, that the amendment has not under the rules been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. It is reported by the committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I beg the Senator's pardon. What was reported was a different thing. It was not, as the rule requires, referred to the Committee on Appropriations as an amendment to this bill. It was referred as an individual bill, and before this bill was before the committee it was reported back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order raised by the Senator from West Virginia is well taken.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that it be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the amendment be reported. We could not hear it here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has endeavored to preserve order.

Mr. BAILEY. I should really like to know what is going on in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be again reported. Senators will be in order and cease conversation.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not care to hear it, as I understand it is pronounced out of order.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that the question may be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit this is not a question to be submitted to the Senate. I did not raise the question at this time that it is legislation; for as it had not been referred, of course there is no question about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided the point of order raised. The Senator from Kansas can appeal from the decision if he chooses.

Mr. HARRIS. If the question upon the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is disposed of, as I suppose it to be—

Mr. INGALLS. I have taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair on that question.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course the Senator has a right to appeal; but he did not ask that. He asked it to be submitted.

Mr. INGALLS. I may have made the request informally, but my purpose was to get the sense of the Senate on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia made a point of order on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas that it was general legislation under Rule 29. The Chair sustained the point of order. The Senator from Kansas appeals from that decision. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit to the Chair that that was one of the points; but the principal one and the first one was this, that—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The other one was that it had not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One word further. An appeal to the Senate of course is in order on that; but the other is a question of fact only, that it has not been referred, as the rule requires, to the Committee on Appropriations one day before it is submitted. It never has been referred. That is a question of fact; and of course no appeal can be allowed on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. HARRIS. Immediately after line 1142 I move to insert:

For the purchase of dynamo-electric machines to take the place of the batteries now used to ignite the gas in the Rotunda, Dome, Tholus, and House of Representatives, $2,400.

I ask that the letter from the electrician of the House with the indorsement of the Architect of the Capitol be read.

Mr. HOAR. I reserve the point of order. I will hear the letter and reserve the right to make the point of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that this amendment was offered in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but the indorsement of the Architect of the Capitol failed to reach them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This I understand not to be a provision that we shall purchase the invention of some particular man, but a dynamo-electric machine. We have had such bad luck in directing people to purchase the inventions of particular gentlemen, that it led me to inquire.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the letter of the electrician of the House, with the indorsement of the Architect of the Capitol, be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will vote with you without that.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no need of reading it. We will all vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the end of line 1851, on page 76, I offer the following amendment, which was submitted by me in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and in support of it I ask that a letter be read which I send to the Chair. On page 76, after line 1851, I move to insert:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and settle the claims of the late Captain Sam C. Reid, commander, and the owners, officers, and crew of the American private armed brig General Armstrong, belonging to the port of New York, destroyed by a British fleet in the neutral port of Fayal, in September, 1814, as proved before and audited and adjusted by the Court of Claims in its report submitted to Congress, amounting to the total sum of $70,739; and that he be, and is hereby, further authorized and directed to pay to the said claimants, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, the amount which shall be thus ascertained to be due them respectively, not to exceed said sum adjudicated by said Court of Claims, which is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I raise a question of order, and I have the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia will state his point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I make the point of order that the amendment does not come from a committee.

Mr. SARGENT. It is a private claim.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is an additional point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion—

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to state that the amendment I think comes within the purview of the rule. It was offered and referred to the Appropriations Committee, and it is the estimate of the head of a Department, and I propose to show that just as soon as the amendment is read. The estimate of the head of the Department can be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it is quite apparent now that we shall not get through this bill within a half hour as I had hoped; and I wish to submit for the decision of the Senate the question as to an adjournment for two hours.

Several SENATORS. A recess.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed an adjournment will be much better so as to conclude the record of to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The adjournment will give an hour and a half of a morning hour when we reassemble, which will be devoted to all sorts of things except those for the benefit of the public.

Mr. WINDOM. May we not have unanimous consent that this bill be taken up immediately after the Senate shall reconvene?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That there shall be no morning hour or Anthony rule?

Mr. WINDOM. That the morning-hour business and the Calendar shall be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate do now adjourn until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought to know whether there is a unanimous understanding that this bill begins immediately after the reading of the Journal and the other appropriation bills to follow, and that the morning hour and the Anthony rule shall be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate do now adjourn until eight o'clock this evening, and he desires to know whether there can be unanimous consent that the bill now under consideration shall be proceeded with immediately on the arrival of that hour.

Mr. CONKLING. An adjournment as distinguished from a recess would assist in journalizing the proceedings of the Senate provided that adjournment be to another day; but I inquire of the Chair whether it would make any difference in that regard if we should adjourn for two hours on this same day. If it would not—

Mr. SARGENT. To-day is yesterday. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. To-day is Friday, legislatively.

Mr. CONKLING. You then count this the parliamentary day of Friday.

Mr. HOAR and others. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. That may do then.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to adjourn until eight o'clock Saturday evening, March 1; but I desire first to know whether unanimous consent has been given to take up this bill immediately on reconvening the Senate and to exclude morning-hour business and the Calendar under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent that upon the reassembling of the Senate at eight o'clock this bill shall be proceeded with? ["Yes!" "Yes!"]

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand the Chair to have stated the request as it was made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and as I desire for one to assent to it—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the motion of the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the request to be that this bill should be proceeded with and that the morning hour and the business under the Anthony rule should be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what we want to understand about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent that this bill be proceeded with, and that the morning hour and the Anthony rule be dispensed with? [A pause.] Such assent is given.

Mr. WINDOM. I move then that the Senate adjourn until eight o'clock p. m., Saturday, March 1.

H. K. BELDING.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish first to have recommitted to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads a bill reported adversely from that committee, being the bill (H. R. No. 737) for the relief of H. K. Belding. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] who reported the bill consents to this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN?]. The Chair hears none. The bill is recommitted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I also ask that House bill No. 5103, on the Secretary's table, be read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that?

Mr. McMILLAN. A bill to extend the time for payment of pre-emptors on certain public lands in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did that bill come from the House yesterday?

Mr. McMILLAN. It came to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WINDOM. I yield for that purpose.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6524) to remove the political disabilities of H. B. Littlepage, of King William County, Virginia, to report the same favorably.

PORTRAITS OF DECEASED MEMBERS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask leave to make a report. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill authorizing the engraving of certain portraits of Representatives, instruct me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage and ask its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6523) providing for the engraving and printing of portraits to accompany the memorial addresses on the late Representatives Leonard, Quinn, Welch, Williams, Douglas, Hartridge, and Schleicher was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE MR. QUINN.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have another report of the same character. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a House concurrent resolution, to report it without amendment, and to ask its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed 12,000 copies of the memorial addresses delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon the life and character of the late Terrence J. Quinn, late a Representative from the State of New York, of which 9,000 shall be for the use of the House and 3,000 for the use of the Senate.

TRANSIT OF VENUS.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the report on the observations of the transit of Venus under the direction of the Navy Department in 1874 be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 3,500 additional copies of the report on the observations of the transit of Venus, under the direction of the Navy Department, in December, 1874, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

PRINTING OF ELECTION TESTIMONY.

Mr. EATON. I call for the adjournment.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to yield for a resolution.

Mr. WINDOM. I yield for the resolution and no more. I shall insist on my motion after that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the resolution.

The resolution of Mr. TELLER was read, as follows:

Resolved. That 2,000 copies of the report of the select committee to inquire into the alleged frauds in the late elections, with the accompanying testimony, be printed for the use of said committee.

Mr. EATON and Mr. GORDON. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

Mr. WINDOM. Now I move that the Senate adjourn until eight o'clock p. m., Saturday, March 1.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and five minutes p. m., Saturday, March 1) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 28, 1879.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. DURHAM. When I presented yesterday the report from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, to accompany the House bill No. 5996, leave was given to the minority of the committee to print their views. That fact does not appear in the Journal. The RECORD, which I hold in my hand, is correct.

The SPEAKER. Who represented the minority of the committee? Mr. DURHAM. The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.] Leave was given to the minority of the committee to have their views printed; but the Journal does not so state.

The SPEAKER. Such authority was given.

Mr. DURHAM. I so understand. I ask that the Journal be corrected in that particular.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal, as corrected, was approved.

LUCINDA C. DILLAHENTY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to correct an error in the spelling of a name in enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4392) for the relief of Lucinda C. Dillahenty.

INVESTIGATION OF CHARGES AGAINST THE SPEAKER.

Mr. FRYE. The select committee appointed yesterday on motion of the Speaker have instructed me to ask that the committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE OF MEMBERS-ELECT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to submit for the information of the House a letter on a subject of public interest which he has received from the Post-Office Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 27, 1879.

Sir: I am directed by the Postmaster-General to inform you that the Attorney-General has reversed the opinion of the Assistant Attorney-General in regard to the right of members of Congress elect to exercise the franking privilege, and advises that in his opinion such right exists from the beginning of the term for which such members were elected.

A full copy of the opinion will be furnished you as soon as it can be made.

Very respectfully,

W. A. KNAPP,
Chief Clerk.

HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives.

PORTRAITS OF DECEASED MEMBERS.

Mr. GIDDINGS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6523) to provide for the engraving and printing of portraits to accompany addresses on the late Representatives Leonard, Quinn, Welch, Williams, Douglas, Hartridge, and Schleicher; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage now.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be engraved and printed portraits of the late Representatives Leonard, Quinn, Welch, Williams, Douglas, Hartridge, and Schleicher, to accompany the memorial addresses delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives in honor of the deceased Representatives; and to defray the expenses thereof the necessary sum is appropriated, to be immediately available.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EXPENDITURES IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. GLOVER,] from the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, asks leave that reports and testimony be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Is this the report of a full committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I must object.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That all documents ordered by the present Congress to be published, and which are actually printed prior to the first Monday of December next, shall be allotted as heretofore to members of the present Congress, and transmitted to their residences as fast as printed, unless otherwise ordered by the members themselves.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I would like to know whether members will have a right to transmit these documents after they receive them.

The SPEAKER. The law, as the Chair understands, provides that the franking privilege may be exercised by retiring members until the 1st day of December next.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I find that members differ on this subject.

Mr. WADDELL. There is some doubt about that question.

The SPEAKER. It has always been so held.

Mr. WADDELL. It is a matter of construction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has had read this morning a letter from the Post-Office Department, (the result of sundry communications between the Postmaster-General and himself,) in which it is stated that the Attorney-General of the United States has given an opinion that members-elect have the right under the law to exercise the franking privilege from the 4th of March next, the time of their being liable to be called upon to serve as members. Under the law they receive their pay monthly from that date; and it seems to be consistent that they should exercise from the same date this privilege with reference to transmitting documents. The statement of the Chair as to the right of retiring members to exercise the franking privilege after the end of their official term is questioned. If there be any doubt about that, the Chair thinks there ought to be legislation on the subject.

Mr. FORT. They ought to have it.

Mr. HALE. If anything of this kind is got through, it had better be put on in the way of a carefully prepared amendment on the Post-Office appropriation bill in charge of some one who will look after it, for then it will go through with the appropriation bill. That is the better way to dispose of it than to trust it to any floating resolution put in here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so too.

Mr. BURCHARD. The resolution does not refer to that question.

The SPEAKER. This is the usual resolution giving books to retiring members.

There was no objection, and Mr. DIBRELL's resolution was adopted.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the rules be suspended, and there be an evening session on Saturday next at half past seven o'clock for the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, under the order of procedure as regulated by Rule 54.

The SPEAKER. This will have to be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLYMER. I object.

Mr. HALE. I want to say one word on the order of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under obligation to recognize the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. BALLOU] to make reports from the Committee on Public Printing. The Chair thinks the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia had better be waived until the business from the Committee on Public Printing relating to the printing of documents for the use of members has been disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Very well; let my resolution pass over for the present.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. BALLOU, by unanimous consent, the following joint and concurrent resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Public Printing:

Joint resolution to provide for the publication and distribution of a supplement of the Revised Statutes;

Joint resolution authorizing the printing of a portrait of the late Joseph Henry to accompany the memorial volume heretofore ordered;

Resolution to print 10,000 copies of the special report from the Department of Agriculture on the insects affecting the cotton plant;

Resolution for printing 10,500 copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1878;

Resolution relative to encouraging agricultural interests;

Resolution providing for printing 1,500 copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey;

Resolution to print 700 copies of Senate Miscellaneous Documents Nos. 13, 17, 19, and 25, relating to the improvement of the sewerage and sanitary condition of the District of Columbia, &c.;

Resolution for printing 5,000 copies of the second report of the United States entomological commission, and a resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the report of William Gouverneur Morris, special agent of the Treasury Department, on the resources and condition of affairs in Alaska; and Resolution providing for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the Narrative of Hall's Second Arctic Expedition.

METRIC SYSTEM.

Mr. BALLOU, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the amendment of the Senate to joint resolution (H. R. No. 224) authorizing the Public Printer to print 20,000 copies of House Report No. 53, on the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures, with the recommendation that it be concurred in.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes the Public Printer to print 20,000 extra copies of House Report No. 53, on the adoption of the metric system of weights and measures.

The amendment of the Senate is as follows:

In line 4, strike out the word "twenty" and insert "ten," and at the end of the resolution add "7,500 thereof for the use of the House, and 2,500 for the use of the Senate."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BALLOU moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now ask for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended and that there be an evening session on Saturday next at seven and a half o'clock for the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table under the order of procedure as regulated by Rule 54.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let that rule be read.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to inquire whether in any proceeding under that resolution it will be in order to move to suspend the rules and put any bill taken from the Speaker's table upon its passage?

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules only so far as to make the business upon the Speaker's table in order to-morrow evening at seven and a half o'clock, that business when taken up to be governed in every respect by the rules of the House. In other words, the business upon the Speaker's table taken up under this resolution will be subject to all points of order as though bills came up in their usual course.

Mr. EDEN. Would it be in order to move to suspend the rules and pass any one of the bills coming up under this order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. CLYMER. Then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. HALE. I understand the proposition is that the House on Saturday evening shall go to the business upon the Speaker's table without any morning hour and proceed to take up that business under Rule 54.

Now, I wish to say a word about the condition of the business at the present time, because investigation and finding out the present status of the general appropriation bills will demonstrate the great danger the House is in unless it shall proceed to put through those appropriation bills of not being able to finish them before the expiration of the session under the constitutional limitation.

It is an actual fact, Mr. Speaker, that at this time there are eight appropriation bills which have not got into or out of conference, and there remain only four days between now and Tuesday next, when the Speaker's gavel will fall and the session be ended.

Now, the physical impossibility of the enrollment—to speak of nothing else—of the appropriation bills raises a very serious question. The bills are long, very many of them. And in addition to them there are other bills, the post-route bill and one or two others that must necessarily be passed, which will tax the efforts of the Clerk's office, with all the additional force that has been given by the House. Now, there are the general appropriation bills; the bill for legislative, executive and judicial purposes, with all the contest upon that; the sundry civil bill, with all the amendments the Senate puts on; the Army bill, with the contests upon that; the Post-Office bill, which is now ready to be put before the House; the fortifications bill in conference; the deficiency bill, just come from the Senate; the river and harbor bill still there; and, I believe, the bill for arrearages of pensions. This House at one stage or another, or at different stages, has got to grapple with every one of these appropriation bills, pass upon amendments, put them in conference, pass conference reports, get them to the enrolling committee, and get them to the President; and all to be done between this and Tuesday noon.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know to what bill or resolution the gentleman from Maine is addressing his remarks.

The SPEAKER. To the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. HOOKER. In reference to the order of business?

The SPEAKER. Yes; in reference to the priority of business.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to place these points before the sober minds of members. I do not object to this resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia. It will carry us to the Speaker's table on Saturday night, and we can dispose then of the business that is there. But aside from that, every man here ought to be willing and anxious to take up these appropriation bills at every stage and to vote them through early and late, and to keep every other business except what is on the Speaker's table out, so that we may get through. If we do not do that, we will have an extra session.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will modify his resolution so that appropriation bills may be considered that evening, if found necessary; because if the resolution is adopted in its present form it might be ruled out of order to introduce a conference report.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have no objection to that, and will modify my resolution in accordance with the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I wish to make this inquiry in connection with a question addressed to the Chair by the gentleman from Maine, whether this order if made excludes the right of any gentleman to demand a morning hour to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It would not in the morning, but it would at the evening session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I ask to be recognized for one minute. I have a petition in my hand, several yards in length, on the subject of temperance.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will shorten his speech—

Mr. ELLSWORTH. I do not desire to make a speech. I desire to present the petition that it may be put on record and printed, and I desire to print some remarks on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can put the petition in the box, and the Chair will ask consent for the gentleman to print.

Several members called for the regular order.

BUSINESS ON SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HOOKER. Let the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does at this time because it is a motion to suspend the rules while the House is acting under a suspension of the rules. But the Chair will feel bound, in the interests of public business, to recognize the gentleman from Virginia for that motion at the first opportunity when the House is not acting under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to that, but I object to the resolution being adopted now.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it ought to pass.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the House at the proper time will suspend the rules to adopt the resolution, that will be all right, but I object now.

Mr. BURCHARD. The consideration of the resolution was not objected to. I think the gentleman's objection comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THOMPSON] reserved the right to object.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did. I think no special order should be made for Saturday night.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The objection to the consideration of the resolution was withdrawn and it came before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states, and the Chair confirms his statement, that he reserved the right to object.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to have printed an amendment to be offered on behalf of the minority of the Committee of Ways and Means to the sugar bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I wish to know if the demand for the regular order would cut off a privileged report. Under a resolution of the House the question to which I have reference was made a privileged one.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine that matter during the morning.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am instructed by the committee having the matter in charge to make the report this morning. It is very important.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the first opportunity.

Mr. COVERT. I rise to present a privileged report. I am instructed by the select committee on ventilation to present the report and accompanying resolutions which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman ask for action on the resolutions?

Mr. COVERT. Yes, sir. I do not ask for the reading of the report unless it is called for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later. The regular order is demanded; and this being Friday is devoted to the consideration of private bills.

Mr. BURCHARD. I raise the question of consideration upon private business.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to report back from the Committee on Appropriations the Post-Office appropriation bill, and to make a motion that the House non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate in gross except those in relation to the Brazilian subsidy and the classification of mail matter. I shall move to non-concur in all the other amendments; and I desire that the bill shall be taken up now.

Mr. BRIGHT. I insist upon my motion.

Mr. BURCHARD. I raised the question of consideration of private business because, after the statement of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] I think it is important that the public business be proceeded with. The bill from the Committee of Ways and Means, of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] has charge, and on which I have the floor, is the pending order; but it is not the desire of the friends of that bill that it should antagonize the appropriation bills, nor have they the right to antagonize the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest that the House probably understands the subject, and he will submit the question whether the House shall proceed with private business or not. That will be the quickest way of reaching a conclusion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will be allowed to make a statement before the vote is taken.

Mr. ATKINS. The gentleman from Georgia requests me to make a statement in regard to the situation of public business. I do not know that it is necessary for me to do so, since the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has been recognized by the Chair and has made the statement very fully to the House. I can only confirm the statement of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, in regard to the public business.

I think it is important that we address ourselves to the appropriation bills assiduously and constantly if we expect to get through with them.

There are to-day only five appropriation bills passed into laws. The remaining seven of the regular appropriation bills are yet unpassed. The last bill passed the House on last Monday. They are now in the Senate with the exception of the fortification bill and the Army appropriation bill, which are in conference. The Post-Office appropriation bill is in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations.

In addition to the seven regular appropriation bills yet undisposed of, there is the bill called the arrears of pensions bill, the southern claims bill, and the river and harbor bill, all voluminous bills, and yet to be passed into laws, and I will state that I am informed by the Clerk of the House that it will take to engross any of these bills one clerk from twenty-five to thirty hours, and it will require the Committee on Enrolled Bills seven or eight hours' work to compare them. Hence it is important that the House address itself to the business of passing these appropriation bills, if they intend to do it before the 4th of March, so that it shall be done before Sunday in order that the clerks may have Sunday and Monday to enroll the bills and the Committee on Enrolled Bills have time to compare them.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask the privilege of making a statement in regard to the business of the House. There are a number of cases on the Private Calendar, probably three or four hundred, the result of many hours of hard labor, endeavoring to settle questions of right between the Government and private individuals, claims which the committee believe to be just, and their payment has been long deferred. This being objection day, and the last we will have this session, we think it eminently right and just that those claims should be considered. As to the large amount of business that has been enumerated here, it is now in the hands of the Senate and cannot be possibly reached by the House in the few hours which are to be devoted to the consideration of the Private Calendar. The consideration of the claims of private individuals will not prevent the public bills being perfected on subsequent days, and therefore I think that the House should devote this day to private business.

Mr. CONGER. When the public business is disposed of, it will then be in order to go on with private business, will it not?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to know if I can antagonize the motion of my colleague [Mr. BRIGHT] with a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair gives the gentleman from Tennessee the assurance that whenever he can under the rules recognize him to make his report he will do so. It is not a question of privilege, but the committee is privileged to report whenever they can get an opportunity, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman at some point in the day when there is not a prevailing order.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I can only ascertain that fact by making inquiry of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to inquire, and the subject upon which he desires to report is a very important one, which should be acted upon by this Congress, to wit, the yellow-fever epidemic.

The question was taken on Mr. BRIGHT's motion; and on a division there were ayes 15, noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I yield gracefully.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am entitled to the floor upon the bill reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, but after the statements made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] in regard to the appropriation bills, I will yield for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield long enough to allow a vote to be taken on the resolution I have offered in regard to proceeding to business on the Speaker's table to-morrow night?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not now.

Mr. BURCHARD. Before the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] proceeds I would like to have him state how long his committee will need the floor for the consideration of the bill which he proposes to report?

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot tell at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a suggestion in regard to business to be transacted during the session of this evening. Gentlemen who are interested in pension bills had better look them up during this morning so as to be ready to present them or ask for action on them at the session this evening. And gentlemen who are interested in the passage of disability bills had better be prepared for them to-night, because under the order for the session to-night such bills are allowed to be introduced by individual members to be acted upon without reference to a committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is the session of this evening restricted to the consideration of those two classes of bills alone?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to inquire how long the business of the House will be under the control of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD?]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that the business of the House is under the control of the gentleman from Illinois at all; it is controlled by its own rules.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman appears to have the management of matters just now, and yields to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Oh, that is only a matter of courtesy shown by one committee to another.

Mr. BURCHARD. Under the order of the House the subject upon which I have the floor to address the House is set for consideration, under a suspension of the rules, immediately after the reading of the Journal and from day to day until disposed of, not to antagonize the appropriation bills. Under a fair construction of that order, I think I am bound to yield to the Committee on Appropriations whenever they desire the floor for the consideration of appropriation bills. When they are through I shall then claim the floor upon the special order, which will run until the subject is disposed of.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, which has been returned to the House by the Senate with sundry amendments. The committee instruct me to report a recommendation to the House to non-concur in all the amendments of the Senate in gross except the one relative to the Brazilian mail subsidy and the one providing for a reclassification of mail matter. In reference to the two latter amendments I have been instructed by the committee to ask separate votes and to recommend that in regard to the Brazilian subsidy amendment a debate of two hours be allowed, one hour on either side of the proposition; and in regard to the amendment for the classification of mail matter that debate be allowed for one hour under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. CARLISLE. Do I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to say that the Committee on Appropriations make no recommendation at all in regard to the Brazilian mail subsidy amendment and the amendment for the classification of mail matter?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in all the amendments of the Senate. But the Brazilian mail subsidy and the classification of mail matter are not regarded as proper subjects for the Committee on Appropriations; they are not such as we are in the habit of considering. We therefore deem it proper to allow the House an opportunity to express its sense upon those two propositions.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to change his proposition so as to allow four hours' discussion upon the Brazilian subsidy amendment and two hours on the amendment in relation to the classification of mail matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would be gratified to accommodate the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] but if he could understand the multitude of questions that are before the Committee on Appropriations, the time required for committees of conference to act, and the time which will be required for the enrollment of the various appropriation bills, I am sure he would not ask any longer time for discussion on this subject. The subcommittee on appropriations having charge of this bill has also charge of the deficiency appropriation bill.

I now move that the House non-concur in all the Senate amendments to the appropriation bill, except the one relating to the Brazilian mail subsidy and the one relating to the classification of mail matter; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the House will not agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to vote upon these amendments in bulk. We do not know what they are; and if we had an opportunity to examine them we might find that some of them would be acceptable to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me to say this: this bill, with all the Senate amendments thereto, has been printed for several days, and members have had an opportunity to examine it. I am only asking what this House has often done, a non-concurrence in all the Senate amendments, in order that the subject may be referred to a committee of conference. There are subjects here which we might want to debate for two or three days, and I would prefer it if we had the time; but it is a physical impossibility for us to consider and debate all the amendments to the appropriation bills at this stage of the session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. DURHAM.) Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] insist on his motion for the previous question?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon non-concurring in all the amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill, except the two amendments indicated by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and the amendments of the Senate, except the two indicated, were non-concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that on the Brazilian subsidy amendment two hours of general debate be allowed, to be divided equally between the friends and the opponents of the measure.

Mr. WADDELL. I move to amend so as to allow three hours for debate. I think the discussion ought to be a little longer than two hours.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will accede to this amendment fixing three hours. This is a very important question and has never been discussed in this House one minute.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think there is a general feeling that two hours will be ample time. I am willing that the House shall determine the question.

Mr. WADDELL. If we are going to have any debate at all let us have a full one.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WADDELL to allow three hours debate, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 31, noes 122.

The question then recurred upon the motion of Mr. BLOUNT to limit debate to two hours.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend so as to allow only one hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition will be taken first upon the longest time. If the motion of the gentleman from Georgia to fix two hours as the limit be voted down, the question will then be upon the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to fix one hour.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] so as to provide that there shall be one hour of general debate and one hour of debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Georgia proposes that the time be divided equally between the friends and opponents of the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. That was my proposition.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia is voted down, will not the proposition of the gentleman from California to limit debate to one hour be then voted on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CONGER to the motion of Mr. BLOUNT, there were—ayes 71, noes 77.

Mr. CONGER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 78.

So the amendment of Mr. CONGER was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on the motion of Mr. BLOUNT to limit debate on the amendments to two hours, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 76, noes 20.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now ask that debate upon the amendment relating to the classification of mail matter be limited to one hour under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask that the amendment in regard to the classification of mail matter be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is substantially my motion; it is only stated differently.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Georgia by inserting two hours instead of one hour. The proposition to be discussed is a very important one.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I would be glad to gratify gentlemen by allowing longer time for discussion, but it is absolutely impossible at this stage of the session to expend so much time in debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his amendment?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. No, sir; I withdraw it.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I agree with the gentleman from North Carolina,

[Mr. WADDELL,] on the part of the committee representing the friends of the subsidy, to yield to him in the first place.

Mr. WADDELL. I understand the arrangement is that those who are in favor of the amendment are to have the first hour, while the other side are to have the second hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Georgia proposes to control the second hour and leave the control of the first hour to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not care whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SMITH] or the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] has the control of the first hour; as to the last hour I do not now propose to make any arrangement in regard to it.

Mr. WADDELL. The gentleman from Georgia very naturally wants to close debate on his side. I think there is no objection to that.

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as the first hour is concerned, I desire to say I am perfectly willing to allow debate to proceed alternately in five-minute speeches.

Mr. DUNNELL. The understanding is that the first hour is to be given to general debate, and the second hour to be divided up as under the five-minute rule. Is that it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That proposition was voted down.

Mr. DUNNELL. Then, what is the arrangement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The first hour the friends of the measure and its opponents are to alternate in debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. Half an hour each.

Mr. FRYE. The first hour I understand is to be divided between the friends and opponents of the measure, and the last half hour of the second hour to belong to the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. Then the first of the last half hour belongs to the friends of the measure?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir. The Chair will now state his understanding. The first hour is to be taken alternately between the friends and opponents of the measure, and the first half of the second hour is to be taken exclusively by the friends of the measure, and the last half of the second hour is to be taken by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. WADDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is a source of gratification to me that at last, in the expiring moments of the Forty-fifth Congress, an opportunity is presented for the friends of this measure to ask the poor privilege of a vote on it. That privilege—because of the absurd and complicated rules of this House, which are a maze of bewilderment, and can always be twisted to suit the purposes of the skillful—has heretofore been denied. Upon the merits of this amendment there has never been a vote of the House, or any discussion. We are to enjoy this parliamentary privilege because, and only because, the enemies of the amendment cannot prevent it. It comes to us from the Senate of the United States in no questionable shape, and a vote on it is inevitable. With the result of that vote I have no concern. The right to ask it is all I have ever demanded; and therefore, as that right cannot longer be defeated, and is now to be exercised, I am perfectly satisfied with "the situation."

I have no elaborately prepared speech to make on the question, although perhaps it might be expected of me inasmuch as I reported the measure a year ago under instructions from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. There has been so much discussion of it in the press and elsewhere that nothing new can be advanced; but I know there are gentlemen in the House who, with certain preconceived ideas which they erroneously suppose are applicable to this matter, have neglected to examine into it, and are really not correctly informed upon it, and I desire that they may hear, if they are so disposed, what may be said on the other side. If they do not know the facts, and do not wish to know them, but desire and intend without full knowledge to vote in a certain way, they will do so of course, and will be ready to explain satisfactorily to an inquiring constituency the reasons for such intelligent legislation. If they are willing to give reasonable consideration, however, to the facts which will be presented, and after such consideration to vote according to their convictions, I certainly would be the last one to complain.

Mr. Speaker, I intend to be perfectly candid in all that I shall say, and perhaps may save some of the anxious gentlemen who are opposed to this Senate amendment an immense amount of anguish by freely admitting that the proposition recommended here is commonly called by its enemies, including some of the newspapers which are objects of terror to aspiring statesmen, "the John Roach subsidy." There is not the least doubt that such is the attractive title given to the measure by those who are fighting it, whether they be the paid agents of the English ship-owners, the advocates of rival but less enterprising American ship-owners (who are illustrating the fable of the dog in the manger) or the enthusiastic gentlemen in public life who, at the least suggestions of doubt or danger, are always ready to "flee as a bird to the mountain." Let us understand it, then, and save a repetition of it in the argument that that is what this amendment is called. I shall show in a moment that it is a misnomer in every respect, but before doing so I wish to make some general remarks on the subject under consideration.

The proposition now to be voted on is simply this, namely, to authorize the Postmaster-General to make a contract for carrying the United States mails from New York to Rio Janeiro, and from New Orleans to Rio Janeiro, once a month from each, by way of Norfolk on the one route and by way of Galveston on the other route, with the lowest bidder who can furnish the ships fitted for the service, which ships are to be American iron screw-propellers of three thousand tons burden, capable of making thirteen knots an hour, and fitted for naval service in case of war, the price for such service not to exceed $150,000 per annum on each route. Service from both the American ports is to be established and maintained; otherwise both are to be abandoned. That is the sum and substance of the proposed legislation.

Now, why is such a proposition made and why should it be complied with? These two inquiries I propose briefly to answer. It is impossible in the time limited for this debate, in which so many gentlemen wish to participate, for any one person to present more than a mere epitome of his views, and therefore I shall be as brief as possible. Perhaps the best argument I can use under the circumstances will be to quote some extracts from the report of the Post-Office Committee of the House made during the last session of Congress, and from the Post-Office Committee of the Senate during the present session. Each report was made by a southern democrat. I read the following from the House committee's report:

In assigning their reasons for recommending any legislation in regard to ocean mail transportation, the committee desire to say, at the outset, that the subject involves considerations reaching very far beyond the mere postal interests of the Government. Indeed, the latter are of secondary importance. The main object contemplated is the revival of American commerce, by the opening of new avenues of trade, thus giving a quickening impulse to all our industries. A liberal policy—such a policy as that adopted by other countries to our great disadvantage—in fostering our merchant marine by every means, including liberal compensation for carrying the mails, is absolutely necessary, in the judgment of the committee, to the national welfare at this time.

The decadence of our foreign navigation is alarming. Since 1857 the proportion of tonnage as between our own and foreign ships engaged in trade to and from this country has been reversed, although the commerce has increased nearly 100 per cent. In 1857 the value of the foreign trade carried to and from all American ports in American bottoms was $510,000,000, and the total carried in foreign bottoms was $213,000,000. In 1867 the figures were reversed, foreign ships carrying $580,000,000, while American ships carried only $296,000,000. In 1877 the proportion was still greater against us, foreign bottoms carrying $858,000,000, to $315,000,000 carried in American bottoms, and this being a million less than our vessels carried twenty-five years ago. It is estimated that we now pay yearly to foreign ship-owners, for carrying passengers, goods, and mails, at least $50,000,000. Steam is rapidly superseding sails, and, with the same tonnage, does three times the work. Our steam marine is insignificant, and, therefore, we cannot compete with the other nations of the world in the carrying trade until we build it up. Europe has two hundred steamships running to and from the United States, and the United States has less than fifteen steamships running across the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Three-fifths of the exports, nine-tenths of the imports, and all the passengers and mails to and from New York, go by steamships. Twenty years ago we spent for ship-building $25,000,000 per annum, exclusive of the immense sums expended for repairing old vessels. Nearly all this money was paid for labor. Now we expend less than half this sum, or about $11,000,000.

The tonnage in our foreign trade has doubled, but our ship-building has been reduced one-half. Our sailing vessels, so far as foreign trade is concerned, are little more than so much dead capital. The coasting trade, protected by law against foreign interference, is about all we have left that is profitable, and there is danger that even this remnant of our former commercial glory will pass away from us unless our policy is changed. Surely we will not permit our merchant marine to be destroyed, and the carrying trade of our country, situated as it is geographically, and absolutely matchless in its resources, to be transferred permanently to other hands. The time has come when we are forced to consider this subject. Our home markets are glutted with manufactured goods and other products, and unemployed labor starves in our streets. Outlets must be found for these products by opening new channels of commerce, or reclaiming old ones. Our necessities, social and political, no less than commercial, demand it. We cannot afford to neglect it any longer.

Perhaps the most remarkable feature in the history of American commerce is the strange indifference which has always until now existed in this country in regard to trade relations with the empire of Brazil. It is a magnificent country, governed by an enlightened ruler, and rapidly progressing toward a condition of the highest prosperity. It covers an area of nearly four million square miles, and contains a population of twelve millions. It has a foreign commerce of $200,000,000, and a coasting trade of about $50,000,000, open to foreign flags. Of this trade, which is yearly increasing, the United States has less than $50,000,000, and exports only about $7,250,000 to that country, although it needs a great many, if not most, of our manufactured products. The rest of the trade is with Europe, and the gold we pay to meet the balance of trade against us goes to England to purchase supplies for Brazil, all of which supplies we ourselves produce.

Why is this? The answer is humiliating. There is not a steamship line between the United States and Brazil—not even a foreign-owned one; but there are nine regularly established steamship lines between Europe and Brazil, each of which is generously paid for carrying the mails semi-monthly, and all the vessels employed are first-class and of over three thousand tons burden. England, France, and Germany each has steamship lines to Brazil, and each pays very liberally for the transportation of the mails there and elsewhere on the high seas. There is not a single American banking-house in Brazil, and not a banking house in New York doing Brazilian business. All exchanges are negotiated through London. Every letter from this country directed to Brazil has to go, not directly south, but across the Atlantic three thousand miles to England, and thence five thousand miles to Brazil, and about nine-tenths of the postage on it goes to support the heavily paid steamship lines between the two last-named countries. The postage on a letter to Brazil, until Brazil entered the postal union last July, was twenty-one cents, and about eighteen cents of that went to English steamships. The postage is now less, but is divided in the same proportion. England pays her lines about $3 per mile, and France pays hers over $7 per mile, for every mile traveled, for transporting the mail to Brazil. It will, of course, take time to divert a large portion of this South American trade to the United States. England will make a desperate effort to retain it. Although, after establishing a monopoly of trade, she has sometimes reduced or entirely withdrawn her large mail-pay, she has never done so as long as there was competition. She has paid in this way in the last ten years over $50,000,000, and she is mistress of the seas.

We believe the cultivation of closer commercial relations with Brazil and other parts of South America of vital importance, and we are satisfied that private enterprise, unrecognized and unassisted by the Government, cannot successfully compete with the well-established European lines for this trade, fostered and sustained as the latter are by their respective governments. The committee regard the establishment of two lines to Brazil—one from New York and the other from

New Orleans—as necessary, for reasons which are at once apparent. Three-fourths of the imports into this country come to New York. It is the great heart and center of our commerce, the emporium of American trade. A steamship line is about to be established from that port to Rio Janeiro, under a contract already entered into with the Brazilian government, and the requirements of that contract are similar to those proposed in the substitute offered by the committee in regard to the character of the ships, the service to be performed, &c. Inasmuch as it is believed that no line can be successfully established and maintained without the co-operation of the two governments, it was thought to be safest and best, in every respect, to make New York the terminus of one line. Other reasons induced the selection of New Orleans as the terminus of the other line. In the first place, a witness who appeared before the committee, and who had negotiated the contract for the New York line with the Emperor of Brazil, testified that it was the wish of that government to see a line established at New Orleans, and that the Emperor would co-operate with the United States in giving aid to it if established. But, in addition to this, there are overwhelming considerations affecting the interests of half the American people in its favor. New Orleans is to the inhabitants of the Mississippi Valley what New York is to the Eastern States; and the great, magnificent territory of Texas, with its boundless resources of all kinds, now being rapidly developed, must be included as among her tributaries. The success of the work at the mouth of the Mississippi assures her supremacy as a commercial port for the future. But, above all other considerations, New Orleans is the natural outlet and inlet for trade between South America and the United States.

From the Senate committee's report I read the following sentences:

Our imports from Brazil are principally coffee, with also some rubber, hides, wool, and sugar, and some woods for dyeing and for ornamentation. Our exports to Brazil are mainly flour and other breadstuffs, codfish, petroleum, and lumber. We send very few manufactured goods, as nearly all fabrics are furnished from Europe.

A similar, if not worse, exhibit might be made of our commercial relations with the Argentine Republic and other South American nations, from which we make large imports and to which we make only very moderate exports, while England, France, and Germany supply their wants and profit by the monopoly of their trade.

This condition of affairs ought not to be permitted to exist. We are not only natural consumers of Brazilian products, but the natural producers and shippers of the manufactured goods needed by her people. Especially at this time should we be able to compete in her markets, when our manufactured goods are being furnished at a lower price than those of Europe, and sold, in some cases, in European markets.

But such has come to be the course of trade, by reason of the numerous, commodious, and rapid steamships plying between Europe and Brazil, while there is no direct communication between the United States and Brazil by steam, that notwithstanding so many circumstances in our favor, no considerable increase is taking place in our exports, and the Europeans still monopolize the trade with all its profits and advantages. All modern commercial experience shows that both on land and water, where there is the most rapid transit for mails and persons, there will be the greatest exchange of the materials of commerce, facilities of communication overcoming mere distance. To that market with which the merchant can most speedily communicate by letter, and to which he can most readily and comfortably travel on business and pleasure combined, will he send or go to make his purchases, always provided that prices and terms are equally favorable. It is the sheerest folly to expect the merchants of Brazil and other South American countries to increase their orders to the United States, when their letters and themselves must go and return by way of England or France.

Last year, just after the House committee report was made, a convention of the exporters of this country was held in this city, under the shadow of the Capitol, the result of whose deliberations was an earnest appeal to Congress to legislate in favor of this and similar enterprises. Since then large conventions have been held in other cities, notably in New Orleans and Chicago, asking the same legislation, and a great many meetings of the various chambers of commerce and other trade organizations of different cities have been held in furtherance of the same object. If time permitted I would like to read some of the proceedings of these meetings, to show that this legislation is not sought by any one man or set of men, but is a recognized necessity among the business men of all parts of the country. But I will proceed without comment upon them to examine the one great argument which is urged by some of the opponents of this measure as a sufficient cause of objection to its passage. They say that they desire to promote commerce by all legitimate means, and, as a necessary concomitant to it, they want to establish postal facilities where they are not now in existence, but they assert that this is a scheme to benefit one man, to wit, John Roach, to the exclusion of every other American ship-builder; that it is a "subsidy" to him exclusively, and an unnecessary subsidy, because the mails can be carried to Brazil for much less money than is allowed by this amendment. Let us examine these objections, Mr. Speaker, and see if they are well founded.

First, as to this great bugaboo, John Roach. Who is John Roach? He is a mechanic who came here from that nursery of genius as illustrated in every department of human industry and enterprise, Ireland; and came a poor, friendless boy without a dollar, but with an immense amount of brains and energy. He is to-day the greatest American ship-builder. That is his history in a few words. Like every other man who has accomplished much against adverse circumstances, he is a target for the shafts of envy, misrepresentation, and abuse. What is his offense? Why, he has not only outstripped all rivals at home, but has pushed his enterprise into foreign lands, and after a struggle of several years with the most formidable combination of European capitalists has captured for his country a great advantage of position in the fight for commercial supremacy. Whether that position is to be maintained or not depends upon the action of this House. Abusing him or decrying his services in this regard will certainly not secure it.

But is this proposition to establish mail service to Brazil a measure for the benefit of John Roach exclusively? It is said that it is, because it is alleged that he is the only man who can furnish the ships designated in the amendment. Mr. Speaker, that is not true in fact, and therefore the one great argument falls to the ground. There are sixteen other steamships, American steamships, now afloat, each of which comes within the provisions of this amendment. The Pacific Mail Company has eight, the Philadelphia line four, the Mallory line two, the Alexander line two, and Roach two, and there is nothing whatever in the amendment which prevents either of these companies from competing for the service to Brazil. The contract is to be let to the lowest bidder, and this being the case how can there be any complaint that it is not a fair transaction when there are at least three companies able to bid on the proposition? No, no, Mr. Speaker, this device will not do. Every other one has been resorted to, but, for decency's sake, do not let gentlemen fall back on this poor plea. The proposition is an open and fair one to all to bid for carrying the mails to Brazil and it will not do to say that it is legislation in favor of any particular individual. That disposes of or ought to dispose of the cry against John Roach.

But, sir, is this a subsidy? If I were to ask the members of this House who tremble at that dreadful name what they mean by "subsidy," there would probably be an immense amount of embarrassments among them. There is, I find, a sort of nebulous idea floating in the average congressional mind on this subject, which somewhat resembles the conception of the traditional goblin according to the fancy of the average child, and each is equally well founded. It is very natural, I admit, that the name "subsidy" should frighten some persons out of their propriety. I know that it is not a very fragrant name in American politics, and I certainly have no criticism to make upon those who flee before it as before the plague; but the question here is, is this a subsidy? If it is not, what becomes of the terrifying suggestion which has hung like a nightmare over the sleeping and waking thoughts of gentlemen in this House and their outside sympathizers? This is not a proposition to give a gratuity out of the public Treasury. It is a proposition to establish and pay for mail service to a new country in order to develop and utilize the commerce of that country, which is now in other hands. I ask again, what is a subsidy? Is it the payment of $1,100 per mile per annum for mail service from Philadelphia to New York? Is it the payment of every railroad in the United States an average of $100 per mile per annum for carrying the mails? Now, let me give some experiences I have had since I began my service on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It was proved before that committee three years ago that on a certain route in the far West the Post-Office Department was paying for every letter carried an average price of $800. Several hundred thousand dollars (I do not recollect the exact amount) were paid for carrying the mail over about five hundred miles, at least two hundred of which were over a bald desert upon which there was not a human habitation, and this mail, under the peculiar arrangement of the then postal service, was carried seven times a week. Four years ago the Department made a contract for carrying the mail in Texas on a route on a part of which the only conveyance was a "buck-board" wagon, and paid $330,000 for it. Under the searching investigation of the Post-Office Committee the price at the last letting was $130,000, being a saving to the Government of the sum of $200,000 on that one route. The amount asked for this Brazilian mail service is only $150,000 per annum at the outside figures, which is $50,000 less per annum than the amount saved on the Texas route referred to. From Cedar Keys to Key West we now pay $52,500 per annum for carrying the mails by steamships. Why, then, is it a "subsidy" to pay for carrying the mails to Brazil any more than it is a subsidy for carrying them elsewhere on land or sea? I understand that many gentlemen who have scruples about voting for this measure say that they do not think the pay extravagant in consideration of the advantages to be gained from the Brazilian trade, but that they do not like giving a "subsidy" to John Roach. I will not repeat what I have said on this subject, but I respectfully ask gentlemen to say what is the difference in principle in paying so much per mile for carrying the mail on land and so much for carrying it by water? The sea is the highway of nations. Every railroad and river is a post-route by our law. Why should you pay from $50 to $1,100 per mile per annum for carrying the mail by railroad, and refuse to pay any mileage compensation for carrying the mail by steamers? Is there any sense in the discrimination?

Mr. Speaker, we pay more than a million a year for supporting our Navy on the South American coast. What for? What is the Navy in foreign waters intended for? Of course the theory is to protect our commerce. But we have no commerce worth speaking of in South America, and never will have until we open up a trade there. What is that commerce worth? The most reliable statistics place it at $200,000,000 per annum. That legitimately belongs to us. Shall we assert our right to it or sit down and wait for it to come to us, while nine steamship lines from Europe are working for that trade? These are some of the questions involved in this amendment. "What are you going to do about it?" You can refuse aid to a steamship line there, of course; you can refuse appropriations for inland mail service, if you choose; but if you ignore the wishes and interests of the mercantile people of this country in this matter, you will make a great mistake, as far as the interests of the country are concerned.

Now, sir, let me correct another error that is current in connection with this matter. It is said that John Roach, who is persistently asserted to be the intended beneficiary of this legislation, has already got a large contract from the Brazilian government for carrying the mails, and therefore there is no necessity for paying him anything in this country. Mr. Speaker, John Roach has never received one dollar from the Brazilian government under his contract. The Brazilian chambers have not yet voted the supplies to pay him and are waiting to see what we are going to do. But if they had paid him what excuse is that for us in refusing reasonable compensation for carrying the mails from here to Brazil?

There is not to-day a railroad in the United States which is not subsidized, according to the argument of gentlemen opposed to this bill, and subsidized, too, at a much higher rate per mile per annum than is proposed here. Every railroad in the United States gets pay for carrying the mails per mile per annum at certain rates, and no one gets as little as the maximum amount asked for this steamship line. Why should there be a difference in the principle of payment for carrying the mails on land from that for carrying it by water? I have never seen a man who could satisfactorily answer that question.

Now, sir, I have very cursorily discussed this question, because I had not sufficient time to treat it as I would wish and as it deserves to be treated; but if there are, as I apprehend, gentlemen who have not investigated this subject as it deserves to be investigated, and who are disposed without such investigation to vote down this measure, I call upon them to consider well their votes. I am one of those, sir, who (in the slang phrase of the day) "did his level best" to fight out of the Union; but since we have been restored to the Union I have made an honest effort to maintain it and to advance the general welfare of the country at home and abroad. I believe I am engaged in that work to-day, and one of the most agreeable reflections of these last days of my public service will be that I have made an honest and earnest effort to erect again our prostrate industries and to restore the crippled commerce of this great country to its former condition. I want to see the carrying trade of the United States brought back to the place where our forefathers intended it should be, where it has been, and where it ought to be for all time to come, namely, to American bottoms; and so wishing and believing that this is a step in that direction, I most cordially support and will vote for the amendment which the Senate has put on this Post-Office appropriation bill. I trust that those who oppose this measure will give me credit for such a disposition, but whether they do or not is a matter of small consequence. I believe my course to be patriotic and wise, and I trust to time for its vindication.

How much have I left of my time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes left.

Mr. WADDELL. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. How much time does he desire?

Mr. KELLEY. I should like to have the whole of the six minutes.

Mr. WADDELL. Very well; I yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, if this be a subsidy, then we pay a subsidy to every man who carries a mail-bag on foot or on horseback. There is an answer to the cry of subsidy.

My mail of to-day brought me an illustration of our folly on this question of ocean mail service. We profess to desire to extend our foreign trade, but, as I have once before said, we act with reference to the question on the principle of the fond mother represented in the doggerel quatrain:

"Mother, may I go in to swim?"
"Yes, my darling daughter;
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb,
But don't go near the water."

We want to extend our commerce, and yet we maintain so restricted a mail service as to effectually prevent it; for adequate means of communicating by mail must precede commercial relations with distant countries.

In my mail of this morning I received a letter from Demerara, dated the 24th of January, which reached Philadelphia yesterday, and was transmitted to me by the next mail. It is a gossiping letter from a friend, in the course of which he says:

Our people would sell millions here. They want an American line of steamers, and will pay a large amount if any one will put on the ships, if the American Government will also pay to the line a like sum. The English government now pay to steamship lines among the West Indies $500,000, or £118,000. They have twenty-three large steamships varying from sixteen hundred to forty-five hundred tons, which run direct from Southampton here. There are also French and German lines, and we, with over forty millions of people, have not a steamship among all these islands. The people want American goods and will purchase them. In some of the islands they have American calico and cotton goods, and a gentleman on the ship who sold them said, "They were cheaper and better than the English;" but he also says, "It takes us twenty or thirty days to get a letter to America, and sometimes sixty or ninety days before we can get an answer, so we are obliged to abandon the trade."

We export to Brazil some $7,000,000 while we import from that country some $48,000,000; or in other words we import of her productions nearly seven times as much as we send her of our productions. How is this great disparity to be accounted for? It results from the fact that we import our Brazilian goods through British, French, and German ports. This we do from the necessity of the case, because we doggedly refuse to pay for adequate and regular ocean mail service. We cannot materially extend our international trade until we establish postal relations with countries lying across parallels of latitude and not running on them. Legitimate commerce, that which affords two profits, one to each country, crosses parallels of latitude. It runs from one climate to another. It exchanges the products of manufacturing countries with nations which produce raw material. We want such markets, and Brazil affords an ample one.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WADDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The whole of the gentleman's half hour has expired.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] had an hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He has had the first half of the first hour and will have the first half of the second hour. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WADDELL. There seems to be some strange misapprehension as to the division of time. I would like to know what is the Chair's understanding.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the gentleman from North Carolina was to have the first half hour; that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] should control the second half hour; that the gentleman from North Carolina should have the third half hour; and the gentleman from Georgia the last half hour.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, over-production or under-consumption of the products of American industry for several years past has at last forced public attention to the necessity of discovering and opening up new markets for those products. In other words, our foreign commerce, long neglected and allowed to dwindle and drag on an unprofitable existence, begins to excite an interest in some degree commensurate with its transcendent importance. Our attention as a people is no longer confined to the wants of an internal commerce, already provided for in respect of facilities for transportation, with a liberality of outlay and enterprise almost without parallel. The surplus that remains undisposed of after the wants of home consumers have been supplied is so great and is susceptible of such further enlargement that the instinct of commercial gain as a spur to our statesmen is forcing them away from questions abstract, sentimental, and more or less impracticable to the great subject of foreign trade and the best means of reviving and promoting its growth.

I do not stop, Mr. Speaker, to dwell upon the general advantages of an extended foreign commerce. Its history has been written time and time over. From the days of Tyre and Carthage, and even from a date more remote, foreign commerce and wealth and power have gone hand in hand. In universal history they are inseparable. All the arguments, however, and precedents upon that subject address themselves just now to this country with peculiar and exceptional force. We are a debtor nation, required annually to meet large interest demands upon national, State, and corporate obligations in the hands of foreigners. This interest is due in the precious metal, of which our supply is at present totally inadequate to our domestic wants—the effort to resume and maintain specie payment requiring, in my judgment, a quantity of the precious metals far in excess of our supply at present.

What our statesmen should aim at is the revival and extension of trade with the outside world that will secure to us a permanent annual balance to meet this annual drain, and provide a firm basis for the maintenance of a redeemable currency. Unless it is intended to delude the people with the mere pretense of a specie-paying system, we should be prepared to meet a demand for the precious metals, whenever it does come, as it will in all probability do at some unexpected crisis. At present there is resumption simply because there is no demand for the precious metals.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak at length on the measures which are in my judgment best calculated to revive and build up our foreign commerce. To do so would require more time than is allotted me. I shall, however, allude briefly to one measure, which has been much insisted upon during the last and this session, and seems to be a favorite idea with many distinguished men on both sides of the Hall—I allude to the policy of subsidies. On another occasion I have on this floor dissented from this policy, and my convictions have grown in strength. It impresses me as a patchwork policy that can accomplish no permanent good.

Our Government cannot, in my judgment, enter into successful competition in the subsidy policy with governments such as England, France, or Germany, or Spain, that can without legislative consent grant or lessen or raise subsidies. If existing aid to steamship lines is not enough to drive a subsidized line of ours from participation in a particular commerce, they have it in their power to keep and will not fail to keep our lines at a disadvantage, as experience has shown, by increased subsidies to their own lines. We can only submit, or yield to a demand for further aid to our lines, which I think would not and should not be sanctioned by the people, from whose pockets the money must come. Public opinion, in my judgment, in this country is opposed to the whole theory of subsidies as a species of demoralizing, corrupting governmental favoritism, not to be encouraged or tolerated under a Government established to secure justice to all and favor to none.

If we do not subsidize, what shall we do? My answer to this question is short. Instead of offering inducements to foreign trade in the way of reduced freights, offer it in the way of increased prices for their products that we need. Reduce the tariff; let the foreign articles come in upon such terms as that the owner will find it as much to his interest to trade with us as with any other people. Let our own people buy ships where they can buy them cheapest, and to that end repeal the iniquitous navigation laws that have stood so long a blot upon the statute-book, and a stigma upon the intelligence, enlightenment, and liberality of the American people. Give us free ships and a freer commerce, and a work will be accomplished for the nation which no amount of subsidy would ever accomplish. The skill, the enterprise, and energy of our people would carry us, under such a policy, at no distant day to the front rank of commercial nations.

But, Mr. Speaker, while I have watched with much interest every effort upon this floor to modify our unwise and I think pernicious tariff system, I have at last been forced to the conviction that relief to our commerce in that direction is very far distant. Here is subsidy piled upon subsidy until there has been reared a mountain of injustice and iniquity, to be overturned it seems by nothing short of a great popular uprising. I have confidence enough in the intelligence and will of the American people to believe that they will not always tamely submit to have millions extorted annually from them in the way of bounties to a favored few, and that sooner or later their Representatives upon this floor will execute their high behests, despite the clamor and importunities of an impudent lobby. As the next measure of relief—a revision of the tariff failing—I would hail with satisfaction the negotiation of liberal reciprocity treaties with the various countries whose trade is desirable; treaties somewhat upon the basis of that with the Sandwich Islands.

We desire, and should have, a large share of the commerce of Saint Domingo and Cuba, the British, French, Dutch, and Danish West India Islands and Colonies, Mexico and the peninsula of Yucatan, the Central American states, Honduras, Guatemala, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Salvador, and the South American states, with their free labor and almost unlimited capacity. The negotiations of such treaties would develop production largely in those countries, furnish us a market for our surplus production, and give a vast impulse to our shipping interests, now languishing and sadly in need of encouragement. Having had an opportunity, under resolution of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and by courtesy of the House, to spend several days on the Island of Cuba during the month of April last, and to consider somewhat our trade relations with it, I invite the attention of the House for a few moments to that very interesting subject. We look upon the map and see Cuba at our feet, within thirty leagues of our southern limit. We leave Key West at nightfall and reach Havana in time to hear the boom of the morning gun at Moro. Her history has been interesting, and in relation to other Spanish colonies exceptional. Discovered in 1492 by Columbus during his first voyage, it was permanently colonized in 1511, and became the base of Cortez's operations against Mexico. In 1762 Havana, its leading city, was captured by a British armament, and restored the following year.

Though in the early part of the present century every continental portion of Spanish America established its independence, Cuba remained faithful to the mother country. In compliment to her fidelity she has been called "the Ever Faithful Isle." She became a sure place of refuge for thousands of Spaniards driven from the mainland by the infuriated natives as they rose in rebellion against Spanish domination. Within our own recollection the island has been an object of cupidity to our people and Government, having been twice attacked in 1850-'51 by individual American citizens without success, each time under the leadership of Lopez, a Spaniard, who, as did many brave men under him, paid the penalty of failure with his life. Of its million and one-third population, nearly one-half are creoles or native Cubans, about one-tenth native Spaniards, and the remainder blacks or colored people of negro origin. Upon these last the prosperity of the island depends, as they alone can do the work of the sugar estates. The native Spaniards control the government, and administer it in a manner scandalously unjust and oppressive.

Though the Spanish revolution that drove Queen Isabella from the throne led to a measure known as the Moret law, freeing all slaves at the age of sixty and emancipating the unborn offspring of slaves, the Spaniards would not enforce it, nor even allow its publication. Though the insurrection that lasted several years has ended, and Spanish authority seems fully restored over the island, it is incredible that the Spanish element, one-tenth of the population, can long continue a domination so hateful and galling to the balance of the people. The issue must again and yet again come up until the last of Spanish dependencies in the New World shall drop from the withered parent stem. A Nemesis seems to have followed Spain to avenge the iniquities of her colonial policy. Says Dr. Draper in his Civil Policy of America, pages 96, 97:

What Spain did on this continent can never be too often related; it ought never to be forgotten. She acted with an appalling atrocity to the Indians, as though they did not belong to the human race. Their land and goods were taken by apostolic authority. Their persons were seized under the text that the heathen are given as an inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession. It was one unspeakable outrage, one unutterable ruin without discrimination of age or sex. Those who died not under the lash in a tropical sun, died in the darkness of the mine.

From sequestered sand-banks, where the red flamingo fishes in the gray of the morning; from fever-stricken mangrove thickets and the gloom of impenetrable forests; from hiding-places in the clefts of rocks and the solitude of invisible caves; from the eternal snows of the Andes, when there was no witness but the all-seeing sun, there went up to God a cry of human despair. By millions upon millions whole races and nations were remorselessly cut off. The bishop of Cheapa affirms that more than fifteen million were exterminated in his time.

From Mexico and Peru a civilization that might have instructed Europe was crushed out. The crime of Spain became her punishment. Look at her present state. Where is all that enterprise, that energy, that intelligence, that made her the leading nation of Europe? Lost in the wilds of America; swamped in Indian blood. Has she found it possible to recruit that true intellectual aristocracy she lost? The emigration of her best and bravest wrought her irreparable ruin. The Mexican and Peruvian have had their revenge. There lies the deteriorated country utterly past cure.

I cannot free myself, Mr. Speaker, from the conviction that at no very distant day a difficult problem in relation to Cuba will be presented to this country for solution, involving the question of its incorporation by purchase or conquest or voluntary accession into our great system. It is to our statesmen no new question, having on more than one occasion heretofore excited deep interest and bitter discussion. What modification public sentiment may have undergone, under the stress of our own changed condition, it is difficult to estimate, but the belief is yet widespread that our interest, if not our safety as a nation, will be promoted by its acquisition on fair and honorable terms.

Turning to the subject of our commerce with that island, I invite the attention of the House now to some facts bearing upon that matter that may not be devoid of interest or value. They will at least show that unless the present Cuban tariff is modified by treaty or otherwise there can be no considerable increase of commercial intercourse between Cuba and the United States; an intercourse that would be natural, easy, and profitable if not trammelled by the harshest restrictions and the most unjust discriminations. The Cuban tariff classifies imports under four heads, and applies discriminating duties to each, as follows:

1. Spanish productions imported in Spanish vessels.
2. Spanish productions imported in foreign vessels.
3. Foreign productions imported in Spanish vessels.
4. Foreign productions imported in foreign vessels.

The application of the foregoing is shown in the differential duties upon wheat flour:

	Duty.
A barrel of flour of Spanish production imported in a Spanish vessel pays.....	$2 25
The same imported in a foreign vessel pays.....	4 50
A barrel of foreign flour imported in a Spanish vessel from any foreign country, except the United States, pays.....	4 69½
The same imported from any foreign country in a foreign vessel pays.....	5 51
The last-named duty is imposed on flour imported directly from the United States in either Spanish, American, or other vessels. But American flour could be imported via Canada, for instance, in a Spanish vessel and be subject to a duty of.....	4 69½

Thus, wheat flour imported direct from the United States pays 145 per cent. more duty than flour from Spain in Spanish vessels, and 17½ per cent. more than Canadian flour would pay if imported in Spanish vessels.

The same proscriptive system of discrimination prevails throughout the tariff upon all articles not of Spanish production or manufacture, or which cannot be imported into Cuba in Spanish vessels.

The effect of such a tariff, as must be apparent, is to protect Spanish products in the island of Cuba and give to Spanish bottoms the carrying trade of the island, or at all events the most lucrative part of it. The policy of Spain seems to be to exclude as far as possible from the markets of Cuba all importations not of Spanish production or manufacture, unless they are transported in Spanish bottoms, and she discriminates more heavily against the United States than any other nation, as shown in the item of flour referred to above. These enormous discriminations are intended to have and do have the effect of forcing the people of Cuba to purchase the products and manufactures of Spain. At the same time, strangely enough, Spain excludes from her own people the sugars of Cuba by higher duties than sugars are subject to anywhere in the world, Cuban sugar paying in Spain about 3½ cents per pound in gold, or near 40 per cent. more than the average imposed by our Government on the refining grades of Cuban sugars. Shut out from the mother country as a market for her principal product, sugar, the "ever faithful isle" turns to us and finds in us a ready and most liberal purchaser for at least three-fourths of her sugar.

Of the eight hundred thousand tons of sugar consumed annually in this country it is estimated that about 70 per cent. of it is imported from Cuba, which importation constitutes about 80 per cent. of her annual yield. It appears, therefore, that while Spanish policy excludes the chief product of Cuba from Spanish markets by prohibitory duties, and while the beet-root production in other European countries has displaced the Cuban sugars, the effect has been to make Cuba dependent on the United States as her principal market. Spain does not, however, intend to let us pay for Cuban sugar in our own products if she can prevent it by unjust discriminations against us. The very large annual balance she must have, and does have, paid her in gold, and here is a large and increasing drain that ought in some way to be checked.

The report of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department shows that the average values of the imports from Cuba into the United States during the five years 1872 to 1876, inclusive, were, in American gold, $71,364,327; and that the average values of the products and manufactures of the United States exported to Cuba during the same years were $15,466,139, leaving an annual balance against the United States in their intercourse with Cuba alone of $55,898,188. In other terms, the United States purchased of Cuba, during the five years referred to, to the extent of $356,821,635; while Cuba, during the same period, purchased products and manufactures of the United States to the amount of $77,330,695—$279,490,940 balance against the United States for the period of five years referred to.

Here, Mr. Speaker, is the remarkable spectacle of an island of one and one-third millions of people, of whom one-half are slaves and free blacks, furnishing to a nation of forty-five million more than seventy millions of products annually, and receiving in return therefor only fifteen and one-half millions in products and the balance in gold. How long shall this balance of fifty-five millions run against us? When and how shall it be checked? These are questions that address themselves to legislators and to the distinguished and able gentleman at the head of the Department of State. [I note with some interest a dispatch from Madrid, dated of yesterday, announcing the arrival of Martinez Campos, the captain-general of Cuba, and stating one object of his visit, among others, to be the development of trade between the United States and Cuba. We may hope there is foundation for the statement, and that his efforts in that direction will not be entirely unavailing.] If, however, Spain remains unwilling to encourage our commerce; if she persists in her policy of selling all to us and buying but little from us; if no modification of her unfriendly and invidious tariff can be had neither by reciprocity treaty nor otherwise, then it would be well for this country to look in some other direction for its annual supply of sugars and tropical products. Certainly a country can be found somewhere which can supply us with these things and take more liberally in exchange from our overstocked warehouses and granaries.

My attention was drawn a day or two ago to the speech of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COLE,] in which the subject was discussed in a most liberal and far-seeing spirit. He looked to Mexico and her limitless possibilities for the full realization of this hope; and indeed, sir, when we consider the recently awakened interest in reference to that wonderful country, its nearness to us and our great railroad systems, the enlightened spirit manifested by some of its own people, and notably by the distinguished Mr. Zamacona, its minister resident here, there is much of encouragement in the present outlook, both for ourselves and for Mexico.

The enterprise and energy of this country await with eager anxiety the day when Mexican institutions shall have some show and promise of stability; when life and property shall find protection and security under the laws of our sister republic. When that time comes, then will come with it a day of regeneration, progress, and promise for her that will not pass without lasting effects upon the fortunes of our own country and the destiny of the human race.

It would not be wise, however, to confine our attention to any one country. Let the world understand that we desire to trade with it; that we have in abundance what it needs to eat and wear; and while we would sell, we are willing to buy on as favorable terms as any other people whatever it may have for sale that is suited to our wants. We cannot any too soon, for our own good as a people, return to the principle upon which the first recorded commerce between nations was conducted, that between the two great princes, Solomon, of Jerusalem, and Hiram, of Tyre, who negotiated the first reciprocity treaty of which we have any account.

2. And Solomon sent to Hiram, saying,

6. Now therefore command thou that they hew me cedar trees out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and unto thee will I give hire for thy servants according to all that thou shalt appoint: for thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians.

8. And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, I have considered the things which thou sentest to me for: and I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir.

9. My servants shall bring them down from Lebanon unto the sea: and I will convey them by sea in floats unto the place that thou shalt appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them: and thou shalt accomplish my desire, in giving food for my household.

10. So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees and fir trees according to all his desire.

11. And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

12. And the Lord gave Solomon wisdom, as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a league together. (I Kings, 5.)

Here, Mr. Speaker, is the earliest reciprocity treaty upon record, and is an example that we may follow not only with safety but with advantage. The subject is one that has pre-eminent claims upon the attention of the American statesman. It should not be, it cannot be, longer subordinated by political parties to abstract or sensational questions involving little more than the mere ascendancy of this party or that, and I trust it will at no distant day find a solution that shall bring solid and permanent benefits to our Government and people.

That solution will not, however, be found in any narrow and short-sighted policy as that urged so vehemently upon us by the friends of subsidy. The blight that rests upon our commerce is but the symptom of a disease that such empiricism will only aggravate. Let it then have a vigorous, a heroic treatment that shall be directed against the exciting cause—the virus of a repressive, deadly system of entrenched bounty. Exorcise the body of the public law of this demon of greed and extortion—misnamed protection—restore to industry its equality and to the citizen his God-given right to enjoy the fruits of his own toil, subject only to the reasonable demands of Government. This great work done, and the dark, wintry day of commercial blight will pass and the era of a redeemed, regenerated commerce will come to pour upon a smiling country its unnumbered blessings.

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. PRIDEMORE.]

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I have neither praises to bestow upon Mr. Roach nor censures to heap upon his head; and I am fully aware that nothing I can say can prevail against the combined interests of the great city of New York with its tributaries, of Philadelphia and its supporters, of New Orleans, of Galveston, and Norfolk. All these combined together make a powerful influence upon this floor for any measure. But the very fact that these great interests can combine upon any one scheme that tends to their promotion stamps such a measure as the most dangerous proposition that can be entertained by the House.

Sir, the idea of giving Government aid to private corporations and individuals in this country must either be stamped out and put down or it will rise in gigantic proportions and will override all the best interests of the poorer classes of the people, from whom comes the taxation. To continue this species of protection is to perpetuate the tax that comes upon every article shipped to this country. And we are asked here to take the money from the Treasury of the United States and to subsidize a steamship line to bring products from Brazil, on every one of which there is laid an export duty before it leaves its own shores. I want to see unity of interest between these two countries. I want them to open their ports and establish free trade with this country. I want them to extend their hands half way and aid in this measure before we give money to build up the cities that are already too great.

I fear that my southern brethren are deluded by the introduction of a principle into this measure which is to lose to us every hope of a regenerated, reinvigorated, and blooming South. I call their attention to the fact that of all the appropriations out of the public Treasury made in this Congress, during at least my short term here, three-fourths if not nine-tenths have gone northward and westward. It must remain so in the very nature of things, because your geographical situation does not permit, the very climate in which you live does not permit, the manufacture to any great extent of articles for exportation. You are naturally for free trade, and desire to buy where you can buy cheapest. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will get a high rate for the very coal which is burned on this steamer as she passes by in great haste the little town of Norfolk. I yield to no man, nor to my colleagues on this floor, in their devotion to Virginia and her best interests. But, sir, I will not permit myself to settle upon the whole people of Virginia and the country a heavy and enormous taxation in addition to what they now pay, in order that Norfolk even may be benefited by the sight of this vessel occasionally as it passes by.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, for the printing of the report of the select committee of the Senate appointed to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases in the United States, with the testimony taken by said committee, and the reports and maps of what is known as the yellow-fever commission, organized by the Supervising Surgeon of the Marine Hospital Service in 1878, and the reports of the experts appointed by said committees, and certain communications from medical associations and eminent medical men, and that there be printed 6,000 additional copies; 2,000 for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 for the use of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, to authorize the Secretary of State to have the reports of the commissioners of the United States to the Paris exposition of 1878, or such of them as may be selected by him for publication, printed and bound at the Congressional Printing Office.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 1901) for the relief of Philip W. Stanhope.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 4259) for the relief of Thomas W. Segar;

The bill (H. R. No. 1301) for the relief of Henry E. Wilkinson, late first lieutenant Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers;

The bill (H. R. No. 1162) for the relief of Alfred Muller, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army; and

The bill (H. R. No. 138) for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1844) to remove the political disabilities of S. W. Ferguson of Mississippi.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the proposition to subsidize two lines of steamships between this country and Brazil is one to which I cannot give my assent. The pending bill directs the Postmaster-General to contract for a time not exceeding ten years for carrying the mails once each month, commencing not later than July, 1879, from New York, by way of Norfolk, Virginia, to Rio de Janeiro, and once each month, commencing not later than March, 1880, from New Orleans, by way of Galveston, Texas, to Rio de Janeiro and return. It provides that these lines shall consist of American built and owned iron screw-steamships of not less than three thousand tons. It provides that such lines shall receive $30 per mile, or an aggregate of $150,000 for each line. It provides that each line shall be contracted for simultaneously, and neither contract shall go into effect unless both services shall be contracted for and established.

These provisions are very striking. I do not intimate that the provision was purposely drawn in the interest of any individual. Of course it is purely accidental that there is only one ship-owner in this country who owns vessels exactly filling the requirements of the proposed law. No ship owned by a citizen of the United States and floating its flag could be permitted to carry the handful of mail between this country and Brazil. No wooden steamship could be trusted to perform this service. No steamship unless it uses a screw would answer. And a pouch or two of mail matter could never be trusted in a ship of less than three thousand tons burden. Of course gentlemen who vote for this subsidy can see as plainly as I do that a bag or two of mail matter could never be intrusted to any ship unless it was American built and owned, provided with a screw and having a carrying capacity of three thousand tons or more. Nothing less could screw open the vaults of the Treasury and deplete it to the amount of $3,300,000.

Gentlemen protest that this is not meant as a subsidy to John Roach. Now I have nothing to urge against this gentleman. I am told that he is a very capable, upright, and useful member of society. I am told that as a ship-builder he has amassed a great fortune. I am rejoiced that such should be the case; but I confess that in all this I see nothing which should move any representative of the people to lavish on him a subsidy of nearly three and a half millions of dollars. It will hardly do to urge that this subsidy is not intended for Mr. Roach. The phraseology of the bill exactly fits the line of ships which he now runs between this country and Brazil. He is already receiving a subsidy from the Emperor of Brazil of $115,000 a year for running this line. No one else in this country, so far as I am advised, now owns a line of steamships such as this bill requires, and no such line of steamships can be built in this country before July 1, 1879, when the execution of the service is to commence.

If this large sum of money is to be voted to John Roach, why is it not done openly without any disguise? It is put in the bill as compensation for carrying the mails. Our mails are now carried at a cost not exceeding $1,500 per annum, and they can be carried next year for a like amount. No public necessity exists for paying at least $3 for every letter which will pass between this country and Brazil. It seems to me that no man can vindicate this measure as one demanded by the postal service of the country. The Postmaster-General was called upon at the last session of Congress to know whether or not he would recommend this subsidy as a postal measure. On the 30th of January, 1878, he wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, saying:

With reference to Senate bills Nos. 275 and 442, inclosed herewith, authorizing the establishment of mail-steamship service to foreign countries, handed by you to the First Assistant Postmaster-General with a request for an expression of the views of this Department relative to the legislation therein proposed, I have the honor to inform you that as the steamship lines proposed to be established under these and similar bills pending before Congress are chiefly important to the country as means of establishing and developing commerce with foreign countries, and only incidentally useful as means of mail communication, I do not feel justified in recommending to Congress, as a postal measure, the granting of special subsidies in aid of such lines in excess of the payments authorized under existing laws for the transportation of the mail to foreign countries.

Thus it will be seen that when solicited for his opinion the Postmaster-General frankly and honestly stated that he did not feel justified in recommending to Congress this subsidy scheme as a postal measure. He declared that it would only be incidentally useful as a means of mail communication. And again, on the 29th of April, 1878, when the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads still further pressed this subject on his attention, the Postmaster-General said:

STR: In reply to your verbal inquiry as to my opinion of the merits of the provisions of the bill, a copy of which you handed me, entitled "A bill to provide ocean mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil," I have the honor to refer you to a letter I addressed you, dated January 30, 1878.

In that letter I stated that steamship lines such as the one contemplated by this bill "are chiefly important to the country as means of establishing and developing commerce with foreign countries, and only incidentally useful as means of mail communication." I do not feel justified in recommending to Congress, as a postal measure, the granting of special subsidies in aid of such lines in excess of the payments authorized under existing laws for the transportation of the mail to foreign countries." To the opinion thus expressed I still adhere. Considered as a mere naked postal measure, I cannot commend this bill. I appreciate, however, the paramount importance of building up and fostering our trade with Brazil and the other South American states; and if Congress should appropriate moneys for the primary object of establishing and developing commerce with those states which would incidentally benefit the postal service by the encouragement of direct, regular, and rapid lines of communication, and should trust the expenditures of the moneys so appropriated to this Department, as is done under the provisions of this bill, I am not prepared to oppose the measure or to advise against it. With such objects in view, it becomes specially a subject for the judgment and action of Congress, in the exercise of which I should cheerfully acquiesce.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

D. M. KEY Postmaster-General.

Here the Postmaster-General again affirms the opinion that no such subsidy was needed as a postal measure. He does not need nor ask for any subsidized steamship lines for the mails. He suggests that if Congress should subsidize such steamship lines for commercial purposes, they could be made incidentally useful as a postal measure. After two such emphatic expressions of opinion, he must be a bold man who can advocate or vote for this measure as a postal necessity. It is not intended for any such purpose, whatever professions are made. Stripped of all disguises, it is a bald and naked proposition to put nearly three and a half millions of dollars into the coffers of a private individual to enable him to run two lines of steamships between this country and Brazil to aid in building up American commerce. How build it up? At the expense of a bankrupt treasury and from the earnings of the overburdened tax-payers. After paying these millions, will the tax-payer be able to purchase coffee or any other article of Brazilian production cheaper than he now procures it? No; they will cost him the same. Will he procure for his farm products any better price? No; because they are carried now by foreign ship-masters as cheap as John Roach will carry them on his subsidized lines. How are the people of the United States, then, as a whole, benefited? Nowise, except in the consciousness that their letters are being carried beneath the American flag, in an American-built iron screw-steamship, at a cost of $3 each. I am opposed on principle to taking the people's money and donating it to individuals or corporations to enable them to carry on a business which cannot be carried on without such aid. Why should you take the earnings of the farmer to build up the ship-master? Why not as well tax the farmer to build up a cotton-factory, a woolen-mill, or a brewery, in the nearest village or city? Each rests on the same foundation, and each is equally vicious.

But it is not true that it will aid in restoring our commerce. I believe it will have exactly the opposite effect. There are quite a number of American ships now engaged in the Brazilian trade. Their owners have manfully struggled under the depressing influences of business stagnation and an irredeemable currency to keep the American flag afloat. Now when the country has returned to a specie basis, now when prices have reached a point as low as they were before the war when our commerce whitened every sea, now when new life and hope spring up in every breast, it is proposed to subsidize two lines of steamships between this country and Brazil. How can you expect to build up your commerce by subsidizing John Roach so that he can, and doubtless will, drive every other American ship-owner out of the Brazilian trade? Will you build up commerce by driving every man who does not own a subsidized steamship line from the ocean? How can you expect any American ship-owner to compete with this subsidized line in the carrying trade between this country and Brazil? No, gentlemen, this scheme will not build up our commerce. It will destroy what little we have, and it will put it out of the power of American enterprise to build up any legitimate commerce until this proposed monopoly expires. Beneath the baleful shadow of these Government subsidized lines American commerce and ship-building alike must be paralyzed, if not destroyed.

It is a cruel mockery to profess to be anxious to restore American shipping to the ocean when you single out one man and by pouring into his coffers the wealth of the Treasury put it out of the power of any other man to compete with him. If we would foster American ship-building, let us so change our revenue laws as to admit free of duty whatever is needed to construct our ships. If we must foster our commerce, let us change our laws, either by a system of bounties or drawbacks, or both, so as to give the American ship-masters an advantage over foreign owners. In this way we will destroy no shipping interest and we will create no odious monopolies. Every ship-builder and ship-owner will alike receive the aid of a just and impartial Government. It seems to me that it might be wise to devise some general system, which should aid all alike, for restoring our ship-building industries and reviving our ocean carrying trade. But it is not my purpose to discuss the wisdom or policy of such a system now. I merely want to give expression to my settled conviction that if any governmental aid is required to accomplish the restoration of our desolated ship-yards and to build up our carrying trade with foreign countries it must be furnished in some such way as I have suggested. This object can never be attained by subsidizing here and there an individual or a steamship line.

But, aside from these considerations, I ask what right have we to take the money of the people, earned by their sweat and toil and paid into the Treasury to meet the legitimate wants of the Government, and give it as a subsidy to John Roach or any other owner of a steamship line? I do not believe we have either the moral or the legal right to do it. The Congress has power "to lay and collect taxes, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." The phrase "general welfare" has been erroneously construed as authorizing taxation for every conceivable purpose. By some it is given a meaning so comprehensive that there is no object to which money might not properly be appropriated from the Treasury. Such certainly was not the purpose of its authors. These words were not new when incorporated into the Constitution; they were taken from the articles of confederation. They clearly meant, as the context shows, that the money arising from taxation was to be used for general and national purposes rather than for local and individual objects. And such it seems to me is the obvious meaning of these words in the Constitution. The phrase "general welfare" is used in a large national sense, in contradistinction to the welfare of a single individual locality or interest. This transcendent power of taxation, of taking by the mailed hand of the law the property of the citizen, should be jealously guarded, and no money should be taken except what is absolutely necessary to meet the actual requirements of the public service; and more especially should every questionable expenditure be lopped off now, when we are confronted on the one hand by a bankrupt Treasury and on the other hand we see every industry struggling for life under the weight of local, State, and national taxation. Time, industry, and economy alone can rebuild our shattered fortunes; time and energy alone can replace our wasted ship-yards and decaying commerce. When we have restored the loss and waste of war, both will be restored in obedience to natural laws having a weightier sanction than any congressional enactment.

Mr. ROBERTS: Mr. Speaker, my friend from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] has just congratulated the House that in the expiring hours of this Congress we are to have the dignified privilege of voting on the important question presented in the pending Senate amendment. But, sir, I fail to see in it a source of congratulation from the fact that the legislation contemplated by it is of the most dangerous and pernicious character, and comes to us at a late hour, when haste, doubt, and uncertainty pervade to an almost alarming extent. In this connection I may say that if the Senate amendment be as proper and worthy of our support as its friends would have us believe, it is a somewhat singular coincidence that, as an independent proposition, it never comes to us for our consideration, but is invariably placed as a rider upon some meritorious and proper bill. Analogous to this is the history of the Pacific Mail subsidies. Unable to bear the test of careful scrutiny and exacting criticism, which deliberate consideration always gives, they almost invariably sought to shelter their weakness under the necessary legislation presented in the Post-Office appropriation bills. The fact that our shipping interests are in a sadly dilapidated condition, seemingly the victim of an almost fatal paralysis, is the only theory upon which we can possibly account for the spasmodic and ill-conceived action contemplated by this amendment. I freely admit that our commerce is greatly in need of wise and prudent legislation, and I confess that it would give me great pleasure to extend my humble support to any properly considered measure which would, by honest methods, tend to restore our shipping interests and promote our commercial prosperity.

But, sir, I fail to see in this proposition any of the essential elements of an honest method, or a promise to secure beneficial results to any other than the beneficiary-in-chief, Mr. John Roach. Legislation of this character is, in my opinion, calculated to delay the successful solution of the problem of our commercial difficulties, because it has a direct tendency to bring into bad repute every effort, however worthy, which may be hereafter made.

Now, sir, to the consideration of the amendment. It is said that this is not a subsidy, but only the proper compensation for a much more desirable ocean mail steamship service with Brazil. It is right difficult to give this assertion a serious consideration, but its importance demands that it be practically dealt with.

The proposition as stated in the Senate amendment bears a very close analogy to the act "to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865. I am going back to that date for the purpose of obtaining a definition of the word subsidy as applied to ocean mail steamship service.

If the Pacific Mail Steamship Company did not know what subsidy meant, you, sir, will spend the balance of your life in vain in the effort to ascertain its meaning. Words sometimes acquire a peculiar definition, and if the word "subsidy" is not to be taken as Webster defines it we will turn back to an appropriate period in the history of our legislation, when the American people learned with sorrow and shame the full force of its degrading signification. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a portion of the report made to the Forty-third Congress by the Committee of Ways and Means after they had investigated the manner in which the Pacific Mail Steamship Company subsidy was enabled to ride through Congress on a Post-Office appropriation bill similar to the one we are now considering.

The Clerk read as follows:

It also appears that on the 14th of February, 1872, at a meeting of the executive committee of the board of directors, the following resolution was adopted by that committee, at the request of said Stockwell:

"FEBRUARY 14, 1872.

"Resolved, That the president, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to employ counsel and incur such other necessary expense as may be necessary in connection with the measures for additional subsidy now pending before Congress."

And on the 21st of the same month, at a meeting of the board of directors, that resolution was approved and ratified.

It also clearly appears that the statement was expressly made at the time to the executive committee and to the board of directors, by Mr. Stockwell, that the contemplated expenditure would not exceed $10,000, and was for the purpose of employing counsel, procuring statistics, and such legitimate purposes. No further action on the part of said committee or of the board of directors upon the subject appears to have been had until long after the passage of the act providing for the additional service.

It also appears that said Stockwell made personally an arrangement with said Irwin, without consultation with the executive committee or the board of directors, in pursuance of which he sent to him the following letter, under date "New York, February 13, 1872."

DEAR SIR: I inclose checks to my order indorsed to your order for $250,000, $100,000, $110,000, and $40,000, which are placed in your hands to be used in payment of your services in case of the passage and approval by the President of the bill or amendment providing for the increase of our China mail service to semi-monthly trips with a subsidy of $500,000 a year for ten years, said compensation to be reduced pro rata in the event of a reduction of the amount appropriated as above.

None of these checks to be used by you, but all to be returned to me in the event of failure, excepting only the last-named $40,000, all or any portion of which you may apply if actually required for your necessary expenses and for counsel's fees.

Very respectfully, yours,

A. B. STOCKWELL.

RICHARD B. IRWIN, Esq.

Mr. ROBERTS. These were either the personal checks of Stockwell or checks belonging to him, not the checks of the company.

Irwin claimed that the arrangement made by Mr. Stockwell with him, instead of the sum of $250,000 named in the preceding letter, he was to have $500,000, and so stated to Stockwell in reply to that letter.

To this communication of Irwin, Stockwell replied under date of May 4, 1872:

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 3d to hand. We are much encouraged by the result of yesterday were it not for the demands of to-day.

When we were defeated in the House you said to me there was some good to come of it; that if we did get our bill it would cost less.

I do not think it wise for the company to give their checks in this matter, notwithstanding I now inclose the four checks for $100,000 each as you desire, but if they must be used I would prefer my checks to be substituted for these; but as I say above, I send them because I want to do everything to insure success.

Of course you will return me my checks for $250,000 previously sent you.

Yours, very respectfully,

A. B. STOCKWELL.

Mr. R. B. IRWIN.

Mr. Speaker, in considering this question I trust we may not now experience any difficulty in properly comprehending what is meant by the modest phrase, "ocean mail steamship service," as it is employed in the Senate amendment. It will be perceived that the directors of the Pacific Mail, in the resolution just read, used the word somewhat significantly, and Mr. Stockwell, in his interesting correspondence with Mr. Irwin, seemed to have a very comprehensive idea of the intimate relationship existing between "subsidy" and "ocean mail steamship service." If they are not convertible terms they have at least had, in the past, an immense power of convertibility.

But, sir, is this a subsidy? Webster defines subsidy as "aid in money; supply given; a tax; something furnished, as by the people to their prince." For instance, a tax on the people of $3,000,000; a something furnished for aid as by the people to their prince—John Roach. How chameleon-like are the hues of this monstrous proposition! Old King Lear, in philosophic phrase, says:

Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks;
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.

Those sections of the country whose commerce is expected to improve by the facilities afforded by this amendment can of course see no wrong in it; but the State which I in part represent will not fail to fully appreciate the wrong and the outrage which must inevitably result from a successful appeal to the General Government for aid to forcibly strike down the commercial prosperity fostered by private enterprise in one section that it may be built up in another, and that, too, through the schemes and to the profit of John Roach.

Now, if this be a subsidy, as some of us are inclined to believe, then the subject is not novel, and a most pertinent allusion to it will be found among proceedings of the House in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 28, 1878, as follows:

UNITED STATES AND BRAZILIAN STEAMSHIP LINE.

Mr. WILLIS, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time the memorial of John Roach & Son, concerning the establishment of direct lines of steamship between the United States and Brazil; and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object to the printing in the RECORD.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SUBSIDIES.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I move that the rules be suspended so that the House may pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved That in the judgment of the House no subsidies in money, bonds, public lands, indorsements, or by pledge of the public credit, should be granted or renewed by Congress to associations or corporations engaged in or proposing to engage in public or private enterprises; but that all appropriations ought to be limited to such amounts and purposes only as shall be imperatively demanded by the public service of the Government."

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative by a two-third vote—yeas 175, nays 82, not voting 35.

Mr. Speaker, I had intended addressing myself to a consideration of the benefits it is pretended will accrue to this country from the commercial enterprise which this scheme was to develop, as well as the increased postal facilities that would be afforded by its passage; but, sir, it is a needless task, since the subject has been most satisfactorily dealt with by other gentlemen who have addressed the House to-day in opposition to the measure. I now ask to incorporate as part of my remarks the resolutions and most excellent memorial of the Board of Trade of Baltimore, which were presented to the House some days ago. They are as follows:

BOARD OF TRADE ROOM,
Baltimore, February 11, 1879.

At a special meeting of the Board of Trade of Baltimore, held this day, the following report of the committee on commerce was adopted and ordered to be printed, and copies furnished to Senators and members of the House of Representatives in Congress.

GEO. U. PORTER, Secretary.

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED.

Whereas the city of Baltimore is largely interested in the commerce with Brazil, which has been developed through the private enterprise and capital of our citizens until it is second in importance only to that of New York; and whereas any serious interference with this established trade would affect injuriously the prosperity not only of our own people but also of those in other States identified with us in business relations:

Resolved, That we have witnessed with profound regret and concern a renewal of the effort to pass through the present Congress what is commonly known as the "Brazilian subsidy"—a measure by which it is designed to appropriate $300,000 annually for ten years, or $3,000,000 in all, as a bounty to the Roach line of steamers, to ply between the ports of New York, New Orleans, and Rio de Janeiro.

Resolved, That Baltimore desires only a fair and equal competition with her sister cities in the race of commercial progress; and that it would be grossly oppressive and unjust, after our citizens have, by their own unaided struggles of half a century, built up a large and valuable trade with Brazil, to jeopard the fruits of their enterprise and public spirit by a discrimination against them derived from the Treasury of our common Government.

Resolved, That a memorial to Congress be forthwith prepared, setting out the reasons of our opposition to the measure described, to be signed by this board, the merchants and ship-owners engaged in the South American trade, and other citizens; and that said memorial, with a copy of these resolutions, be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives from Maryland for presentation to Congress; and that they be respectfully requested to use their utmost endeavors to avert the passage of a scheme so fraught with danger to the business welfare of this port.

MEMORIAL.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Board of Trade of Baltimore, and merchants and ship-owners engaged in the trade between that city and South America, would respectfully and earnestly remonstrate against the passage of the measure now pending before Congress to grant a subsidy of $3,000,000 in aid of certain steamship lines plying or to ply between the ports of New York and New Orleans, in this country, and Rio Janeiro.

As the friends of the subsidy have avoided risking its success on their independent bill, but have tacked it as an amendment on others of general legislation, and a full discussion of its merits in open debate may not be had, your memorialists deem it proper to set forth concisely some of the leading grounds of their opposition to a scheme which involves both an enormous and needless outlay of the public money and serious detriment to established and valuable business interests.

While the subsidy is introduced under the guise of promoting the postal service, the pretext is too transparent to be relied on even by its originators.

The cost of transmitting the mails to Brazil, carried mainly by steamers, for the fiscal year of 1877-78, according to the report of the Postmaster-General, was but $1,449. The facilities thus furnished in connection with the perfected cable communication, which is preferred for commercial purposes of importance, are acknowledged to be ample; and the Postmaster-General himself has expressly stated that as a postal measure the proposed legislation is entirely unnecessary.

In the face of such facts how utterly without excuse is the proposition to pay $300,000 per annum for a service satisfactorily performed for less than $1,500!

The same report shows that the estimates for the cost of ocean mail service of every description for the current fiscal year amounts to but $250,000—less than it is now sought to expend upon the Brazilian line alone.

But when the pretense of postal necessity is thus exposed, the friends of the subsidy seek to justify it as a means of increasing our export trade.

Besides the general considerations that may be relied on to refute this claim, we have the demonstration of actual experience.

The Garrison line of steamships was run for the ten years ending with 1875 from New York to Brazil, with an annual subsidy of $150,000. When the subsidy ceased, the line was suspended.

Let us see what was the effect of this line in developing our export trade with Brazil.

Our imports from that country for the six years just preceding the establishment of the Garrison line averaged per annum $14,528,333; while our exports for the same time averaged per annum $5,713,511. During this period there was no subsidy. During the ten years covered by the Garrison line the value of our average annual imports was $29,463,405; while the average annual value of our exports was but $6,364,600.

We consequently bought twice as much as when there was no subsidy, and increased our sales but one-eighth, although donating for the experiment $1,500,000. This was certainly a good arrangement for Brazil, but a depleting process for us. The Emperor Dom Pedro may well afford to encourage Mr. Roach with such results, especially when the practice of his government has been to lay a duty both on the imports and exports of that country, a policy which imposes a twofold burden on our commerce, and which neutralized the benefits we sought to gain by removing the duty upon coffee.

A scheme that resulted, in the case of the Garrison line, in so increasing the balance of trade against us can hardly be considered so beneficial as to be entitled to have its bounty doubled.

In the two years following the withdrawal of the Garrison line, and without a subsidy, our average annual exports to Brazil were $7,463,596, or about $1,100,000 annually more than when burdened with the subsidy.

These facts need no comment to enforce their lesson.

One of the avowed objects in granting the proposed subsidy is that we may successfully compete with England in the export trade to Brazil. But the present superiority of England in this respect lies in causes too deep and potent to be neutralized by mere subsidies.

Even could we supply Brazil with manufactured articles equal in price, quality, and style to those furnished by England, the latter would still possess great advantages in the competition.

When Brazil became a commercial nation, it was English capital which sought investment there, and established mercantile houses and banking institutions in the principal ports and markets of that country.

British capitalists became, and still are, the creditors of the Brazilian government, which is compelled annually to send large sums to Great Britain for the payment of interest, or the redemption of obligations; and the people are greatly in debt to Europe for the money expended in railroads and other internal improvements. The chief foreign banking institutions of Brazil are branches of London banks.

The intimate trade relations consequent upon this state of affairs, and the commercial preoccupation by a people so wealthy, so enterprising, and so zealous and active in maintaining their advantages as the English, have naturally resulted in their acquiring so firm a hold upon the export trade with Brazil, that if they are to be supplanted, it can only be through the steady and judicious efforts of well-directed private enterprise. The feverish and evanescent stimulus of Government bounty cannot take the place of the business instincts and adaptations that belong only to personal venture and private undertakings.

It may be further added here that the South American people have marked peculiarities of taste and habit that are to be studied and deferred to; and their long course of dealing with the English, who have closely consulted their wants and prejudices, is no small element in the hold that British retailers have upon them. Striking instances of the caprices of this trade in the dear-bought experience of American dealers who have entered their markets might be cited.

In respect to the subsidy as a means of increasing freight capacity, it may be stated that the steam tonnage of the world is to-day largely in excess of the demand. Where freight is offering or business promising steam companies are quick to furnish the facilities, and, as the last two years have shown, at but little if any higher rates than sailing-vessels.

The disturbing effect upon the markets from tonnage being in excess of the regular and normal demands of the trade and the consequent bidding for cargoes at almost any price, where there are fixed days of departure, has been injuriously felt both in Brazil and this country, especially in the heavy article of coffee, since the Roach line of steamers, with their excessive capacity, have been running to South America.

But aside from commercial considerations, the Roach steamship line (confessedly the intended and sole beneficiary of this huge Government bounty) is now doing a business so remunerative that to add an annual donation of $300,000 to its present receipts would be a wanton squandering of the public funds.

For the eight months from June to January of this year, inclusive, it appears from custom-house entries that this line has received for inward cargoes freights amounting to $161,200, and, as appears from careful examination of manifests, &c., from outward cargoes, about $104,500; making, exclusive of passage money and pay for carrying the mails, (of themselves considerable items,) an aggregate of $265,700. To this sum is to be added the subsidy now received under contract with Brazil, which, at the rate of $100,000 per annum, would be for the eight months $86,000; making the sum total, $351,700.

The cost of the steamers of the Roach line is about $400,000 each; and even allowing for such an excessive first cost, parties of large experience in the management of steamers estimate that $30,000 per round trip will cover all the expenses of the trips, including wear and tear and interest on their cost of building. From this calculation the net profits for the last eight months have been $22,300, or more than $11,000 on each round trip.

That, with these returns, Mr. Roach should be singled out for the special benefactions of Congress to the extent of $150,000 additional per annum for each of his lines, shows a spirit of reckless dealing with the Treasury that calls for indignant protest from all classes of citizens; especially at this juncture, when the nation is borne down by debt and taxation, and economy and retrenchment are imperative necessities.

But, in addition to the foregoing considerations, we have claims to your favorable action peculiar to the port of Baltimore.

There are now some twenty firms in this city engaged in the trade with Brazil, the oldest of which has been in existence more than fifty years.

There are some thirty or more sailing-vessels plying regularly between Baltimore and Brazil, all of which were built in this country, are owned by American citizens, exporting American produce, and carrying the American flag, some of which have made the voyage between the ports of Baltimore and Brazil in the short space of thirty days, while it is expected that the proposed steamship lines will make the voyage in twenty-five days.

By the venture and employment of private enterprise and private capital for more than half a century there has been built up, through many vicissitudes, a trade at our port with Brazil second only to that of New York. During the last year we imported nearly half a million bags of coffee, and exported about three hundred thousand barrels of flour to South America.

If this blow should fall upon our port it will be felt not only by Baltimore City and in the commercial circles directly concerned, but will also injuriously affect the lines of railway identified with our traffic, and those extensive portions of the South and West closely allied with us in business relations.

Whatever might be wisely or unwisely urged in advocacy of Government aid in opening up avenues of trade where none exist, it is at once the most suicidal policy and the rankest injustice and oppression to misapply the superior power and resources of the Government in breaking down business and traffic already established through the struggles, sacrifices, and resources of private enterprise, and beneficially and prosperously conducted. Surely the rewards of individual prowess and public spirit are not to be lightly swept away.

We have no sentiments but those of good-will toward our sister ports. But we do object to the employment of subsidies against us. Whatever strides may be made by other cities in commercial growth in the course of an honorable rivalry, we may emulate, but shall neither envy nor obstruct. But we have the right to claim that the race shall be fair and equal.

Reiterating our appeal for the defeat of this impolitic, unjust, and extravagant subsidy, your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

George & Co., Stephen Bonsor, Hoffman, Lee & Co., J. M. Bandel & Sons, Thornton Rollins, William Bayne & Co., Maynard, Councilman & Co., Levering, Morton & Co., F. W. Willson & Son.

Before I conclude I desire to make a brief quotation from the very able report of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] as a minority of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads relating to the same proposition as that contained in the Senate amendment. The report is able and exhaustive and entitles the gentleman to the great credit which he receives for the vigorous and determined stand he has always maintained against this subsidizing scheme. I quote the conclusion of the report:

The bill is artfully conceived to get votes from the East and North on account of the line from New York to Rio, and from the South and West on account of the line from New Orleans to Rio, and from Texas by a provision that the New Orleans line shall go out of its way and touch at Galveston both going and coming, notwithstanding the steamers provided by the bill draw twenty feet, and at the entrance to the port of Galveston there is only fourteen feet of water. Still I do not believe the House, on discussion, will pass the bill, or that the country will approve it.

In my opinion this legislation would be pernicious rather than beneficial in its effect. It would be a weight upon legitimate commerce rather than a benefit. It is a proposition, in effect, to give a bonus to assist certain persons to make a sale of steamships at a price greater than their value in the markets of the world. Its passage would be an encouragement to the lobby.

It would encourage individuals to knock at the doors of Congress for profit at the general expense instead of entering the legitimate avenues of trade, and by skill, industry, and economy make a legitimate profit. The Almighty has furnished the great highway for nations and keeps it in repair.

The United States should afford protection to the person and property of the citizen wherever he may be upon the globe; we should, at the general expense, build light-houses and improve our harbors; we should make wise commercial treaties with other nations. Then our commerce on the ocean, if unfettered by legislation, can safely be left to private enterprise.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say, that while the pending amendment may possess attractions for some because of the supposed advantages which are expected to accrue to the localities named in it, and while the prosperity of a thrifty and enterprising city may be destroyed by the exercise of an unjust, arbitrary, and doubtful power of the Federal Government in seeking to build up and foster a trade which private enterprise has failed to develop, I yet sincerely question whether the victory thus gained will commend itself to the calm, sober, second thought of those who are its advocates to-day. The wrong thus accomplished will not fail to seek a compensation. Time will furnish the opportunity, and circumstances will shape the occasion. We are not here to legislate for any particular locality, but we come here under the provisions of the Constitution which, in plain terms, declares that "no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another." It is but a few weeks since we passed the interstate commerce bill in obedience to a public sentiment which demanded that unjust discriminations should not be imposed upon the citizens of one State or locality in favor of those of another; and if this amendment is to become a law it will very manifestly appear that we do not object to the General Government's crushing the prosperity of a great and flourishing city, but we will not permit the corporations of the country to exercise any such right, that being a special reservation of Congress. How different was Mr. Webster's view of this subject as presented in his speech in the Senate, March 7, 1850, when he said:

If there be any matter pending in this body, while I am a member of it, in which Massachusetts has an interest of her own not adverse to the general interests of the country, I shall pursue her instructions with gladness of heart and with all the efficiency which I can bring to the occasion. But if the question be one which affects her interest and at the same time equally affects the interests of all the other States, I shall no more regard her particular wishes or instructions than I should regard the wishes of a man who might appoint me an arbitrator or referee to decide some question of important private right between him and his neighbor, and then instruct me to decide in his favor. If ever there was a government upon earth, it is this Government, if ever there was a body upon earth it is this body, which should consider itself as composed by agreement of all, each member appointed by some, but organized by the general consent of all, sitting here, under the solemn obligations of oath and conscience, to do that which they think to be best for the good of the whole.

Sir, when we shall have reached the conclusion that the highest obligation we owe to the Government is to make it subserve the wants of one State, utterly disregarding the rights of the others; when we shall resort to combinations of doubtful propriety to purchase successful legislative action; when we can afford to ignore past friendly relations, and upon mercenary motives seek new alliances, personal and political, it will not be long ere we shall realize—

How nations sink, by darling schemes oppressed,
When vengeance listens to the fool's request.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 1008) relating to the Cumberland Road in the State of Ohio, and to authorize the same to become a free road;

An act (H. R. No. 1094) to remove the disabilities of Asa Wall, imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 3055) to promote a knowledge of steam engineering and iron-ship building among the students of scientific schools or colleges in the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 3186) for the relief of the Commercial Bank of Knoxville, Tennessee;

An act (H. R. No. 3828) to amend section 23 of the act approved June 22, 1874, entitled "An act to amend customs-revenue laws and to repeal moities;"

An act (H. R. No. 5824) extending the limits of the port of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 6150) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept for the purposes of a voyage of exploration by way of Behring Strait the ship Jeannette, tendered by James Gordon Bennett for that purpose;

An act (H. R. No. 6225) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1878;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 105) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain officers of the internal-revenue service the amounts due them for their services as such officers previous to the time of executing their bonds and taking the oath of office as prescribed by law; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 232) making an appropriation for the benefit of the penny-lunch house, of Washington, District of Columbia.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.]

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I will use the two minutes which have been allowed me for the purpose of disabusing the minds of members of this House of the idea that the commercial classes of this country are in favor of subsidies and of this particular class of subsidies. The merchants of New York who understand their business are absolutely and unalterably opposed to this system of subsidies, because bitter experience has shown them that all interference of the Government is an injury to their business, and the granting of subsidies, instead of building up and enlarging commerce, creates a monopoly by which commerce is destroyed. If this subsidy shall be granted to Mr. Roach, then whenever an opposition steamship or vessel goes upon the route he can put down his rates of freight, take its cargo from that vessel, and reimburse himself out of the Treasury of the United States. In that way the principle of free trade, which should be the glory of this broad continent of ours and which will hereafter give us the control of the commerce of the world, will be put back for a century. No, sir; we want no subsidy. We want no protection upon ships. We want the repeal of the navigation laws. We ask to have the high seas open to us, and then American capital, energy, and enterprise will win the victory there as they have always won it in every other contest.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.]

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to state the reasons why I shall vote against this amendment. I understand that it is stated on the floor by those best acquainted with the matter that there is now a mail service between this country and Brazil, costing this Government about $1,400 or $1,500 a year; that there are three lines carrying a mail each month, thereby making a tri-monthly mail for $1,500 a year.

Mr. WADDELL. Does the gentleman say that there are steam lines carrying the mail?

Mr. TUCKER. No; not steam lines. I therefore understand that this is a proposition to give $300,000 annually for carrying the mails between this country and Brazil, a service which is now performed for the small sum of $1,500 a year.

Now, that of itself would have excited the suspicion that there was a cat under the meal. And the cat under the meal in this case is a proposition to grant aid—I will not use the word subsidy, for I do not wish to differ about words—to grant aid to a privileged line at the rate of $300,000 a year.

Now, I am for privileges to none and equal justice to all. The proposition is to grant this aid or subsidy for a steam line between New York via the city of Norfolk, in my own State of Virginia, to Brazil; and a steam line from New Orleans via Galveston to Brazil. This is giving a preference to the ports of one State over the ports of another State, which are in competition in the matter of commerce with foreign countries. The Constitution inhibits any preference given to the ports of one State over another by any regulation of commerce. I therefore am bound, even if this was a subsidy to my own loved Commonwealth of Virginia alone, to vote against it, because I am bound to support the Constitution of the United States. I therefore shall vote against it, although there is a bait to me as a Virginian, for there is to be a steam line to go from New York to Brazil by way of Norfolk.

Now, sir, it is not only this, but as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] has shown from a description of the character of vessel that is to carry the mails, it is for John Roach, and John Roach alone. It is a contract for ten years to give a privilege to John Roach over all the other citizens of this country in the carrying trade between the United States and Brazil. I cannot vote for it, therefore, because it gives preference to one State over another and because it gives preference to one citizen of the United States over all the other forty-eight millions of citizens. For these reasons I shall vote against these propositions.

Mr. FRYE. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. BLAIR.]

Mr. BLAIR. In that one minute I can only ask for an opportunity to print such remarks as I have prepared upon this subject, and to state briefly that I am earnestly and heartily in favor of this amendment. I believe that it is essential that we shall find markets abroad for our products in order that we may live prosperously at home. The very first step in order to establish a foreign trade is to secure a convenient, rapid, and commodious means of transportation. Such a line of steamers as is here proposed is the only line that will afford such facilities.

The next thing is that we should own that line of transportation, and unless in some way we give encouragement to the building of American iron vessels, it will be impossible for us to build up a commercial marine that can successfully compete with the commercial marine of foreign countries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has occupied his one minute.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for another minute.

Mr. FRYE. I will yield to the gentleman for another minute.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] who says that this bill proposes to aid the ports of one State more than it does those of another, that upon the same principle we must contract to carry mails from the United States to all foreign countries from every port of the United States since we must carry from some of them, otherwise you will afford facilities to the ports of one State over those of another.

I look upon this as very important to my own section of the country. But take the country at large. The people of the South desire to build up their manufacturing industries, and in order to do that they must attract labor and capital. But in competition with us at the North how is it possible for them to establish their feeble industries unless we who now are manufacturing more than we can sell are enabled to find a market for our goods and are furnished an outlet to send the products of our industries abroad?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to print the remainder of my remarks.

No objection was made, and leave was accordingly granted.

The remarks of Mr. BLAIR are as follows:

A FOREIGN MARKET IS THE SALVATION OF OUR INDUSTRIES.

Mr. Speaker, four centuries since this vast continent was unknown to civilized man. Its great natural resources of soil and forest and mine were awaiting the advent of the European and the development of coming generations. The hardy colonist battled with the dusky heathen, who reigned supreme among the wild animals which claimed joint and almost similar occupancy with him of the New World, and with the unfelled forest and untamed soil for a precarious existence. Unavoidably, occupations were such as yield the first necessities of life, and hunting, fishing, and agriculture, and the simplest mechanic arts absorbed the energies of the people. Production was confined substantially to these forms of labor. Whatever was required by the emigrant or even by his descendants for many years beyond the simpler commodities was necessarily imported from the old countries where manufacturing capital and skilled labor were concentrated.

It is obvious that a country must first be subdued by the rifle, ax, and plow; that is to say, cleared of wild beasts and wild men, its forests felled, and its soil broken and upturned to the sun and to the fertilizing embrace of the air, before it can become the home of more intricate employments. But gradually these rudimentary industries became firmly established and their excess of production was the purchasing power by which the increasing wants of prosperity were supplied by exchange of food and raw materials for various articles of foreign manufacture. As whatever went out of the country simply brought back its own value, it follows that the increase of actual wealth was still the consequence of the excess of coarse productions beyond the actual wants of the inhabitants; but such was the natural wealth, the natural capital, so to speak, of this continent, that the commodities which our fathers produced by a given investment of labor were very largely in excess of their own wants and of the production of the same things by the investment of the same value in capital and labor in the old countries. The tendency of this condition was to perpetuate itself, to make and keep America the producer of raw materials and coarse commodities. Liberty may properly be defined as the individual ownership of land. No nation is free where the mass of the people do not own the mass of the soil. Give every man a homestead and he never can be enslaved. He can supply all the necessities of life by its cultivation or by the surplus of his labor.

Land was free in America, and a constant stream of population flowed like a vast ocean current westerly to our shores and constantly augmented the hardy inhabitants who had already established themselves on the Atlantic slope. Slavery of the dominant race became impossible, and as capital is born of freedom just as naturally as poverty is engendered by slavery, its accumulation led to the effort to invest it in new industries for the supply of wants which had previously been satisfied only by exchange of commodities with the Old World. Transportation is not production in the proper sense of the term, and that principle in human nature which leads us to buy as cheaply as possible, a principle which is the fundamental law of trade and of the whole philosophy of finance, inevitably results in the effort to fix the point of production as near to that of consumption as possible in order to save the cost of needless transportation. Hence, as soon as a country has acquired capital from the savings of its earlier and ruder industries its people at once seek, or should seek, to encourage the investment of that capital in the more intricate forms of production. This is essential not alone as a means of ultimate saving in the cost to the consumer, but also for the security of national independence by the capability of supplying the varied wants of the people in time of war. So important is the latter consideration that it is often observed that periods of protracted hostilities with foreign powers are those of the greatest development of the manufacturing industries of nations.

Civilization seems to be merely the multiplication of the wants of mind and body, and to depend upon the possession of the means of satisfying them. The ownership of land, and its concomitant, freedom, inevitably made wages high, for every man was an employer—first of himself and then of so many of his fellows as he could hire, and the demand for labor in the established industries made it impossible for the incipient manufacturing interests of the country to compete with the production of the Old World, notwithstanding the added cost of transportation from Europe. True that gradually a more intelligent capacity was developed in the workman, and American invention outstripped the utmost ingenuity of the motherlands; but still for many years it was found to be impossible for the manufactures of America to compete with those of foreign countries, even in our own markets. The question then arose whether we should become and always remain an agricultural and mining people merely, or by adopting the policy of protection until invention and capital and skill should have established the various branches of manufacture to which our climate and people are adapted, we should have reduced the cost of production so as to be able to supply our own necessities and perhaps sell to the rest of mankind. The policy of protection afforded the only possible means of ultimately enabling us to supply our own home market with manufactured commodities, thus saving the cost of needless transportation and securing our powers of offense and defense in actual or threatened war.

Of such a problem an intelligent people could arrive at but one solution; and protection to American manufactures, and the invention of labor-saving machinery, which never could have had any motive but for the former, have made us now the second manufacturing and producing people on the earth. We have steadily multiplied our powers of production, improving quality and increasing quantity and cheapness with unexampled rapidity and with equal step, until now we are in possession of our own markets, as we ought to be, and have reached the sublime turning point in our industrial and commercial history when we can and must enter the marts of mankind and maintain tremendous investments of capital and millions of our people by selling abroad the surplus of production for which there is no consumption at home. That is where we now are in respect to some of the leading manufactures of the civilized world—cotton fabrics, iron, agricultural implements, boots and shoes, and others.

In some portions of our country the imperative need of markets abroad is extremely, even painfully, apparent. The power of production has far outrun home consumption, but the transfer of capital and skill to other pursuits in our own country or by expatriation is destructive and practically an impossibility in the business life of any single generation of employers and laborers; so that the naked truth now is that upon the development of a foreign trade are the prosperity and happiness of the American people dependent for many years. Next, then, to the preservation of the inalienable rights of men, this is the real problem of high statesmanship to-day.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

To illustrate the immense importance of this matter I wish to call attention to my own State, of whose every rock and crag and valley and leaping water-fall her sons are proud as the eagle of his nest, and of whose prosperity I have a right to demand the cherishing care of this great nation, for the Switzerland of America will be forever held by her sons as the impregnable fortress of liberty protected by law.

The soil of New Hampshire as a whole is comparatively unproductive and hard to till, yet watered by sweat from the brows of her hardy yeomanry and fertilized by the intelligent application of chemistry to the art of practical husbandry, frugality can live even upon the rocky slopes of our granite hills; while valleys abound which yield to judicious culture more produce to the acre than is harvested from the boasted bottoms of western and southern climes. On the whole, however, it is simple truth that agriculture has a hard time in New Hampshire, and, considering the excessive labor of cultivation, it would be impossible to retain a reasonable fraction of our population but for the compensations which kindly nature has bestowed upon us in our unrivaled natural scenery and all-abounding water-power. The lakes and mountains are a permanent investment by the Creator for our benefit, bearing an annual return to our people of at least $2,000,000. They bring the highest market in America to the door of every farmer in the northerly section of the State; while the improved water-powers of the Piscataqua, the Nashua, the Ashuelot, the Sugar, the Mascoma, and the Contoocook Rivers, with the unrivaled industries of the Pemigewasset, the Winnipiseogee, and the Merrimack, with innumerable smaller streams, demand from the husbandman every pound of surplus produce, for which the highest price is paid that can be realized in any part of the country for similar articles, not even excepting the large and populous centers of traffic. This localization of all the industries which are essential to the high civilization of the age, with their mutual relations and interdependence and the mutual advantages resulting therefrom, is, I think, nowhere more strikingly manifest than in New Hampshire. Give us three years' notice, and the people of New Hampshire would from their own natural resources defend her territory against many times her own numbers, because she can grow and make everything. Even of iron and copper and lead and gold she has a superabundance, and mining is becoming an important and lucrative industry in the northerly part of my own district, inviting the eager investment of capital from some of the most experienced and careful business men of Boston, Philadelphia, and New York. The active population of the State is, however, almost equally divided between the two great occupations, agriculture and manufactures. And it is upon the relation or balance between, and the absolute necessity to, New Hampshire and the whole country of its maintenance—because, as a whole, what is true of New Hampshire is true of the whole country—that I wish to fix the attention of the House and of the people. The latest authoritative figures which I am able to quote are from the last census, but they are perhaps sufficiently exact for illustration, for the population is nearly stationary. The total population over ten years of age is 260,426, of whom 126,353 are males and 134,073 are females. There are engaged in all classes of occupations 120,168, of whom 96,033 are males and 24,135 are of the opposite sex. Engaged in agriculture are 46,562 males and 11 females, making a total who pursue this primal calling of the race of 46,573 souls. There are engaged in professional and personal services a total of 18,528—8,821 males and 9,707 females. It is right here to remark that this large proportion of women, exceeding by about 10 per cent. the number of males engaged in professional and personal services, arises from the fact that the education of the rising generation in the common schools is almost wholly confided to the women of the State, and to show that experience has demonstrated that this great trust has been well discharged by woman I proudly refer to the fact that by solemn act of our Legislature, at its last session, the suffrage in all that appertains to education has been extended to women as freely from all restrictions as to men. There are engaged in trade and transportation 8,514 persons, of whom all but 388 are males. In manufactures, mechanical, and mining industries there is engaged a total of 46,553, only 9 less than are engaged in agriculture, of whom 32,524 are males and 14,029 are females.

Thus it is seen that in New Hampshire the industrial population is divided almost evenly between farming on the one hand and those pursuits on the other which create a market at his very door for everything which the husbandman does or can produce. It is only by the preservation of this overproportion of mechanical and manufacturing consumption close by the farmer that he can live at all in New Hampshire, and even then it must be in the vicinity of cities and villages where these industries are located; while in the more northerly regions the climate and scenery really are the pecuniary rescue of the agricultural population. While on the one hand the prosperity of the farming interest is dependent upon that of the manufacturing, on the other hand it is impossible for the latter to live upon the State markets at all. This is seen in a general way from a comparison of the relative value of the total production of these interests.

By the last census it appears that in 1870 the total value of all farm productions, including betterments and additions to stock, which really should properly be excluded for purposes of accuracy, but as they are massed together on the tables no method of elimination is apparent, is

.....	$22,473,547
Add animals slaughtered or sold for slaughter	3,720,243
Home manufactures.....	234,062
Forest products.....	1,743,944
Market-garden products.....	119,997
Orchard products.....	743,552
Wages during year, including amount paid for board...	2,319,164

Total income from soil and forest..... 31,354,509

During the same year the total value of all manufactured products was $71,038,249. (Sec. 96, p. 796, Compendium of Census.) The difference between the total production of the two classes of producers is then, $71,038,249—$31,354,509—$39,683,740.

Now, if the farmers sold their entire production to the population engaged in manufacturing raw materials they could only pay for several millions less than one-half, and consequently if the latter could look only to New Hampshire for a market the result would be the instant destruction of about four-sevenths of all the manufacturing capital and interests of the State; but consider further that the farmer can sell only his surplus, after supporting himself and repairing the natural waste of capital. As we have seen, there is dependent upon him about one-half the population of the State, which, including all ages, is 318,300—one-half of which is 159,150. Assuming that each man, woman, and child consumes $50 in value of the manufactured products of the State, which every one who reflects will, I think, concede to be a very much exaggerated statement, and the total market for New Hampshire manufactures, if the wants of the farming population were all supplied by the home market, would be $7,957,500; and in order to preserve our manufacturing industries in the state of activity which existed in 1870 we must find a market outside the State for $63,080,749, or about nine-tenths of the whole.

We have then, in order to support our agricultural population in New Hampshire in their present condition, to maintain a resident or local manufacturing interest capable of producing nine times as much in value as the total of the productions of the forest and soil for the same period. That we were doing in 1870; that, and more than that, we are doing now.

The question then for the manufacturers of New Hampshire is, Where shall we sell our commodities? But the question is just as important for the farmer. It is more so; because the manufacturer can transfer his capital and skilled labor to more favorable localities, while the land must remain, and to destroy a profitable home market to the New Hampshire farmer is to destroy his entire property. Where, as a rule, can the New Hampshire farmer sell his commodities at the present day unless he sells them at home? Where can the New Hampshire manufacturer sell nine-tenths of his produce unless he sells it abroad? By which I mean either in other States of this Union or in foreign countries. This question is, I believe, most vital to the population of Massachusetts and of all New England, and in fact to the whole country, although I have chosen my own State for specific illustrations of the idea.

Every year since the census was taken has emphasized the importance of the question, for the capacity of our manufacturing population to produce—and it must be constantly employed in order to live—has been enormously increased since that time, and power of home consumption has increased very slightly in proportion.

To illustrate this truth, I see it recently stated that while in 1870 Massachusetts produced 177,000,000 yards of cotton cloth, the last year she made over 800,000,000 yards. Meanwhile the population of the country has increased from 38,558,371 in 1870 to 48,600,000 at the present time, according to the careful estimate of Professor Elliott. The inventive genius of our country reproduces its miracles incessantly on a soil fertilized by the constant decay of its own superseded wonders, and whether there is any possible limit to its productive powers through machinery combined with the enslaved forces of nature is an open question. Certain it is that as yet no way has been found in which the manual toiler can live without continual employment, and it is still as true as ever that he must work daily or die. The prodigies performed by machinery will starve him to death unless we can sell to the world at large. What will be done in the far-off ages, when the world manufactures as much more than she can consume as we now do in the United States, unless some method of opening trade with the planets, and finally with the fixed stars, is invented—which we may reasonably hope, since there seems to be no limit to its power—I am unable to imagine.

I have been most kindly favored with carefully prepared statistics, just received, of the present actual condition of the manufacturing interests of my own State, collected and collated by Hon. Samuel Webber, of Manchester, New Hampshire, whose long familiarity with the whole subject, and also eminent attainments as a scientific engineer and expert in whatever relates to both steam and water as motive powers, will command the confidence of all who know him in the reliability of his data. I feel justified in occupying much space with this matter, so interesting to my own constituents, because other States with mighty slumbering resources in the South and West will see from our example how the diversification of industries, the establishment of mutual interdependence among the inhabitants of even small territories, can make an otherwise barren soil the home of grand productive forces and of self-reliant people.

Some of the latest and most important of the statistics of the manufactures of the city of Manchester and other places in New Hampshire are as follows:

Amoskeag Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 145,000; looms, 5,000; pounds cotton consumed annually, 14,300,000; yards cloth made annually, 40,200,000; fabrics made: tickings, denims, drillings, sheetings, cotton flannels, grain-bags, gingham, shirting-strips, and cotton fancy dress goods.

Stark Mills: Spindles, 50,000; looms, 1,500; pounds cotton consumed annually, 8,840,000; yards cloth made annually, 15,860,000; fabrics made: sheetings, drillings, cotton duck, and seamless bags for grain and sugar.

Langdon Mills: Spindles, 32,256; looms, 720; pounds cotton consumed annually, 1,716,000; yards cloth made annually, 4,836,000; fabrics made: fine sheetings and shirtings.

Manchester Mills: Cotton spindles, 75,000; worsted spindles, 15,000; looms, 2,500; printing-machines, 15; pounds cotton consumed annually, 4,160,000; pounds wool consumed annually, 1,820,000; yards cloth made annually, 28,600,000; yards cloth printed, (part purchased,) 40,000,000; yards cloth dyed, 12,500,000; fabrics made: cotton and worsted dress goods and printed calicoes.

Olzendam's Hosiery Mills: Knitting machines, 120; pounds cotton consumed annually, 78,000; pounds wool consumed annually, 182,000; pairs hose produced annually, 78,000 dozen.

Amoskeag Ax Company: Tons iron and steel consumed annually, 300; axes, hatchets, adzes, picks, &c., made annually, 164,000.

P. C. Cheney & Co.'s Paper Mills: Tons of stock used annually, 1,000; tons of paper produced annually, Manila, 700.

John Hoyt & Son, paper, Manchester: Tons stock used annually, 1,000; tons paper made annually, book and news, 700.

STATISTICS OF NASHUA.

Nashua Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 75,000; looms, 1,800; pounds cotton consumed annually, 7,466,000; yards of cloth produced annually, 16,000,000; fabrics made: sheetings, shirtings, and cotton flannels.

Jackson Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 25,000; looms, 800; pounds cotton used annually, 4,200,000; pounds cloth produced, 10,000,000; fabrics made: heavy sheetings and shirtings.

Vale Mills Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 5,000; looms, 90; pounds cotton used annually, (about,) 350,000; pounds cloth produced, (about,) 1,000,000; fabrics made: heavy shirtings.

STATISTICS OF SUNKOOK.

China Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 44,000; looms, 1,000; pounds cotton used annually, 1,800,000; yards cloth produced, 11,440,000; fabrics made, print cloths.

Webster Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 25,000; looms, 650; pounds cotton used annually, 1,308,500; yards cloth produced, print cloths, 8,320,000.

Pembroke Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 15,400; looms, 300; pounds cotton used annually, 540,000; yards cloth produced, print cloths, 3,432,000.

FISHERVILLE AND OTHER PLACES.

Contoocook and Penacook Mills: Print cloths—spindles, 16,500; looms, 480; pounds cotton consumed annually, (about,) 864,000; yards cloth produced annually, (about,) 5,401,000.

Hooksett Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 15,000; looms, 430; pounds cotton consumed annually, (about,) 777,000; yards cloth produced annually, (about,) 4,000,000; fabrics made: print cloths, cambrics, &c.

Pittsfield Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 5,000; looms, 150; pounds cotton consumed annually, (about,) 416,000; yards cloth produced annually, (about,) 1,755,000; fabrics made: sheetings and shirtings.

Winnepiscaukee Mills: Spindles, 7,500; looms, 150; pounds cotton consumed annually, (about,) 406,000; yards sheeting produced, (about,) 1,750,000.

Monadnock Mills: Spindles, 16,000; looms, 450; pounds cotton consumed annually, 620,000; yards cloth produced annually, 2,000,000; fabrics made: sheetings and quilts.

Home Mills, Claremont: Spindles, 3,000; looms, 52; pounds cotton consumed annually, (about,) 200,000; yards sheeting produced annually, (about,) 600,000.

J. D. Colony & Sons: Spindles, 2,224; looms, 50; pounds cotton consumed, (about,) 150,000; yards cloth produced, (about,) 500,000.

Columbia Manufacturing Company, New Ipswich: Spindles, 13,500; looms, 228; pounds cotton consumed annually, (about,) 1,500,000; yards cloth produced, denims and stripes, (about,) 3,300,000.

Thomas H. Curtis, Jaffrey: Spindles, 4,800; looms, 110; pounds cotton consumed, (about,) 500,000; yards cloth produced, denims, (about,) 1,300,000.

Peterborough Company: Spindles, 5,264; looms, 116; pounds cotton consumed annually, —; yards cloth produced annually, cambrics, —.
 Phoenix Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 5,000; looms, 100; pounds cotton consumed annually, —; yards cloth produced annually, sheetings, —.
 Union Manufacturing Company, Peterborough: Spindles, 8,212; looms, 240; pounds cotton consumed annually, —; yards cloth produced, sheetings and jeans, —.

Great Falls Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 125,000; looms, 2,300; pounds cotton consumed annually, 6,653,156; yards cloth produced annually, 21,738,672; fabrics made: sheetings, shirtings, print cloths, and grain bags.

Lebanon Falls Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 32,000; looms, 800; pounds cotton consumed annually, 1,991,828; yards cloth produced annually, 8,314,313; fabrics made: sheetings, cotton flannels, drills, and jeans.

Cocheco Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 93,000; looms, 2,200; pounds cotton consumed annually, 3,014,968; yards cloth produced annually, 16,051,126; fabrics made: print cloths.

Exeter Manufacturing Company: Spindles, 20,000; looms, 400; pounds cotton consumed annually, 936,000; yards cloth produced annually, 4,034,800; fabrics made: fine sheetings and shirtings.

Kearsarge Mills, Portsmouth: Spindles, 21,350; looms, 440; pounds cotton consumed annually, 1,400,000; yards cloth produced annually, 5,400,000; fabrics made: fine silerias, jeans, &c.

THE WOOLEN MANUFACTURES

are various. There are in the State 470 sets cards, which, at a production of 100 pounds per day each, would give a consumption of 14,000,000 pounds of clean wool annually, or 20,000,000 pounds of fleeco made into blankets, cassimeres, flannels, coatings, and hosiery.

THE PAPER MANUFACTURES

include 5,100 tons annually of straw and leather board; 7,050 tons annually of book, news, and card; 4,900 tons annually of manila, 900 tons annually of hanging paper, 450 tons annually of straw wrapping, &c., and 4,800 tons annually of wood-pulp, which is used up mainly in the production of the other papers as above.

There are quite a number of mills idle in the State, as they cannot be made to pay. With good shipping facilities to South America these mills all ought to be and might be in operation, and be doing a large export business in these commodities.

In addition to the mills in operation there is a large amount of unused water-power in the State which might some day be profitably employed in the cotton manufacture; for instance, the power at Garvin's Falls on the Merrimack, in Pembroke, belonging to the Amoskeag Company, which would probably produce 40,000,000 yards annually. That at Sewall's Falls, in Concord, good for, say, 20,000,000 yards; unused power on the Salmon Falls River, belonging to the Great Falls Manufacturing Company, 20,000,000 yards; unused power on the Cocheco River, 10,000,000 yards, to say nothing of minor privileges.

The above, however, estimated roughly at a product of 90,000,000 yards, would supply about one-half the cotton cloth which England sends to Brazil alone. The greater part of the cotton fabrics now made in the State are for domestic consumption and are taken up at home; but the goods of the Stark and Jackson mills are to some extent exported, and those of all the mills are of a character to find a ready demand in foreign markets were those made more readily accessible. As it now stands, they are all suffering to a greater or less extent from overcom petition in the home markets, which would be greatly relieved by any such legislation as would open a direct trade with South America for instance, which I take as the strongest example, being near to our doors, and to which our exports are almost nothing, while those of Great Britain for the year 1874, the latest I have, were as follows:

Countries.	Plain.	Colored.
	Yards.	Yards.
To Brazil	88,522,710	83,774,691
To Venezuela	5,967,900	10,635,500
To Peru	14,985,700	9,923,100
To Chili	35,006,390	20,136,330
To Uruguay	5,967,500	7,480,410
To Argentine Republic	24,245,300	15,855,100
To New Granada	51,509,240	54,467,100
To Mexico	18,827,600	18,834,700
To West Indies, (Spanish, French, &c.)	26,907,020	36,776,209
To British West Indies	18,608,120	24,601,650
To Honduras	2,858,500	1,914,500
Total	393,985,980	284,399,290

Our own exports to the same countries in the same time being about 15,000,000 yards, all told, while those of Great Britain aggregate 578,385,270 yards.

Since writing the above I find that Brazilian buyers were in the Boston market last week pricing flannels, light cassimeres, and various light woolen fabrics, such as employ in this State at least 160 sets cards, equal as above to a consumption of nearly 5,000,000 pounds of clean wool, or 7,000,000 pounds of fleeco annually. This might be very largely increased by the opening of a profitable foreign market, though I should consider our cotton and paper industries as the ones which would derive the most immediate benefits from such an increase of our facilities for exportation.

Yours, most truly,

SAM'L WEBBER.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR.

I have not been able to get such data of the leather and woolen industries of my State as I had desired, but both are very large. In fact, Mr. Walker, of Worcester, testified before the special committee of this House last fall that the leather industry, next to agriculture, is the largest in the United States, and Hon. Alonzo Nute, one of the leading manufacturers of the State, informs me that "the value of boots and shoes produced in New Hampshire last year (1878) would amount to $6,000,000, of which sum 40 per cent., or $2,400,000, was cash paid for labor."

Towns of one, two, and three thousand inhabitants abound all over the southern half of the State, whose prosperity depends upon the condition of the world at large, whose commodities are in all lands by sample now, and which, if wise counsels prevail, can multiply their capacity to produce and their resulting prosperity indefinitely. Thus, for example, the township of Milford, with 2,606 inhabitants by the last census, contains the best factory of knitting cotton in America, and I doubt not in the world—that of Messrs. Morse, Kaley & Co.; and only give them transportation in American bottoms to foreign climes, and that establishment alone will quadruple its production in five years. The superior quality of American goods, with corresponding cheapness, sells them wherever they can find the opportunity to go.

Referring to the industries of Keene, the only city in the district I have the honor to represent, which, having a population of only nine thousand people, is hardly as large as the average western village, Mr. C. S. Faulkner, one of the principal manufacturers of the State, informs me that the exportable annual product of that place is about $2,000,000, while the whole county contains hardly a township without numerous hives of manufacturing industry which utilize every drop of water in the county that gets a chance to run down hill. He says:

Tanning is extensively carried on in Cheshire County, and the manufacture of pails, tubs, and kifs is more extensively carried on than in any other county in New England. The manufacture of furniture and chairs is also carried on to a large extent. We have several machine-shops and foundries, one of the machine-shops doing a large business in the manufacture of water-wheels, and a large amount of doors, sash, and blinds are made at another establishment.

Nearly everything thus produced is sold outside the State, and the opening of foreign trade by its direct or indirect effect is essential to every establishment in the county. Yet, save Keene, there are no cities in my district which comprise half the surface of the State. These towns, of which there are twenty-three, contain generally from five to fifteen hundred inhabitants—some a little larger. A traveler would say that they were farming towns, yet to Cheshire County the prosperity of our manufactures is as important as it is to Manchester or Lowell or Fall River. I do not suppose that in the world there is a more striking instance of the interblending of all the industrial pursuits of men within a limited locality than in Cheshire County, New Hampshire, and the whole State illustrates in the same way the harmonious development of all the pursuits and employments of mankind with the full variety of comforts and even luxuries and refinements of happiness which are known to our civilization almost universally diffused among what complacent talkers are pleased to designate as the "common people."

Thank God that such a people are common in New Hampshire and New England. I only wish that the time may soon arrive when from the operation of like causes the whole country may become as New England. It is easy to forgive those who would leave New England out in the cold, for they know not what they do. But no policy can be adopted that strikes down the industries of New England which will not prostrate those of the whole country. If such there be who would thrust the lance of malevolent legislative surgery into the life-blood of our welfare, they will find that the tide of New England prosperity throbs in every part of this great body-politic, and we need and will have no laws for our own benefit which are not for the common good. But I pass to more general considerations.

CAN WE SELL IN FOREIGN MARKETS?

The question whether we can sell in foreign markets, provided we have anything to sell and the means to carry it, is first in order and of paramount importance. Our principal competitor is, of course, Great Britain, and the most important manufacture in which we should have to dispute with her is that of cotton fabrics.

The cotton exports of Great Britain for the year 1876 were as follows:

Articles.	Quantity.	Value.
Yarns and twist, pounds	232,254,627	$63,908,065
Cotton thread, pounds	9,635,363	8,817,930
Total	241,890,990	72,726,595
Piece goods, yards	2,667,423,176	786,357,000
Printed goods, yards	990,147,278	461,361,550
Mixed goods, chiefly cotton, yards	11,833,900	2,147,025
Total	3,669,404,354	1,249,865,575
Cotton stockings, dozen pairs	1,105,666	1,820,270
Total value English cotton exports, 1876		1,324,412,440

During the same year we exported in all only the equivalent of seventy-six million yards, the value of which was not over $3,000,000. Although our foreign trade is increasing, such is substantially the relative proportion of our exportation of cotton goods to all countries to-day compared with that of Great Britain. The question is, can we compete, can we sell in the same markets where she does, or in some of the same, for she sells everywhere? Now, I take it that a short cut to absolute demonstration will be found if it is proved that we do sell and have an increasing market for our cotton fabrics in Great Britain herself; for if we can pay the cost of transportation and sell at the doors of her own factories, thus clothing her own operatives, so that an English weaver wears our American cloth in the process of English manufacture, I think the conclusion irresistibly follows that we can undersell them everywhere. This, however, in the long run—and let this forever be remembered—depends wholly upon our power to control ocean transportation so that we shall not be at the mercy of such discriminations in freight as the owners of British fabrics and British bottoms shall find it necessary to impose in order to burden us with a cost of transportation which added to the home cost of production shall make it impossible to reach the foreign consumer. No nation can maintain a great foreign trade in competition with another nation which carries its own goods without she also owns transportation—shipping—as well as factories and skilled labor. If her rivals can levy a prohibitory toll by high rates of carriage the effect is precisely the same as an embargo or prohibitory tariff in the ports of the consumer; it operates the same as to increase just so much the cost of production. Yet, notwithstanding the danger of submitting the fate of the future of our foreign commerce to the control of our rivals, a statement of the exports from New York for the year 1878, published in the Daily Commercial Bulletin of the 7th instant, shows that of $344,000,000 of goods shipped only about $60,000,000, or 17 per cent., was carried in American ships; while in 1865 45½ per cent. of the total tonnage which cleared from our ports was American. But assuming that we are sensible, and that we build up our commercial marine, (for that and the manufacture for foreign markets is precisely the same interest, because just as soon as the English feel the effect of our goods in the foreign markets her manufacturers at once will discriminate against us in transportation if they continue to own all of it,) then can we sell in England, and consequently throughout the world?

The answer to this question I quote from an English mouth.

After discussing and admitting the fact, the Birmingham Post, in a recent number, goes on to say:

Perhaps the most humiliating feature of the business for British manufacturers is the fact that their competitors (the Americans) are prevailing, not through the cheapness but through the excellence of their goods. Time was when English workmanship ranked second to none, and the names of our great manufacturing firms were a guarantee for the sterling quality of the goods they turned out; but competitions, trade unions, piece work, short hours, and other incidents of the "march of progress" have altered all that. Complaints received by hardware merchants from their customers abroad are not confined to the goods of second-class firms. Manufacturers who have obtained a world-wide reputation for their products are frequently convicted of sending out scamped and unfinished work, and they do not venture to deny the impeachment, pleading only that the most vigilant must sometimes at fault, and that their men, unfortunately, are not to be depended upon. In other cases, it is the merchants or their customers who are to blame for the inferior quality of the articles by cutting prices so low as to preclude the possibility of honest work, thinking probably that anything is good enough for a foreign or colonial market. But whatever the cause, the fact is now undeniable that a great deal of the manufactured produce shipped from this country of late years has been of a very low standard, and that the American manufacturers have consequently had an easy task in beating it.

Take now an equally high authority at home. A recent issue of the Chamber of Commerce Journal says:

It is evident from all the indications of the times, and from the proceedings of the board of trade conventions which have been lately held, that confidence is reviving among the mercantile community, and that if we are wise and adopt proper measures the United States, in the language of Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, will soon enter upon "a great business and industrial revival far exceeding any ever known in America." There is no questioning the superiority of our manufactures and productions, or our ability to supply the markets of the world; and there is no questioning the fact that our ability to maintain specie resumption will depend in great measure upon maintaining a large balance of trade in our favor. Under all the existing conditions—producing, manufacturing, financial, and commercial—it is now our imperative duty, and no time is to be lost, to at once improve our relations of trade wherever the opportunity offers. At our very doors we have the West Indies and South and Central America. The official statistics of imports into Brazil show that they consist of articles in the production and manufacture of which we excel, and which, as a matter of fact, were actually produced and made here. Cuba, which is within ninety miles of our coast, out of an importation of one hundred millions annually, buys of us but about $14,000,000. And so on through all the West Indies and South and Central American states.

I have been kindly permitted by the honorable gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to avail myself of portions of the testimony taken before the committee of which he is chairman upon the causes of the depression in labor and business. The statements of many eminent economists and business men are there found, and I anticipate great benefit to the country from the labors of that committee. Mr. Charles Carlton Coffin, in his admirable argument before the committee, says upon this subject:

Mr. COFFIN. I wish to say that I have no fears for the future of American industry. I entertain a profound conviction that America is about to enter upon a career of unparalleled prosperity.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would make that point clear, because I have been criticised rather freely for expressing a similar opinion in New York a few months ago.

Mr. COFFIN. I will endeavor to do so briefly. In the first place, America possesses all the primal conditions to this end in a degree not enjoyed by any other nation. We have a continent to ourselves, whereas Great Britain has a less area than the States of Illinois and Iowa. We have every variety of soil and climate, with capacity to produce breadstuffs far beyond our own wants. We have unparalleled resources in the forces and materials of nature, in our rivers, and exhaustless beds of coal and iron. Under the fostering care of our fathers we have encouragement to make iron and steel, steam and water do the work of human hands far beyond encouragements given by any other government; for this country stimulates invention by its patent laws, securing to the patentee the exclusive right to his invention for a term of years on payment of $30, whereas in England it used to cost nearly $1,000 to secure a patent. What is the result? In this country the number of patents taken out aggregates about thirteen thousand per annum against about four thousand in England. We have an army of inventors. The result was seen at Paris last summer, where the United States stood at the head in useful inventions. Through the superiority of our inventions we are beginning to secure an export trade, which, though at present is not very large, is continually increasing and promises to have a very great development. It is not confined to one department of industry, but applies to all.

The CHAIRMAN. What is to prevent the prompt introduction of improved machinery into the other countries who are the rivals of this country? They have heretofore been slow to take advantage of their opportunities in that respect, I admit, but the indications are that they are now doing so very rapidly.

Mr. COFFIN. I will answer that by narrating a fact within my knowledge. Year before last, one of the largest boot and shoe manufacturers in Switzerland, after visiting the centennial exhibition and seeing our boot and shoe machinery, obtained a full set of the machinery and took it to Switzerland. He found when he got the machines over there that his own workmen could not make use of them, and he was forced to send over to America to procure American workmen.

Mr. Coffin proceeds:

Then we have exhaustless quantities of iron; but I will not enter into that matter. I will take cotton as better illustrating the point. To-day, I suppose, about 2 per cent. of the cotton lands of the country are under cultivation. By the report of the commission of Parliament, made, I think, in 1873, (and which is found in the Parliamentary Reports,) the statement is made in regard to the cotton supply that at least 60 per cent. of the raw material of Great Britain must ever come from the United States. Last year the amount was 67 per cent., and the yearly aggregate has been constantly increasing. It has been shown by our manufacturers that it costs about five dollars to take a bale of cotton from a cotton-field in the South and place it in England. I look forward to the time when, in the South as well as in New England, there will be a large development of cotton manufactures, especially of the coarser qualities of the goods and cotton yarn. Of those who buy cotton cloths, the average in the market of the world to-day is about twenty yards for an individual.

The CHAIRMAN. For the whole world?

Mr. COFFIN. That is the average among those who purchase; about twenty yards per annum would be required for each individual. It is stated that not more than five hundred millions of the people on the globe are now using machine-made cotton. Those engaged in manufacturing confidently expect that the time is not far distant when at least one thousand millions will use cotton cloth in some form. There is no other fiber that can compare with it in cheapness. The consumption increases both in civilized and uncivilized lands. England now has nearly all the foreign trade in her hands.

It is a well-known fact that American cotton goods are superior in their make to the English; that English manufacturers are using American trade-marks; that English manufacturers have carried "sizing" to an extent which has become prejudicial; that their excuse is that they cannot compete with American manufacturers in the making of substantial goods. It seems to me morally certain that we shall take a portion of the present trade of England from her hands, and that we shall secure our fair share of the increase.

On the other side of the globe, in China and the other countries, there is a population variously estimated at from two hundred and fifty to four hundred and fifty millions. Before the war, in 1860 for instance, our exports to China were about four million yards. England sent out to China in the same year about thirty-three thousand pieces of goods, (the number of yards has not been stated,) and our export was larger than that of England. The war swept that trade entirely away. Last year we sent out to China eleven millions of yards, and England sent out three hundred and seventy-eight millions of yards. That is the beginning of a volume of consumption which has yet to develop itself in China. That is a trade which it is possible for the American manufacturer to obtain wholly.

I will also here insert the following data found in Mr. Coffin's statement as bearing upon the general subject in many aspects rather than because it is specially applicable to the point we are now considering, to wit, whether we can sell abroad:

In 1832 there were 1,300,000 cotton spindles in this country; in 1845 there were 2,500,000; in 1875, 9,500,000; and in 1878 there were 11,000,000. In Great Britain there were, in 1832, 9,000,000; in 1845, 17,500,000; in 1875, 37,500,000. In Europe, outside of Great Britain, there were, in 1832, 2,800,000; in 1845, 7,500,000; and in 1875, 19,500,000. The total for the world in 1879 is about 71,000,000 spindles. The result has been, that while between 1830 and 1875 our population increased between threefold and fourfold, the amount of cotton manufactured and used increased thirteenfold, because each person uses three to four times as much as they used to.

The following table, compiled by Mr. Coffin, shows the total imports and exports of the countries mentioned by decades from 1827 to 1877, inclusive, a period of fifty years:

Years.	Total of imports and exports.
Great Britain—
1827-37.....	$4,948,750,000
1837-47.....	6,771,555,000
1847-57.....	11,065,290,000
1857-67.....	20,379,890,000
1867-77.....	28,879,205,000
France—
1827-37.....	2,092,400,000
1837-47.....	2,978,400,000
1847-57.....	4,601,800,000
1857-67.....	9,261,290,000
1867-77.....	13,313,600,000
United States—
1827-37.....	2,006,218,000
1837-47.....	2,285,428,000
1847-57.....	4,255,074,000
1857-67.....	7,103,309,000
1867-77.....	11,016,805,000

The total trade of Great Britain has within these five decades increased six times, that of France six and a half times, and that of the United States five and a half times. What are the results? It has equalized the world's markets, given low prices to the consumer, taken business out of the hands of the few and given it to the many, distributed wealth, elevated the masses, enlarged the area of civilization, and contributed to the comfort and happiness of the human race.

The essential thing in Mr. Coffin's opinion remaining to be done is to secure transportation and commodious intercommunication of our own, almost all of which is now controlled by foreign nations.

What I wish to say is that the American manufacturer has not such facilities for distribution as his competitor across the Atlantic. The British government, by its system of ocean postal service, reaches every country with its steamers, giving constant facilities to the merchant and manufacturer. The American manufacturer has no such facilities for distribution, and I do not see how he can find a market. England aids her manufacturers through her postal service. Our Government does nothing of the sort. But I think that is not the only, perhaps not the greatest, difficulty. To go no further, there are consumers unsupplied in every house in Mexico and South America. The manufacturers of this country are capable of producing enough to supply them. So far as cost of manufacture is concerned, no one can do it more cheaply. Mechanical skill has furnished, and is ready to furnish, every physical appliance for communication and transportation. It is the business of the merchant to place that product at that consumer's house, and he does not do it. Whether it is because he lacks skill and enterprise or because the laws are unfavorable to trade, I will not discuss. It is enough to say that the fault does not rest with the manufacturer or the machine-builder.

To the same effect is the statement of Senator EATON in a speech made during the last session, which is so full of pertinent fact and sound statesmanship that I wish I could quote more of it:

The foreign trade of Brazil is about $100,000,000 a year. Out of that $100,000,000 a year all that the United States has heretofore done is about $7,000,000 a year. England furnishes Brazil more than one-half of all her butter and cheese. On one single occasion forty-two thousand boxes of cheese were exported from New York to Liverpool and from Liverpool to Brazil. Ohio cheese going that roundabout way to find a market in Brazil! One-half of the flour that is consumed by that empire is sold by English merchants, when every dollar's worth of flour, every dollar's worth of butter, every dollar's worth of cheese, should be the product of the West. One million four hundred thousand dollars' worth of boots and shoes are consumed in Brazil, and all that was exported from this country was barely ninety thousand dollars' worth, when the sister of my State, Massachusetts, should have furnished every dollar's worth of that commodity.

Look also on this picture of Brazilian imports, all of which we ought to furnish:

In short, the balance of trade against us with the countries named—and our commerce with them is one-fifth of our entire commerce with the world—amounts to $98,000,000. Now, what is the trouble? Simply this: lack of means of communication and transportation. Give us these means and we will monopolize the trade of those countries. England's wealth is due to the fact that she has been the carrier for the world. She pushes her roads everywhere, even into the heart of Africa. In an able editorial the New York Sun states that we have paid for transportation sufficient to have built all the needed roads and to have put a hundred million dollars into the Treasury in addition. France and England are expending enormous sums for the support of their carrying trade, and propose to build more and more railroads and ships. It is just announced that the Canada Pacific Railway have applied to the Imperial Parliament for, and no doubt will receive, £6,000,000—$30,000,000. Are the governments of these nations—who claim to be the most prosperous upon the face of the earth—fools and idiots, or do they know what they are about? How, in the face of their action and the facts, can the American people submit to a policy of "masterly inactivity," the result of purely illogical and erroneous reasoning? Have we not had enough of that species of economy known as the penny-wise and pound foolish? One thing is certain: nations, like individuals, cannot reap a profit without an investment.

Are we to take advantage of these markets at our doors, or are we not? Now is the time to act. The next session of Congress must decide. We never shall be able to do anything in this direction unless we first furnish the necessary means of transportation. The way is open.

OUR OWN HEMISPHERE.

Let us glance for a moment at the other countries of our own hemisphere with which we could open advantageous commercial relations or increase those already existing.

First, south of us is Mexico, with a population of 9,000,000 people, nearly all agriculturists or miners, and ready to consume our manufactures, inhabiting 761,660 square miles of territory proverbial for salubrity of climate and natural resources. The annual products of Mexican industry are about $400,000,000; $250,000,000 from agriculture, $50,000,000 from mining, $100,000,000 from various forms of manufactures and miscellaneous pursuits. The exports in 1870 were $26,000,000, a small portion of which was with our country.

The West India Islands aggregate about 90,000 square miles of soil and 3,000,000 of people; and of Cuba alone, only ninety miles from our doors, we annually buy $60,000,000, while we sell to her only $14,000,000. At the same time she imports from all nations $100,000,000, of which we ought to sell her at least 90 per cent. We produce that proportion of everything she requires from other nations, and we ought to employ our people by creating these $76,000,000 of her purchases from abroad.

The Central American states have in all 174,869 square miles, being about the size of France, with a population of 2,665,000. With them we have practical non-intercourse, although, like Mexico and the islands, these States abound with natural resources and productions which are most desirable to us, and which, by a proper policy on our part, could be made a source of lucrative commerce and afford a considerable market for the productions of our industries.

South America has 7,000,000 square miles of territory and now 30,000,000 inhabitants. Of this vast surface, 3,231,047 square miles belong to Brazil, with 13,000,000 of the population. The value of her exports is $110,560,000; of her imports nearly $100,000,000; of which only $7,000,000 is from the United States, while we purchase of her yearly some $50,000,000. From the years 1871 to 1876 we purchased of Brazil $274,148,500 of merchandise, and sold her only $48,853,555; the difference, being $225,294,945, we paid in gold through the toll-gate of London, every cent of which should have been paid by American productions, transported in American bottoms directly from our own ports. During the same period the entire foreign commerce of Brazil was $1,048,612,301, while she bought of other nations $471,570,859 of food and merchandise, every important article of which we raise and make, and the prosperity of our people requires that nearest of all available outlets for our surplus, which is a glut at home because we are too stupid to carry it abroad.

Some authorities fix the surface of Brazil at four million square miles, larger than all Europe, which maintains three hundred million souls on a less fertile soil than hers. She has only thirteen million. They are an agricultural people, and such they will remain; for the fertility of her soil and its inexhaustible strength, with the nature of her climate, the habits of her people, mental and physical, naturally keep them so. We, on the other hand, are just as naturally the manufacturing counterpart of Brazil as New England is of the rest of the United States, while the currents of the ocean and our contiguity to each other have married our industries by the decrees of the creation itself. But we are not yet awake to our destiny.

The lessons of Brazil are repeated and intensified by Venezuela, with 370,000 square miles, six times larger than New England; by the United States of Colombia, with their 514,000 square miles, five times nearly as large as New York and New England combined; Ecuador, with 219,000 square miles; Bolivia, with 535,000; Peru, with 620,000; the Argentine Republic, with 603,271; Paraguay, Uruguay, Chili, and the Guianas, British, Dutch, and French, with nearly as much more, where, within the next century, will spring up a population of one hundred millions of souls, who, combined with as many more that with the blessings of thrift and order, the inevitable result of close commercial relations with us, in Mexico, the islands, and Central American states for generations to come, would develop and remain substantially great consuming peoples, the supply of whose wants would give to us, the lords of the northern temperate zone—the zone of the manufacturer, the nativity of invention, the spot where the forces of nature have found their Waterloo in the long contest with the genius of man—a perpetual market for the surplus of all our activities, and by reciprocal benefits foster every great interest of the whole hemisphere and develop higher summits of civilization than have yet been attained by humanity.

I am glad to avail myself of the following statement in a recent speech of Hon. WILLIAM A. PHILLIPS on this floor, which is a valuable and pertinent summary. After citing statistics of our trade with Mexico from 1825 to 1878, inclusive, Mr. PHILLIPS proceeds:

I also submit the following, copied from an article in a New Orleans paper from my old friend and comrade, General Cyrus Bussy, since mayor of New Orleans, and which may be accepted as reliable:

In the last seven years, from September, 1878, we bought of China and Japan of their products.....	$195,000,000
And sold them.....	65,000,000
Mexico, purchases from.....	95,000,000
Mexico, sales to.....	30,000,000
Brazil and South America, purchases from.....	336,000,000
Brazil and South America, sales to.....	78,000,000
Cuba and Porto Rico, purchases from.....	575,000,000
Cuba and Porto Rico, sales to.....	125,000,000

These figures show that from these countries alone, in seven years, we have purchased $1,201,000,000, and sold of our products only $293,000,000, showing a balance of $908,000,000. Their products are no more indispensable to us than our own to them; but as they can purchase manufactured goods in foreign countries and have the facilities for receiving them, and as we do not grant the necessary communication, they cannot buy of us.

I also append the following article from a newspaper published in Mexico City, showing the character and prospects of the trade:

THE RESOURCES OF MEXICO AND TRADE WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Trade with Mexico is now the all-absorbing topic in the United States: and our paper having attained so wide a circulation as well north as south of the Rio Grande, we propose to make known to the world some very interesting and potent facts that bear directly upon the resources of Mexico for import and export trade. And now is the opportune moment for the great commercial Republic of the north to enter into close relations of amity and commerce with her younger sister, whose aspirations and institutions are the same. Now is the time for American manufacturers and merchants to carry commercial enterprise into Mexico, and to trade manufactured goods for her raw produce. In return for American manufactures Mexico can give the products of every clime, and this at every season of the year.

According to official statistics the foreign commerce of Mexico, imports and exports united, exceeds $60,000,000 annually. According to the facts, and taking into consideration the extensive smuggling carried on over the six thousand miles of sea-coast she has to guard, we may almost double these figures and say one hundred millions. The purely internal trade may be put at four hundred millions per annum.

One year with another not less than fifteen millions in gold and silver bars and coin go to Europe through the custom-houses, and nearly half as much more go as contrabando. All these figures are simply a fraction of what the republic can produce if worked up to anything like her capacity for the yield of gold and silver. Here is a grand field for the mining instruments and apparatus of the North which every manufacturer in the United States should attend to.

Appropos at this point is the following note of the report of the delegation of western merchants and business men who have just been to Mexico for the purpose of ascertaining the exact situation and the prospect of extending our trade with our sister republic advantageously:

COMMERCE WITH MEXICO—REPORT OF THE CHICAGO EXCURSIONISTS.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, February 13.

The steamer City of Mexico, with the returning excursionists from Mexico, has arrived. Their report on trade prospects between the two republics says:

"We have found everywhere only the most cordial feelings and unbounded hospitality on the part of the Mexican people and a unanimous desire for closer commercial relations with the United States. We have observed no special insecurity to either person or property, or hostility among any class to international improvements or developments of trade with the United States. We have especially noted an earnest desire on the part of the public men of Mexico for increased railway and steamship communication between the two nations. It is our opinion that the United States Government should encourage the sentiment that actuates the leading men of Mexico, which is manifestly a desire to cultivate the most friendly relations between the two countries."

The report is signed by about sixty of the excursionists.

I now quote the testimony of the Chief Magistrate of the nation and the Secretary of State, who in official communications to the Senate on the 17th day of last December called the attention of the country to the vital necessity of extending our foreign commerce and the feasibility of so doing. The President says:

The external commerce of the United States has for many years been the subject of solicitude, because of the outward drain of the precious metals it has caused. For fully twenty years previous to 1877 the shipment of gold was constant and heavy; so heavy during the entire period of the suspension of specie payments as to preclude the hope of resumption safely during its continuance. In 1876, however, vigorous efforts were made by enterprising citizens of the country and have since been continued to extend our general commerce with foreign lands, especially in manufactured articles, and these efforts have been attended with very marked success.

The importation of manufactured goods was at the same time reduced in an equal degree, and the result has been an extraordinary reversal of the conditions so long prevailing and a complete cessation of the outward drain of gold. The official statement of the values represented in foreign commerce will show the unprecedented magnitude to which the movement has attained and the protection thus secured to the public interests at the time when commercial security has become indispensable. The agencies through which this change has been effected must be maintained and strengthened if the future is to be made secure. * * * Every element of aid to the introduction of the products of our soil and manufactures into new markets should be made available.

At present such is the favor with which many of the products of the United States are held that they obtain a remunerative distribution, notwithstanding positive differences of cost resulting from our defective shipping and the imperfection of our arrangements in every respect in comparison with those of our competitors for conducting trade with foreign markets. If we have equal commercial facilities we need not fear competition anywhere.

The laws have now directed a resumption of financial equality with other nations, and have ordered a return to the basis of coin values. It is of the greatest importance that the commercial condition now fortunately attained shall be made permanent, and that our rapidly increasing export trade shall not be allowed to suffer for want of the ordinary means of communication with other countries.

The accompanying reports contain a valuable and instructive summary of information with respect to our commercial interests in South America, where an inviting field for the enterprise of our people is presented. They are transmitted with the assurance that any measures that may be enacted in furtherance of these important interests will meet with my cordial approval.

R. B. HAYES.

The Secretary of State, who has instituted special inquiries of our consuls everywhere with very valuable results, gives the substance of all in the following brief summary, and with this testimony I close this branch of the discussion:

First. It seems to be very evident that the provision of regular steam postal communication by aid from government has been the forerunner of the commercial predominance of Great Britain in the great marts of Central and South America, both on the Pacific and Atlantic coasts of the continent. It is no less apparent that the efforts of all the other European nations, Germany, France, and Italy, to share in this profitable trade, have been successful in proportion with their adoption of regular steam postal communication with the several markets whose trade they sought.

Second. These papers show also that the enterprise and sagacity thus shown by European nations has actually reversed the advantage which our geographical position gives us in relation to this extensive commerce of the American hemisphere.

The commercial correspondence of our merchants with the trading points on the east and west coasts crosses the Atlantic twice to make a postal connection in a circuit of trade which has its beginning and its end on our own continent. The statistics of our limited trade under this extraordinary disadvantage show that the growing preference for our products in these South American markets insists upon being gratified, even at the cost of a circuit of importation which carries our merchandise to Europe and incorporates it as a contribution to the volume and the profits of European South American trade. No stronger demonstration of the tendency of commerce to follow in the train of postal communication can be conceived than this vast and expensive circuit of importation resorted to, in default of direct opportunities, between the countries of demand and supply.

Third. It would seem from these reports that the merchants and the communities, no less than the governments of these countries, strongly desire an enlargement of direct trade with the United States. With all the advantages of foreign commerce, supplied by the existing European arrangements for its prosecution, these markets perceive that this unnatural circuit, when the resources of the United States could supply a direct trade in its place, must be at the expense of the party subjected to the system and the profit of the party which administers and controls it. Everywhere there is shown a great desire to expand their trade with the United States, and even the least prosperous exchequers of these governments are ready to be opened to share in the expenses of steam postal communications, of whose value in promoting foreign commerce their own experience furnishes irrefragable proof.

Fourth. While many less immediate and less simple measures, about which judgments may not readily concur, may properly be canvassed by our people, now eager for a restoration and extension of foreign commerce, upon this one simple and first step of direct, regular, and frequent postal communication between the United States and the principal commercial ports of Central and South America there would and ought to be no room for doubt.

If this be so, it is obviously the dictate of interest and duty on the part of the Government to promote, by every just and appropriate means, the attainment of this first and principal agency for the desired expansion of our foreign commerce. It is difficult to understand how this commencement and development of an ocean postal system, to be a forerunner of the expected trade, can be wholly trusted to the mere interests of mercantile combinations. The governments of foreign states with which this commerce is to be opened are ready to take their part in the public expense of this postal communication with us, and the participation or non-participation by the United States in this public expense seems to be the turning point in the acceptance or rejection of the reciprocal trade now proffered us.

WM. M. EVARTS.

THE PATENT SYSTEM.

as an essential feature in our industrial system, is above alluded to by Mr. Coffin, and the absolute necessity of legislation specially in the interest of inventors, who are always the pioneers of progress, and upon whom we are and must remain dependent for the continual improvements which will enable us to still keep in advance and maintain the high wages which are necessary to enable the American workman to support himself and family in the enjoyment of the superior blessings and comforts of which the cheap paid toilers of Europe know nothing, is here apparent. Any legislation which discourages the efforts of the inventor, who is, even with the protection of existing laws, almost always poor, which tends to enable combinations of wealth to appropriate the hard-earned property of his brain with impunity, is a deadly blow at existing and an embargo upon our future prosperity. Manufacturers and great corporations should remember this, and so should the husbandman, who depends upon the continued supremacy of our inventive genius for the prosperity of those industries which consume the products of his farm and give him a ready market at his own door, as in New England and in all manufacturing sections of the country, while continued improvements in agricultural machinery alone can enable even our food-growers permanently to command foreign markets, whereas in future years they will have to compete with the natural granaries of South America and Africa. To destroy the stimulus to invention, whose work is never done, by legislation which impairs the security of the property of the inventor and enables capitalists to appropriate the legitimate fruit of his thought and toil at their own price or subject him in his poverty to the burdens of endless litigation with wealth and power, because there are abuses connected with the patent system, as with everything else, which should be remedied by careful and conservative legislation, is like killing the hen which lays our golden eggs because she disturbs us by her cackling while doing so and sometimes scratches in the garden.

CHINESE SLAVE LABOR.

In passing I refer to this subject as a collateral one of vast importance in every aspect which it assumes and which has been, I think, too negligently treated by eastern thought.

The Chinese slave trade, in which by passive assent we are as a nation now engaged, not under but in violation of the spirit of the Burlingame treaty, and Chinese slavery on the Pacific coast, the establishment of which has already taken place, must both be abolished or we shall soon find this new form of slavery a more formidable competitor of free labor all over the country than was ever African slavery at the South. One-third of the adult males of California are Chinese of the lowest order. This in itself is perhaps no reason to fear them provided they were free, but a large portion of them are simply slaves.

We cannot afford to force any form of slavery upon the Pacific slope as did the capital of the mother country force that institution upon the weak and protesting colonies, which two centuries and a half later, when they had become a mighty people, were nearly overthrown in the effort to destroy the incubus.

True, the obligation of treaties must be kept or due courtesy observed in their abrogation, and we recognize the inalienable right of every individual man to change his domicile provided he go and come and reside as a man—a freeman and not as a slave. No man or class of men has a right to be slaves in this country. While the right of an individual man to change his home and allegiance and to be free is inalienable, so also is that of a free nation to preserve itself so, and we cannot afford to lose sight of the fact that the six companies, in an important sense, own the mass of the Chinese on the Pacific coast; that they hold them in thinly disguised slavery from the moment they leave China until they are returned to the "flowery land;" that they never become citizens nor desire to; that they have no families and are mere sojourners; that the bones of no Chinaman rest in our soil; that these companies are simply gigantic associations of wealth engaged in the slave trade and also in the ownership and profits derived from the labor of the slaves themselves.

The contract system is a system of slavery devised, enforced, and practiced with such oriental craft and ingenuity that the inattentive have been led to suppose that Chinese labor is only a cheap form of free labor. Chinese labor is cheap labor because it is slave labor. Unless the form in which it exists is destroyed the time is not distant when every free white or black laborer in the populous East, with or without a family on his hands, will have to compete with a form of slave labor which can do his work for one-half the compensation that he now finds barely sufficient to supply the wants of our civilization.

But the contract system must be destroyed, for as a rule it holds the Chinaman in its clutch during his entire absence from his native country. Let him come, if he comes at all, as a freeman; as a freeman let him remain, but as a slave never. I forbear to trespass further upon this topic, and return to the general subject.

THE TIME HAS COME.

We have crossed the Rubicon. We are no longer a nation which can live within itself. We must sell our surplus commodities abroad, for when a nation has reached that state of productive development that she can supply any portion of the rest of the world, it is because she produces a surplus, or has the capacity to do so; it is because she has grown from within until from her own fullness she has burst the barriers which surround her, and as neither men nor nations can remain stationary, she must sell abroad or retrograde. We have our choice to go forward or go backward, and we must decide now. The epoch seems to me pregnant with the solemnities of destiny. Today, in my belief, by a great, grand, bold, and far-reaching policy, we could set in motion the machinery which would make and keep us the leading nation of the world for a thousand years. We are fifty millions of people, and every American is an aggressive creative force. He chains the powers of nature to his will, and marshals in his service or assimilates into his own eclectic constitution every foreign element with which he comes in contact.

We have thirty-six hundred thousand square miles of the best land on the globe. We are larger than Europe, whose soil is divided among three hundred millions of people. The continent is empty before us, and the spell of our institutions broods over the whole. We are its inevitable masters. We are compelled to be so. Destiny makes some nations dominant just as much as she makes others subordinate. Light must shine. Power must dominate, not tyrannically, but by the law of love, the law of beneficence, which makes willing subjects, who find their freedom in their own advantage.

By that law this whole continent is ours. It comes to us empty, a blank, yet full of the grandest possibilities. We are obliged to assume the responsibility of its development. We can no more escape them than Jonah could evade his mission to Ninevah. Five hundred millions of human beings are to inhabit North America within five hundred years. Who are they to be? What are they to be? God has placed us here to work out that problem. We are the problem, and it is being wrought out in us. Either we must submit to these guiding forces of Providence within us and our institutions and go forward to possess the land, or by rejecting our opportunities and destiny we shall prepare the way for the national antagonisms, the petty rivalries, the disasters, and destruction which have marked the course of other races and nations on the continents, whose story has been recorded for our example and admonition. We begin at that point to which they in their best estate have through these long ages of bloody evolution attained. I disregard the fragments of inferior populations with whom we have to do, as sure to be absorbed and elevated or extinguished by the mighty forces of beneficence in our race and civilization.

Trade is the great civilizer, and by trade our influence must prevail. Trade is greater than the interchange of commodities. It implies interchange of everything, habits, customs, thoughts, ideas, religions, laws, literatures, and the eternal principle of selection preserves the good and casts the bad away. But I must not dwell upon these things. I say that we have this all-prevailing destiny upon us. It is manifest, and we are called upon to fulfill it, not blindly, wildly, spasmodically, but just as the oak is called upon to grow and the ocean to roll, incessantly and for the ages.

We have all America, North and South, stretching out their hands for our commodities, and wherever they go our civilization follows. Behind the laws of trade is that sword of spiritual conquest which the Author of our religion came to bring upon the earth. Beyond this hemisphere lies the dark land Africa, with two hundred millions more. She too is waiting with her stores of ivory and of gold. Commerce has already fringed her coasts with a hundred points of illumination, which, lifting higher and higher, reveal the vast capabilities of the rich and populous interior. Africa is to be civilized. Every cargo of coarse commodities such as attract the eye and supply the necessities of the savage and the barbarian civilizes and creates the demand for more. What is civilization but the creation and supply of wants, spiritual and material? We shall bring back gold and ivory and gems, with spices and fruits and precious woods and unknown productions, with which her marvelous and mysterious regions abound, or which will yet be developed as she advances on the arena of time.

Then there are the eight hundred millions of Asia, who are our customers already, although the rising sun of our commerce with them is just darting its earliest beams on the grateful sky long oppressed with dismal night. We can manufacture for the whole world, and we can compete with all rivals and sell to the whole world. The fact is established. We must do it or recede. We must carry our produce to the customer. We must own our ships as much as we must own our looms. That is the law of competition. We might as well manufacture our cotton cloth in the moon as in America and expect, without ships, to compete for a foreign market with a manufacturing nation which owns ships. The ships and the factories are made one by the fact of their joint ownership and the laws of self-interest, and they go together just as much as the two ends of a stick to him who would strike with it, or the two ends of a railroad on the land. I do not mean that we must or can drive England out of the markets of the world. By no manner of means. There is ten thousand times more to be done than both nations, than all commercial nations, now have the capacity to do. We are to civilize the world, and thus double, quadruple, over and over a hundred times the business of the world. The are fifteen hundred millions of people in it. England and America can now produce more value every year than all Asia. But you create wants in Asia and she must work; she must give an equivalent. She must produce in order to buy; she must introduce machinery and multiply her powers; she must buy her machinery of those who have the best to sell. She will in the progress of generations want, and therefore pay for, all which her capacity for advancement demands. The English race in Great Britain and America is less than 100,000,000. Is not there enough for us all to do if we will only awake and do it? But England can beat us with her cheap labor? By no means; for cheap labor is stupid labor, and our inventors can, as they have thus far, give us machinery which will always keep us even or ahead in the race. True, she and other nations will adopt our improved machinery, but we can always invent still better; and the American workman is the most intellectual being engaged in human industries. It takes brains to run machinery to its ultimate capacity as well as to invent or improve it.

I am one of those who love Old England. I would see her live and prosper forever. She destroyed our commerce in the late war, but she paid the bills at Geneva; and I do not hold the English people responsible for the crimes of those who struck our commerce down. There is more than enough for us all to do, but we must foster trade as she does. We must carry our goods to market. We must make what is adapted to the peoples and nations with whom we would trade. We must study this subject, the wants of mankind, and furnish to all tribes and nations that which they desire and may be made to desire, and be assured that our existing industries will revive, new ones will spring up, invention will be stimulated, and every workman will be employed. The demand for our productions will be ever increasing as the wants of advancing populations are multiplied. The world will move and we shall move ever in the advance. Progress is a law which operates forever. The nation which attempts to evade it dies.

Mr. Speaker, I have thus endeavored by the example of my own little State to exhibit the equilibrium which does exist in her industries, and the necessity of its maintenance in order that her scanty population and prosperity may not fail. With her, the decadence, however slight, of her manufactures injures not only her cities and villages, but destroys agriculture and depletes the rural population also, and her yeomanry disappear. The mills, the factories, and the farms all live or die together. Our soil will not compete with that of other States and maintain a purely agricultural population. Hence, if the home market for our manufactures is full, to us more than to any other State is a policy which opens new avenues and relations and markets abroad a question of life and death to our industries, and as one of her humblest representatives I plead for a policy which shall give us easy, rapid, and universal communication with foreign peoples and markets, and especially with those who are nearest to us and in our own hemisphere; with those who are anxious to reciprocate our advances and whose trade would gladly, from economic considerations and political sympathies, seek our own rather than European shores.

But what is so palpably essential to New Hampshire is also indispensable to New England and to the whole country. I say to the whole country, for the husbandman even more than the manufacturer has a surplus which he cannot sell at home. And if he cannot sell his surplus abroad to supply his wants here, then he must go abroad himself, and as a consequence we shall lose first the invigorating tide of emigration which now flows in upon us, and then become emigrants ourselves. Thus inexorable is the necessity which compels the adoption of a larger, wiser, commercial policy, not for five or ten or fifty years, but as the basis of our industrial conditions for the long future of the Republic. I know that this will be done, and it were well if it were done quickly. Both capital and labor clamor for it, and until their cry is heard there will be no permanent prosperity in this land. The opportunity to work is dependent upon the opportunity to sell, and we cannot buy it all at home. The whole world is waiting for the productions of the American plow, her anvil, and her loom. Give us railways and water-ways. Give us rapid and commodious transit to foreign countries. Let us own it ourselves, that it may be utilized to promote and not to destroy our industries; then hope will revive and stay, prosperity will return, our flag will soon float on all the oceans of the world, and we shall build up once more our economic policy on the sure foundation of the existing and ever-increasing demand for our commodities by all nations for all time.

Mr. FRYE. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to answer the constitutional argument of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER,] to which I have listened with some surprise, because I am quite sure that he has voted for subsidies in the form of appropriations to clear out the port of Norfolk, to clear out the Elizabeth River, the "Jeems" River, and the Rappahannock, has he not? Was not that giving an advantage to those rivers over the Chicoteague and the Wicomico? How on earth does my friend from Virginia reconcile himself to vote for appropriations to clear out a bar in one harbor and not vote for every other harbor?

Mr. TUCKER. I would not do it.

Mr. BUTLER. You would not do it! Very well; then I take it I shall never find my friend's name recorded for any river and harbor bill. Virginia has never had any, has she? Massachusetts has, and so has New York, and so has New Orleans.

How was it in regard to the bill to establish the jetty system on the Mississippi River? How are you gentlemen of the South going to get along with clearing out the mouth of the Mississippi River if the doctrine of the gentleman from Virginia is constitutional doctrine? Does not any such measure give an advantage to the port of New Orleans over all other southern ports?

Now, John Roach is to do this work if he is the only one who can do it. If there are others in the United States who can do it, they have the right to bid against him for the contract. There is to be open competition. But if he is the only man who can do the business, I thank God that we have at least one man who can do something to revive American commerce; I thank God that we have at least one establishment that has survived the wreck of our shipping interests.

Our fathers from the beginning built up commerce by differential duties in favor of American bottoms; and no legislation has ever abolished those differential duties. It has always been done by treaties made by short-sighted diplomats, or rather non-diplomats, sent out as ministers. This is what has broken down American commerce. Treaties have been made to immortalize a man who happened to be a minister to some foreign port; and thus our old system of differential duties has been broken down.

Now we must do something to revive our commerce. I do not care whether it is done through the labors of John Roach or any other man. If he can do it, and no one else can, let it be done by him. Let us not shut ourselves out from the great ports of the southern continent, so as to be obliged even to send our letters by way of England.

This is not a subsidy. It has been given a bad name—a device of the press to frighten weak-minded and cowardly members of Congress—just as the term "salary grab" was applied to a measure which sought to give members of Congress sufficient pay; and when they got sufficient pay a great many of them took it and gave it away for charity, expecting that would cover their supposed transgression, just as Judas took the thirty pieces of silver and bought a charitable institution, a burying-ground.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FRYE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, the history of American commerce is full of intense interest. Our fathers made early preparations for a commerce that should not only build up the country but should honor it. The growth of American commerce was honorable to them and to the country. But we need not consider now the causes that have led to the decadence of our commerce and to its present deplorable condition; for with all our prosperity, with all our increase in wealth, with our vastly increasing preponderance in foreign exports, the great fact nevertheless stares us in the face to-day that our tonnage is lessening year by year. There is need of something to bring back a revival of American commerce. Can we expect such a revival unless the Government itself puts forth some efforts by which such encouragement shall be given as will enable us to regain our place among the great commercial powers of the world?

No nation ever has prospered or ever will long prosper and hold a prominent place among the nations of the world unless it keeps up its commerce. When the commerce of a nation declines the nation itself, according to all history, inevitably declines and takes a subordinate place in the rank of nations. We have too much material wealth, too vast resources, to remain idle at this time and do nothing for the revival of our foreign trade. It seems to me that the large increase in our foreign trade should be seized as presenting a favorable opportunity for action in the encouragement of our commerce. We cannot expect to have this trade long unless we encourage it in some way.

Mr. Speaker, it is humiliating that three-fourths of our products, both manufactured and agricultural, are to-day carried away from our shores in foreign bottoms. It is humiliating that but one-fourth of the imports into the United States are brought in American bottoms. With our vast mineral and forest wealth, with our great manufacturing and agricultural power, this great nation is at a stand-still, when but a small stimulus, the expenditure of a few dollars, would be sufficient to set the wheels of industry in motion. What are even two or three millions compared with the permanent upbuilding of the commerce of the United States? The expenditure would be returned to us a thousand-fold. My belief is that the United States should be aggressive, as was Great Britain, in building up her commerce. British commerce to-day is an outgrowth of this governmental encouragement.

I am not frightened by the word "subsidy." I represent a constituency that will rejoice in the development of American commerce; for in that development there shall outflow to the surrounding nations their own products, and indeed the products of the whole nation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FRYE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, on general principles I am opposed to this class of legislation—upon appropriation bills or elsewhere; and unless reasons of controlling strength present themselves this measure ought to be opposed. But in my judgment there are such reasons. I shall vote for this measure, and propose in these five minutes to state my reasons for such a vote.

When we establish a mail-route to Montana or the Black Hills we do it at exorbitant rates, and we justify ourselves in the enlarged expenditure because a great mining interest is opened in a new part of our country. The advantage gained is not merely the carrying of intelligence. The ground on which we make the unusual expenditure is the opening of great resources of wealth. In carrying the mails we constantly shape our legislation in reference to such ends. Now, what is the great industrial problem that most concerns our people? Their ingenuity and skill have carried our labor-saving machines and devices to such an extent that we are absolutely filling our whole country with the cheap manufactured products of our skill.

And on every account, for the public good, for the growth of our business, for the prosperity of our people, we want all fair chance that the markets of the world can give us for selling our surplus supplies. We want that on general principles, but we want it with South America for special reasons. This great tropical world that lies at our doors sends us millions of supplies. We must make it possible for them to take back from us our products in return and thus establish what shall equal a reciprocity arrangement of commerce.

We are told more than half of all the exports of the Empire of Brazil come to us, and yet of what she imports from other countries she gets less than one-tenth from us. Is there any natural reason why she should send us $100,000,000 of products per annum, and instead of taking from us our products in exchange, should go to England and buy them, even after we have shipped them there? That is the condition of "freezing-out" our trade with the South American countries. When we are told, as we are told, that simple facility for direct communication will tap the fountain of those great resources there and give an outlet for our great products to those countries, it appeals to all the larger views of commercial and industrial policy, and justifies me in departing from what generally is the safe rule, to let all such classes of business take care of themselves. This, in short, is the ground that regulates my conduct in this vote. I am aware a vote for anything which has the appearance or name of subsidy is a dangerous vote to give. We have had scandals in connection with subsidies like that of the Pacific Mail, scandals that threw a cloud over the reputation of the whole Congress, but let us not be afraid of our shadows, nor afraid of doing what seems to be right and just because somebody will talk about it.

Mr. FRYE. I yield now for three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE.]

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, I can say very little in three minutes, and I am obliged to the courtesy of the gentleman from Maine. I would not care to say a word but for what has fallen from my colleague, [Mr. TUCKER,] and I simply rise to express the hope that the gentlemen of the House will not, like my respected colleague, be frightened from the support of this measure by the cry of subsidy. Sir, it is a misnomer to characterize this proposition as a subsidy. What is it? What is the Senate amendment which we are now considering? It authorizes and directs the Postmaster-General to contract for carrying the mails once a month from New York by way of Norfolk, Virginia, to Rio de Janeiro, and once a month from New Orleans, by way of Galveston in Texas, to Rio de Janeiro and return. The contract is to be made with the lowest bidders who are responsible owners of first-class American-built iron screw-steamships of not less than three thousand tons, and capable of making thirteen nautical miles an hour; such mail carriage to be paid for at a rate not exceeding $30 per nautical mile per annum one way for the distance actually traversed between the termini of said ports, provided that the annual compensation for such postal service shall not exceed the sum of $150,000 for each of the said lines. That is the amendment in substance which has been proposed by the Senate. The Postmaster-General is not allowed to consider any bid in excess of $30 per mile per annum, and it is not improbable that the contract may be taken at a lower figure. Is it not a fair business arrangement on the part of the Government? Is there anything in the proposition calculated to excite the fears of gentlemen who have a natural aversion to all subsidies? If there is any subsidy in this, then every railroad in the United States is subsidized, for they are all paid on the same principle for carrying the mails, and usually at a much higher rate. Will gentlemen be deterred from the support of this measure by the apprehension that a particular individual may become the lowest bidder and obtain the contract?

I know nothing whatever about Mr. John Roach, whose name has been so frequently mentioned in connection with this proposition. I only know that he has the reputation of being the most enterprising and successful ship-builder in this country, and of having exhibited extraordinary pluck and energy in the prosecution of the business to which he has devoted himself. If the amendment seems to be fair and right in itself; if mail service between this country and Brazil is thought to be desirable; if the contract is likely to prove an advantageous one to the Government, shall we throw away all its resulting benefits because Mr. Roach, being a man of superior enterprise and energy, is likely to get the contract? Shall we sit still and do nothing, and supinely fold our arms and wait until somebody else who has hitherto proven himself a laggard in the race shall have time to move up abreast of Mr. Roach and take his position as a competitor for the contract?

Is John Roach to be punished for his superior pluck and energy, because he has distanced in the race all the other ship-builders of the country? We are not here to legislate in the interest of Mr. Roach, or to discriminate against him. If he can win the prize in a fair field and an open fight he is entitled to it. We are here, as representatives of the people, to do what we can in a legitimate way to open up new avenues of trade, to restore our crippled commerce, and to revive the prostrate industries of the country. The proposition now before the House has been strongly recommended by the chambers of commerce and boards of trade of New York, New Orleans, Saint Louis, Louisville, and Memphis. It received the indorsement of the postal convention which assembled at Fortress Monroe in July, 1877, and also of the conventions for the promotion of American commerce, composed of delegates from twenty-five States in the Union, which recently assembled in Chicago and New Orleans. They do not ask for any subsidy, but they ask for increased mail facilities between the United States and Brazil, and in making the contract they ask that reasonable encouragement may be given, so that, if possible, the long-lost trade and commerce between the two countries may be regained.

The present method of mail transportation between this country and Brazil is not at all creditable to our enterprise as one of the maritime powers of the world. There is no direct line of steamers, and mail matter from this country destined for the Atlantic ports of South America below Pernambuco goes first to Liverpool, a distance of three thousand miles, and thence five thousand miles by the western coast of Africa to Brazil. The policy of England, France, Germany, Belgium, and other countries with which we are brought into competition for the Brazilian trade is much more enlightened and liberal. They maintain direct steam communication with Brazil at a heavy cost. The result of our mistaken policy has been that we have lost the magnificent trade of that country which legitimately belongs to us because, as the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of this House have truthfully said in their able report, private enterprise unrecognized and unassisted by the Government cannot successfully compete with the well-established European lines for this trade, fostered and sustained as the latter are by their respective governments. The committee say further:

Perhaps the most remarkable feature in the history of American commerce is the strange indifference which has always, until now, existed in this country in regard to trade relations with the empire of Brazil. It is a magnificent country, governed by an enlightened ruler, and rapidly progressing toward a condition of the highest prosperity. It covers an area of nearly four million square miles, and contains a population of twelve million. It has a foreign commerce of $200,000,000, and a coasting trade of about $50,000,000, open to foreign flags. Of this trade, which is yearly increasing, the United States has less than $50,000,000, and exports only about $7,250,000 to that country, although it needs a great many, if not most, of our manufactured products. The rest of the trade is with Europe, and the gold we pay to meet the balance of trade against us goes to England to purchase supplies for Brazil, all of which supplies we ourselves produce.

Why is this? The answer is humiliating. There is not a steamship line between the United States and Brazil, not even a foreign-owned one; but there are nine regularly established steamship lines from Europe to Brazil, each of which is heavily subsidized.

From the able report of the Senate committee on the same subject, we learn that—

Between 1870 and 1875, inclusive, Brazil made exports of the total value of $577,941,492, of which the United States received $274,148,500, showing that we purchased very nearly one-half of all that Brazil exported.

During the same period Brazil made imports valued at $471,570,859, of which the United States furnished only $48,853,535, showing that we furnished only about one-tenth of all that Brazil imported.

The large balance against us in our trade with Brazil for this period of six years, $225,294,945, was remitted by us through England, and France, and Germany, which during the same period furnished Brazil with nearly four hundred million dollars' worth of their products.

The United States imports from and exports to Brazil for the last five years have been singularly uniform, namely:

Year.	Imports.	Exports.
1873.....	$38,540,376	$7,090,987
1874.....	43,889,647	7,560,502
1875.....	42,028,863	7,631,865
1876.....	45,446,381	7,252,218
1877.....	43,438,041	7,497,118

Showing a balance of trade against us during these five years of more than $175,000,000, or an average annual balance against us of $35,000,000; all of which enormous sum we have yearly paid by remittances to Europe, and Europe has sent her manufactures to Brazil to an equal amount. Or, in plain words, we annually pay England, France, and Germany $35,000,000 for the fabrics which they send to Brazil.

Our imports from Brazil are principally coffee, with also some rubber, hides, wool, and sugar, and some woods for dyeing and for ornamentation. Our exports to Brazil are mainly flour and other breadstuffs, codfish, petroleum, and lumber. We send very few manufactured goods, as nearly all fabrics are furnished from Europe.

A similar, if not worse, exhibit might be made of our commercial relations with the Argentine Republic and other South American nations, from which we make large imports and to which we make only very moderate exports, while England, France, and Germany supply their wants and profit by the monopoly of their trade.

In conversation a few days since with a very intelligent gentleman, he made this statement: Forty-two years ago an American citizen, by the name of Wainwright, who had spent a considerable portion of his life in South America, came to this country and undertook to induce the Government to establish a regular line of steamships with Brazil. He was driven off with the cry of "subsidy-beggar," and went to England, where he succeeded in having two five hundred ton ships placed on a line to South America. There are to-day fifty-one steamers, some of them nearly five thousand ton ships, running between England and South America belonging to this line, and it is known to be the most valuable steamship stock in the world. There are two hundred fine steamships running to South America, while on the west coast of that country there is not a single steamship carrying the American flag.

Mr. Speaker, what more can be added to this simple statement? How long shall this condition of affairs exist? How long shall we continue to occupy this humiliating and unenviable position with reference to the other maritime powers of the world? Is American pluck and American energy and American pride clean gone forever? Sir, we owe it to ourselves and to those who will come after us to put forth all our energies to retrieve our lost prestige, to revive our waning commerce, to carry our trade in our own bottoms, and to re-establish our flag once more upon the seas. Believing as I do that the proposed amendment is an important step in this direction, I will give it my cordial and earnest support.

Mr. FRYE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER.]

Mr. MILLS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. How am I to get three minutes in this debate?

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, I could vote for this bill more cheerfully if competition were extended to foreign as well as American built steamships, but in my view of the interests of the country I shall vote for it cheerfully even as it stands.

I am not to be frightened. Mr. Speaker, from my propriety by this cry of subsidy. You may call it a "job," you may call it a "steal" if you please, but still that will not alter its real character nor change my opinion as to its merit.

I am surprised that my friend from New York and my friend from Baltimore should oppose this proposition with such vigor. Why, sir, I saw the other day a telegram in the hand of my friend from New York which said the merchants of New York were opposed to the New Orleans line because they thought they would lose the Brazilian trade.

For that very reason I am for it; not to injure New York, but to put the West, yes, the great valley of the Mississippi, upon fair terms and fair conditions with other sections of the country. And I undertake to say that if this steamship line continues for ten years, the profits to western producers and the profits to western consumers will pay more than double every dollar we take from the Treasury.

Why, sir, what is the condition of the trade of this country with Brazil now? Nearly the entire amount of products that go from here to Brazil is what? Western products, chiefly flour. About three million dollars' worth of flour goes from this country to Brazil. A large proportion of this is manufactured from western wheat. And how does it go to Brazil? It goes to New York and Baltimore by your transportation lines. From there it is shipped to Europe, and thence to Brazil. The cost of carrying a barrel of flour from Saint Louis to New York is from 75 cents to $1.10. Assuming the freight from New Orleans to Saint Louis to be from 20 to 35 cents, there is a difference of 75 cents on every one of the five hundred thousand barrels that we ship every year to the city of Rio.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MILLS. Most of the gentlemen who have spoken have been in favor of this bill. I would like to have five minutes to re-enforce my friend from Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has the floor.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, I expected that I was to have for my own use thirty minutes of time, in which to discuss this very important question. But knowing that other gentlemen could discuss it better than I, I have yielded all my time except about five minutes.

Now, sir, I desire to say, in a few words as I can, why I am impelled to support this bill, whether it be a subsidy or a provision for carrying the United States mails; and so far as I am concerned I do not care which it is. After the war was over industry in this country was driven with spurs. What was the result? Contributions were levied upon the inventive genius of this country and it responded as it never did before in any fifty years of our history. What was the result of that? Why, sir, to-day a man can make four pairs of boots and shoes where he could not make one pair in 1860. One man can weave two yards of cotton cloth to-day where he could one in 1860. One man can make two yards of woolen cloth where he could make one in 1860. A man can cut two acres of grass to-day where he could cut but one in 1860. And the same is true in relation to every industry in our country.

Now, sir, what is the result of that? The result is that the cost of production has been cut down to the very lowest possible mark, and, for the first time in the history of our country, to-day we can compete with the world in any number of manufactured articles. Why don't we? Because we have got no communication with the very world we wish to penetrate; because Europe has established trade with every country on this earth, and our manufacturers and our farmers cannot afford to provide their own lines of communication to reach these countries and at the same time build up their own trade there. They cannot do both. Why, sir, the cotton manufacturers of my city signed a memorial to the Senate of the United States asking Congress to vote this subsidy, if you please to call it so. Why did they do it? They are men of sagacity; they are men who can see business advantages as quick as any man on earth. Why did they ask for this? Why, sir, for this reason:

During the last year they have been selling goods in England and trying to reach Brazil with them. How do they reach Brazil? They ship their goods in New York on an English steamer; she carries them to Liverpool; and then they are reshipped to go down the coast of Africa and away around up to Rio Janeiro, taking thirty-nine days on the voyage, when John Roach's ship made her last trip in twenty-one days from the port of New York. And this, too, with discriminating freights against them in the subsidized English steamers. The same is true of every cotton manufacturer in this country. If he can send his goods by a swift-sailing steamer direct to Rio Janeiro he can compete in Brazil with Europe. Why, sir, look at it. Of cotton goods and cotton fabrics last year we sold Brazil $409,000 worth; other countries sold Brazil $42,000,000. The same is true of woolen manufactures. Of wool, woolen fabrics, and clothing we sold Brazil $978 worth; other countries sold $10,500,000 worth. Take agricultural implements, which we are sending everywhere else, and in which we can compete with other countries: we sold in Brazil $269,000 worth, while other countries sold there $2,500,000 worth. Of boots and shoes we exported to Brazil $2,500 worth, and other countries $2,000,000 worth. Of butter, cheese, lard, and flour, we sold to Brazil about $3,200,000 while other countries sold $8,000,000 worth. Of our domestic exports, Europe took 80 per cent., while only 3½ per cent. went to South America, and a little more than 1 per cent. to Brazil. We sold Brazil about seven and one-half millions of our products, and bought of her nearly fifty millions, the whole of which was brought to us in foreign bottoms, and this balance to her, as well as the freight-money, we paid in gold.

The annual trade of the continent south of the United States is estimated by the Secretary of State to be annually $530,000,000, of which we, their next-door neighbors, enjoy less than one-fourth, and four-fifths of all this vast freighting business is done in foreign bottoms. The Argentine Confederation in 1875 had a trade of one hundred millions, our share of it being only six millions. During the years 1874 and 1875 no steamer flying our flag entered or cleared at her ports. The exports and imports of Chili in 1876 amounted to about $75,000,000.

All of this carrying was done in foreign bottoms. Not a single American steamer entered or cleared her ports. In 1874 the Argentine Confederation imported more than forty millions of yards of cotton-cloth, of which we supplied only about one hundred and fifty thousand.

There is no reason why we should not furnish all the boots and shoes, all the cotton goods, all the woolen goods, all the agricultural implements, all the butter and cheese, and lard, and flour imported by Brazil and the whole of South America instead of allowing Europe to do it. Great Britain has paid in subsidies during the last ten years from four to six millions annually. This fact accounts for the figures I have just submitted to the House, and France, Germany, and Italy do the same.

From European governments last year there were in the ports of Brazil eighteen subsidized steamers every month. Great Britain sent ten; the United States not one. The same holds good as to all the South American ports. Europe three almost daily; we never.

Look at the triangular trade. A subsidized English steamer takes in goods at Liverpool we can make as well and as cheaply as England can, sails to Rio, sells the goods, buys coffee, sails with it to New York or New Orleans, receives our gold for freight and coffee, takes a load of cotton, and sails to Liverpool; then goes over the same voyage again. Are we always to submit to this?

And the United States mail must be delivered to an English steamer, carried to Liverpool, thence to Brazil, from thirty to forty days en route, while we could send it daily from New York in twenty days. Postage on a letter nineteen cents—the United States using three cents and Great Britain sixteen.

Now, sir, just a word in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT.] The gentleman says New York merchants do not want this measure. Oh, no! New York merchants are looking out for New York merchants alone. Give New York importing merchants no custom-house, free trade, free ships, everything free, and they will forget every other interest on earth.

Says the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] this is a "Roach subsidy," and there are no other ships than Roach's which can undertake this service. There is not a word of truth in the statement. The Pacific Mail steamship line has six ships, the Philadelphia and Liverpool line has four that can compete for this service. John Roach himself has built nine ships, each one of which is held by other persons to-day, and each one of which can compete.

The objection is made that we once gave a subsidy—known as the "Garrison subsidy"—from 1864 to 1874. That did not succeed. Why did not it succeed?

Because the cost of production from 1864 to 1874 was higher in this country than any other on earth. Because we had a depreciated and uncertain currency, and we could not manufacture and sell goods in competition with any other country, but to-day we can. Here and now are the elements of success. Shall we avail ourselves of them? I will print as part of my remarks two letters I have received from a merchant of Brazil.

WASHINGTON, February 21, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Some twenty-five years ago I was engaged as a merchant in the city of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, in the importation of American manufactures adapted to the uses of the empire, but owing to the want of steam communication, and the uncertainty of arrivals by sail, found that no correct calculations could be made, and after four years' labor gave it up and returned home to New York.

On the 5th of November last I embarked for Rio in the steamship City of Rio de Janeiro, Captain Weid, and arrived there in twenty-one days and six hours, and spent some six weeks in that city, and made extended arrangements for the introduction of machinery and glassware and other merchandise adapted to the wants of the country, which I found we could supply some 50 per cent. cheaper than Europe, and brought home a large amount of orders, which for the past few weeks since my return have been engaged in shipping by the new line of American steamers. In machinery and glassware the demand is particularly large, and the whole of this trade can be diverted from Europe to the United States. In the mean time my exhibition building or sample-warehouse enterprise was well received, and the minister of agriculture and emperor took a lively interest in seeing that a suitable locality should be selected to place the building. A site answering the purpose was found unoccupied in the heart of the city, but it belongs to its authorities; and, therefore, some sixty days will be required to complete the necessary conference and negotiations concerning it. Of this I was assured before I left Brazil, some six weeks since, and that I would hear that the grant of land would be made.

When this sample warehouse is established the trade will be increased largely, and the Brazilians have agreed to take one-half of the space in both buildings—the main one and machinery hall.

My purpose in coming over to Washington is simply to inform Senators and members that if the new line is not sustained there will be an end to all of our enterprises, and the annual balance of trade against us, some $40,000,000, (which by the plan proposed could be wiped out in a few years,) indefinitely continued.

It does not particularly concern me whose line it is, so long as the owners are American, but as a business man I can assure you that the vast markets for our productions can be easily secured and the mere pittance required, call it subsidy, gift, mail allowance, or otherwise, that would enable the line to carry our productions and firmly establish the commercial relations between the United States and Brazil, should not for one moment enter into any consideration to shut out our productions and allow a trade that naturally belongs to us to continue in the hands of our foreign rivals.

I have connected myself with the large and eminent Brazilian firm of Julio, Bourbon & Co., a member of which firm was educated in Baltimore, and whose sympathies are entirely with the United States, and who desire to transfer their immense business from Europe to North America, and which I am helping them to accomplish.

The main purpose of the line is speedy communication between the two countries, which will be defeated if the ships have to stop at various ports in the United States. In Brazil such stoppages are necessary, for the reason that no rail connection exists between its ports, while in the United States such communication is perfect; and, therefore, to delay the ships after loading at the point of departure by stoppages at different ports on the Atlantic seaboard will defeat largely the main object in view, as all cargo can be rapidly transferred by rail from any point, even before vessels arrive, and no time lost. These important facts should be duly considered.

I can only reiterate that if the mail allowance or subsidy is not granted, or even is so modified as to practically be of little aid, the present opportunity will be lost to us, and the Emperor of Brazil compromised in his efforts to aid us in paying the balance in his favor and against the United States.

JOHN C. KIP HOPPER.
409 Broadway, New York.

NEW YORK, February 27, 1879.

HON. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
Washington, D. C.

I thought it might interest you to know that by the City of Rio de Janeiro, which arrived yesterday, I received a large amount of orders for machinery, which I am getting off in part by the next steamer, which sails on 5th proximo. Everything looks well, and the plat of ground for sample warehouse, I am informed, I will receive the confirmation for by the next steamer. The Public Gardens, or Passio Publico, fronting the bay, and containing some twenty-three acres of ground, will be made over by the government for the purpose of erecting a fine hotel thereon, so much needed in Rio. Consideration is, the buildings will belong or revert to government after the concession expires in twenty-five years. It is the most valuable concession ever made to private parties. With the sample warehouse and the hotel, together with the new line firmly established, the round of American enterprise will be complete. If the latter should be crippled or withdrawn before our trade is established, what shall we do?

Very respectfully,

J. C. KIP HOPPER.

Mr. Speaker, I now desire to ask in behalf of several gentlemen that general leave to print speeches in regard to this subject be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. COLE. The question before us for the extension of American commerce is certainly as important a question as has before come to this Congress, and I ask unanimous consent that the debate be continued a half hour longer.

There are many members besides the favored few who are in favor of this "subsidy" as it is called. A rose by any other name would smell as sweet. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I must object.

Mr. COLE. I think nobody objects. American commerce demands it and American commerce will be heard, and heard through those who represent it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman is not in order; there was an objection made.

Mr. COLE. I think there is unanimous consent to the continuance of the discussion, not only in this House but all over the country, except by those who have the monopoly of this trade in Europe and are determined that it shall never compete with them for the South American trade.

Mr. BLOUNT resumed the floor.

Mr. MILLS. I desire, before the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] proceeds, to ask for five minutes. [Cries of "Object!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor for a half hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield for fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this is a business proposition, and I want to look at it in that light for the time that I have to address the House. If it will pay the people of the United States to grant this subsidy, then I am in favor of granting it. If it will not pay the whole people or a majority of them, then I am for not granting it.

Now, sir, it is not a new thing. Commencing in the year 1847, down to the present time act after act has been passed for a similar purpose. Why, sir, I hold in my hand the official statements of the Secretary of the Navy and Postmaster-General, which show payment of subsidies to the amount, in round numbers, of $14,500,000 to steamship lines during the period from the year 1848 to the year 1858. I hold in my hand a statement that shows subsidies to the amount of $7,000,000, in round numbers, since that time, making over $21,000,000 that have been paid out of the Treasury for the purpose of establishing steamship lines.

I had the curiosity to go back and read the debates, and found that there was the self-same arguments then made, and I may say a duplication of the same tunes all around, as those by the gentlemen from Maine and Ohio made here to-day.

Now, what are the facts? Seven million dollars would buy all the steamships engaged in commerce that sail under the American flag on every ocean in the world; and more than that, the subsidizing of these steamship lines, from the Collins line in 1852 up to the present time, has bankrupted every prominent man that has favored it. The political ghosts of departed politicians that have squandered the money of the people for this kind of unwarrantable expenditures from the Treasury rise up and warn Representatives to avoid the errors heretofore committed by our predecessors. Now, why would it not be profitable to grant this subsidy of $3,000,000? I have it here in a nut-shell. I am sorry that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is not in his seat.

Last year our imports of merchandise were of the value of $468,000,000. Of this $171,000,000 was admitted free, and $297,000,000 was dutiable, yielding a revenue to the Treasury of $130,000,000.

The customs revenue collected on that $297,000,000 of imports was $130,000,000, or 43 per cent., to be added to the price of the goods produced abroad. Manufacturers producing like products in this country are thus enabled to obtain 43 per cent. more for their goods than do those who produce them abroad. I am not here at this time to discuss the policy of this. We are supreme in our own borders. But when you propose to sell your manufactured articles in Brazil, that 43 per cent. cannot be overcome, because you are called upon to compete with cheap labor and the products of cheap labor abroad. That is the secret of the failure of these $21,000,000 of subsidies during the last twenty years. What costs a dollar to produce in Liverpool or France is worth $1.43 in the United States made by American artisans. Yet gentlemen talk about taking that one dollar and forty-three cents' worth of stuff and shipping it to Brazil and competing there with products that cost but a dollar. Now, you cannot do it unless you grant a subsidy equal to forty-three cents on the dollar, so that your products in this country may compete with the products abroad.

We paid Garrison $1,500,000 on a contract for ten years, which expired two years ago. Do you know what it did? Our imports from Brazil increased double and over, while our exports only increased some five or six millions during that ten years. That is all. We paid the Pacific Mail Company $5,000,000 to carry the mails from San Francisco to China for ten years. The official data show that our exports to China increased—total for that ten years over the previous ten years $6,000,000, while our imports nearly doubled, running from $108,000,000, which were brought over for the ten years before the subsidy, to $183,000,000 for the ten years the subsidy was paid. Our exports increased $6,000,000, and for that we paid $5,000,000 of subsidy to the Pacific Mail.

And these subsidy-seekers came into this House, or rather into Washington, in 1872, and absolutely took the money which we paid them out of the Treasury and with it corrupted the officials about this House, your doorkeepers and your postmaster, to procure another subsidy. The soldiers of fortune swarm about the corridors of Washington; the lobby is on hand. If you will read that report touching the Pacific Mail subsidy and examine it, and then look into your galleries, you will see familiar faces around you now. They meet you all about the Capitol and pull your coat-tails in order that they may talk to you in favor of this subsidy. [Laughter.]

Last year the proposition was to give $1,500,000 to John Roach for these lines; we refused it. This year the proposition is to give him $3,000,000, and if we vote it down now, then I suppose the proposition will be to give him $6,000,000 next time.

A MEMBER. Then let us take it now.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Well, if it is to go on in that way, that would be one argument in favor of this proposition. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I want to reserve three millions of my fifteen for the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.] [Great laughter.] Three minutes, I mean. But that is a matter of small controversy, as the millions are flying all about in the atmosphere here.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has said that this is not a subsidy for John Roach, and I am not going to abuse John Roach. John Roach is not to be abused for coming down here and asking us to give him $3,000,000 and to tax all the rest of the shipping of the United States and everybody else so as to do it. He would take it, of course, if he could get it, as I expect almost everybody else would take it, but he will not get it by my vote.

But my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says this is not for Roach. He says there are six steamers owned by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company that can compete with him. Only six; and yet you are just fresh from the payment of $5,000,000 of subsidy to that company; you only stopped two years ago. And it is said that you can take those six steamships of the Pacific Mail from that line to China, for which you paid so much subsidy, and run them in competition with John Roach for this contract. That is t. t.—too thin, in the ordinary vulgar phrase. [Laughter.]

The gentleman also says that there are four ships upon the great Philadelphia and Liverpool line—four American steamships. I do not want to take them from that line, because there is our commerce—I mean the great bulk of our commerce between the United States and Europe, and this is the only American steamship line in that trade, and the only one that has never asked a subsidy. Let it alone; it is doing business like others, namely, upon the merits alone.

Gentlemen, do you know how our commerce is made up? Let me call your attention to our exports, and where they go. Of cotton we exported last year $180,000,000; of breadstuffs, $180,000,000; of oils, $51,000,000; provisions, $125,000,000; tobacco, $28,000,000; agricultural implements, $2,500,000; making $614,000,000 out of a total of $680,000,000.

Where did they go? I will tell you. In 1877 two-thirds of it all went to Great Britain and her dependencies, and in return we bought only $162,000,000 of Great Britain and her dependencies, making a balance of trade of $240,000,000 with Great Britain and her dependencies alone in our favor.

Sir, we can sell these articles as cheaply as any other nation can sell them. They will find their own markets under the laws of trade, which are as broad as the earth and as eternal as the hills. Now, what is this proposition? Oh, it is to give John Roach $3,000,000 as a practical gratuity, and to charge that over as a tax on the cotton and provisions and tobacco and wheat and grain and breadstuffs and oil that we produce. What for? To enable somebody to sell something that he has made, which it costs $1.43 to make here, while it costs only a dollar to make it in Europe, and both manufacturers have to go to the same market, namely, Brazil. Why, gentlemen, if you had a business agent who proposed to do your private business in that way, you would put him in a lunatic asylum, or swear that he was a thief or an idiot and discharge him. [Laughter.]

Now, this proposition has been upon the House Calendar since May last. The committee of which I am a member reported it, I making a minority report against it. Has the measure ever been called up in this House? Has there ever been an assault, however feeble, made upon the Calendar to reach it? Can the measure stand upon its own merits? Can it stand discussion and amendment under the five-minute rule? Not at all. It has slept from May last till the present time. Barnacle-like, it last session fastened with the grip of death upon the post-route bill, and refused to let the post-route bill pass unless it passed. Now it fastens itself upon this appropriation bill appropriating $36,000,000 for the postal service of the country, and with both hands about the neck of this measure it says, "The mails of the country shall be stopped unless you permit my unholy and stinking carcass to be dragged through with the balance of the appropriations." I am for cutting it loose from this general appropriation bill at all hazards and letting it stand or fall upon its own merits; and whenever that is done it will die; and its death will cause rejoicing throughout the country, and not grief.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] is now entitled to the floor for three minutes.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Mr. Speaker, my first reason for voting against this amendment is this: almost immediately upon the assembling of this Congress I voted for a resolution by which I told the world that I would not vote for subsidies. I meant it; and before my God and before my country I propose to stand by it. Other gentlemen may do as they please.

Another reason why I shall vote against this amendment is because this service can be performed for less than John Roach expects to get for it. I so infer from this fact: when we cleared the lobby out of this House we cleared out John Roach and the hundred men that were under pay, leaning over our desks, occupying the floor, breathing their foul breath into our faces. These gentlemen who were on the outer tier were talking for John Roach and American commerce. They could not have been employed unless money was to be made out of this scheme. John Roach is not a charitable institution. [Laughter.]

Another reason why I shall vote against this proposition is that

I do not like its shape. It is proposed to run steamers from New York to Brazil, and from New Orleans to Brazil; but under this amendment one line is not to be run unless the other is run. Why is that? If one line should fail, does not the country need the other?

Another thing: they are not content to let this line run from New Orleans to Rio or to Para; it must go first to Galveston. They are not willing to let the line run from New York to Rio or Para; it must go to Norfolk. Why? I will not say what was meant by the committee; I will not say what was meant by the Senate; but I will say that those who concocted the idea wished to enlarge the number that would have a part of the "pork." [Laughter.] We know how "pork" makes men "holler." Saint Louis is going to have some of the "pork" indirectly; but it will not do any good. Sir, I am interested in the increased value of western produce; but western produce is not going to get any benefit from the New Orleans market until other auspices govern New Orleans. Up to the time of the war New Orleans was contending for her rights in the Territories. During the war New Orleans was fighting for her rights. Since the war New Orleans has taken care of the democratic party; and her trade is going to "eternal ballyhack." [Laughter.] But when New Orleans can fight for her interests then she will prosper; she will enjoy her rights with the rest of the country. Then Saint Louis as well as Iowa (where I am interested) will have some of the "pork."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some trouble in the minds of gentlemen on this floor as to what they shall call this legislation. They have expended a great deal of labor in trying to determine how they shall denominate it, but they have failed to furnish any precise description. No matter what its name may be, it is important that this House should know the facts concerning it; and not only this House, but the country, our constituency, so that when we shall meet our people hereafter, they shall be able to say whether this legislation was right or wrong.

We are told, in the first place, that this is no subsidy. Why? Because the purpose is to carry the mails from several points in this country to Brazil. We are now paying about $1,400 for carrying the mails to Brazil. John Roach is carrying a monthly mail from New York to Brazil now. Since September there have been three mails a month, one of them by steamship line and two by sailing-vessels; and I incorporate as part of my remarks the report of Mr. Blackfan on this subject.

The report referred to is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF FOREIGN MAILS,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1879.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request, I have the honor to inform you that direct mails have been dispatched from this country to Brazil since July 1, 1878, as follows:

During quarter ended September 30, 1878, by four sailing-vessels, and three steamers of Roach's line, all from the port of New York.

During October, 1878, three dispatches from New York—one by Roach's steamer, one by Merchants' line steamer, and one by sailing-vessel.

During November, 1878, three dispatches from New York—one by steamer of Roach's line, one by steamer of North German Lloyd line, and one by sailing-vessel.

During December, 1878, three dispatches by sailing-vessels, one by steamer of Roach's line, and one by steamer of Merchants' line, all from the port of New York.

During January, 1879, one dispatch by Roach's steamer and two by sailing-vessels, all from New York.

During February, 1879, one dispatch by Roach's steamer and two dispatches by sailing-vessels from New York; also, one dispatch by steamer of Merchants' line from West Point, Virginia.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

JOSEPH H. BLACKFAN,
Superintendent.

Hon. J. H. BLOUNT,

Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. ELLIS rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not yield to the gentleman.

That is the service we are getting now. The proposition of this bill is that we shall pay $3,000,000 in ten years to pay for what we are already getting—this and nothing more.

Mr. ELLIS again rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not yield to the gentleman, and I hope he will not interrupt me.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] and other gentlemen say this is not a subsidy because we are paying large sums for the star-route service. But, sir, that service is submitted to competition; it is open to the world; we get it at the cheapest rates we can. We advertise for bids, and we contract with the lowest responsible bidder. But I have yet to learn of a case in which we have appropriated money to pay for securing post-route service where we already had it.

Then, sir, it is not for a mail service. Let us be honest to the American people. We have got the mail service, and therefore do not allege that it is for a mail service. What, then, is it? It is pretended to be for the benefit of American commerce.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him—

Mr. BLOUNT. I will not; and I wish the gentleman to understand that I cannot yield to him as I have not time to do so. If I had more time I would yield to him and other gentlemen for any questions they might ask.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have had some experience in reference to this question of subsidies heretofore. In 1848 we voted $16,000 a trip in the way of subsidies. Later on, we increased that to $33,000; so that in 1855 it reached the enormous sum of $858,000 per annum. But what was the result? The time of those subsidies expired, the money had been paid from the Treasury, and still American commerce had not revived. At that time there was a New York and Havre line. Where has that gone? At the expiration of its service it passed away.

I must be brief. Then, again, in 1865, we had the Pacific Mail subsidy. Its term ceased and it also has passed away. We had in 1864 the Garrison line. Its term expired and still American commerce was not revived. If subsidies truly revive our commerce, why did those subsidies not revive it? In those cases we had the same reasons urged for granting subsidies we have advanced here to-day in favor of this Roach subsidy.

Again we are told that it is necessary to grant this subsidy for the revival of American commerce. In that way the American people have been cheated and deceived and millions have been taken out of the Treasury under the false delusion of aid to American commerce.

Let this proposition, Mr. Speaker, be plainly stated to the people of this country. What is it? First, it is urged that this subsidy is for the benefit of the mail service. But that is disposed of, for we have the mails now, and therefore it is not necessary to us. It is to have, then, what we already possess. But in the second place it is said to be necessary for the revival of American commerce. I have shown that our experience in the past has proved that we have granted many subsidies, and in not a single instance has the result been to increase American commerce. Yet here to-day the old propositions are brought forward and the old arguments made before the House. Mr. Roach to-day, with a subsidy of $120,000 for ten years from the Brazilian government, has a line running from New York to Rio Janeiro. The argument in favor of the bill in the first place, that it is in the interest of the mails, I have shown will not stand. Is it in the interest of American commerce? Let us see. It is proposed to start from New York and go down after my friend from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] at Norfolk, and go by that way over to Rio, an additional distance to the extent of the difference between New York and Norfolk. Why go there at all? The question answers itself.

Then, again, it is proposed to start from New Orleans, but instead of going directly to Rio by the way of Mobile and Pensacola, the line is to go four hundred miles back and westward to Galveston, where the vessel will be unable to get over the bar, and return, making a distance of eight hundred additional miles.

We are told, sir, that we are not to argue or dispute the merit of either one of these two lines to Brazil. The revival of prostrate American commerce is pictured in glowing terms. A glorious future for it is painted to charm us. We are told in this proposition that American commerce shall die forever if these terminal points are not placed in it. There is to be no revival, notwithstanding all that has been said, unless these points are rigidly preserved. Now, what does all this mean? Will the people not understand it? Will they not suspect it? To my mind it is nothing in the world but the same John Roach, in reference to whom we have heard so much heretofore concerning naval contracts. He has invited us to Chester. Many members have had free rides, unlimited champagne, and altogether a jolly good time. After all this he comes here in a memorial presented in January, 1878, of course actuated by the most disinterested motives, and informs Congress he has been so much troubled in his mind about American commerce that at his own expense he sent an agent to Brazil to look into the subject and report upon it. From the information of that agent he is satisfied how the prostrate American commerce can be revived, and he then recommends the adoption of this very identical proposition for his own benefit.

Gentlemen may talk about being alarmed; they may say, Mr. Speaker, that they care not for the name of subsidy or for the name of jobs. Thank God, sir, the American mind does care for the name of subsidy and the name of jobs! No matter what this audience may care for, the great mass of the American people are interested in this subject. They have seen, under the pretense of patriotism, $30,000,000 paid out of the Treasury for Pacific Railroad bonds. The people to-day are paying taxes to make good that payment from the Treasury to those Pacific Railroads. The people have seen the American Congress and American public men brought down low in the public esteem in this and other countries because of the scandals which grew out of the Pacific Mail subsidy.

But it has been said that New York is troubled because she wants free ships and because she wants free trade. Our pride should be excited because we have a great city which asks of the American people no subsidies, but only a free chance in the race of life.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the discussion be continued half an hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has not the floor, and I do not yield it to him to make that motion.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the House will vote down the demand made by the gentleman from Georgia for the previous question.

The question being put on the motion for the previous question, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. I call for a division on seconding the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 137, noes 10.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. WADDELL. I suppose the proper motion is to concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has the right to make that motion.

Mr. WADDELL. I make the motion, and call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. A negative vote on concurrence is equivalent to a non-concurrence, and the practice is to submit the question of concurrence first.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 159, not voting 42; as follows:

So the amendment of the Senate was not concurred in.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am paired with Mr. BLAND on this question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. My colleague, Mr. STEPHENS, is paired upon this question with Mr. RYAN, of Kansas.

Mr. ELLIS. I am directed to announce that Mr. GARDNER, of Ohio, is paired with Mr. DICKEY; Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, is paired with Mr. POWERS, and Mr. EWING is paired with Mr. JONES, of Ohio.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Upon this question I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. WILLIAMS. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. KENNA. I am requested to announce that my colleague, Mr. WILSON, is paired on this question with Mr. CUMMINGS, of Iowa.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. COX, of New York, who is absent on business connected with the census bill.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to state that I am paired with Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia.

Mr. COX, of Ohio. I am requested to announce a pair between Mr. LYNDE and Mr. CANDLER, who are both absent on committee business. Had they been present, Mr. LYNDE would have voted "ay" and Mr. CANDLER "no."

Mr. CALKINS. Upon this question I am paired with Mr. ACKLEN, who is confined to his room by dangerous illness. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BEEDE. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. GARDNER. I am paired generally with my colleague, Mr. DICKEY, to-day. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. LAPHAM. Upon this question I am paired with Mr. KNOTT.

Mr. DEAN. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. BANKS. If he were present I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. The other amendment upon which a separate vote was asked was the one in regard to the classification of mail matter.

The SPEAKER. Upon that amendment debate is allowed for one hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say that so far as the discussion upon this amendment is concerned I desire that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] shall divide the time as they see fit. Such is the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations. This provision originally came from that committee in the form of a separate bill, and the Senate inserted it in this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] is recognized as controlling half of the hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I believe the order of the House was that debate should be allowed for one hour under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WADDELL. That was the order.

The SPEAKER. Half the time will be under the control of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. WADDELL] and the other half under the control of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON], who are both members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. WADDELL. I have explained to the gentleman who has charge of this bill the various differences between the classification bill of the House and the amendment of the Senate. I do not know what his views in regard to that matter are. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY], my colleague on the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. My recollection of the order that the House made is that this should be considered under the five-minute rule and discussed and amended as in committee. If that be so, then it should be read for amendments.

The SPEAKER. It is competent prior to the seconding of the previous question to amend the amendment of the Senate; the House has that power.

Mr. BLOUNT. The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations is to non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Appropriations recommends non-concurrence, and that is before the House as the judgment of the committee, but it does not prevent the power of amendment prior to the previous question being ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. The object of the committee in making the recommendation, and the object, as I understand it, of the order of the House, was to let the amendment be debated for one hour under the five-minute rule, and at the close of that hour there should be no further debate.

The SPEAKER. That is in accordance with what the Chair has stated.

Mr. BLOUNT. Gentlemen around me did not seem to understand it and differed about what the order of the House was.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I hope the amendment will be read by paragraphs subject to amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. That can be done afterward. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY.]

Mr. MONEY. The question now before the House is concurrence or non-concurrence in the amendment by the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill, that amendment being in substance the bill reported to the House some time ago by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, for the classification of mail matter and the rates of postage thereon. That bill was discussed at some length in this House, but was not finished when the motion to adjourn prevailed at the night session when the bill was under consideration.

I do not propose to discuss this amendment, but I will take this opportunity to place before the House some matters in relation to the administration of the postal affairs of this country by the Post-Office Department. I would not do so now, but for the reason that I have heretofore failed to obtain an opportunity to lay before this House information which I think will interest the House, will interest the country, will interest the Department, and will very much interest divers and sundry mail contractors.

It has been charged in this House, and at the other end of the Capitol, and by the newspapers throughout the country, that the democratic party has refused appropriations to such an extent as to make it indispensably necessary to pass deficiency bills; that we are compelled, in order to meet a false economy, to pass at each session of Congress bills appropriating further sums of money for the public service.

Now, sir, the different Departments of the Government have proceeded to expend the public money as they choose, disregarding the appropriations made by Congress. In that way we on this side of the House are charged with having inadequate conceptions of the necessities of the public service. Now, I think I can show that these deficiencies arise not from lack of money appropriated, but because of gross abuse in the administration of public affairs.

I will say here that I shall confine my remarks simply to the Post-Office Department, because I have no familiarity with the other Departments of the Government. I can show in connection with the Post-Office Department gross abuses of administrative powers such as perhaps will astonish the House.

One great source of deficiency in the postal service is this: when the routes, throughout the West particularly, are let by contract to the lowest bidder, and the service goes into operation, they are doubled and trebled in their trips per week, and the rate of time is expedited, and for this immense sum, entirely disproportionate to the value of the service, is paid by the Department.

I have here a history of some twenty or more of the principal postal routes of the great West. I will take as sample bricks of the manner in which this branch of the service is conducted the largest and the smallest of the routes, which show an unwise and wasteful expenditure of the public money, done under color of law, but to the excessive profit of the contractor, the loss of the Government, and in violation of the spirit of the law.

I ask the attention of the House first to the route known as the Fort Worth and Fort Yuma route—on the books of the Department, No. 31454. This route was let to the lowest bidder at $134,000, daily trips, with a schedule time of seventeen days. Operations were begun on the 1st day of July last. On the 5th day of August an order was entered upon the books of the Department increasing the pay of that route from $134,000 to $299,000. The time was shortened from seventeen days to thirteen days; and simply for expediting the mail four days on this wilderness route the pay was increased from $134,000 to $299,000.

I hold in my hand official copies of papers showing the agreement with the contractor, the sworn estimate of the contractor of the required increase of men and animals necessary for the expedited schedule, the bid of the contractor, and the orders of the Post-Office Department accepting the bid and ordering the expedition:

Advertisement of November 1, 1877.

(For service from July 1, 1878, to June 30, 1882.)

Texas route No. 31454, Fort Worth, Texas, to Yuma, Arizona:

1,560 miles and back, seven times a week.

Leave Fort Worth daily at six a. m.; arrive at Yuma in seventeen days.

Leave Yuma daily at six a. m.; arrive at Fort Worth in seventeen days.

Contractor: Jno. T. Chidester, $134,000 per annum.

Order of August 5, 1878—No. 6391.

Expedite service so as to require it to be performed by a schedule of departures and arrivals not to exceed thirteen days' running time each way, from August 15, 1878, and allow contractor $165,000 additional pay per annum, such additional compensation bearing a less proportion to the additional stock and carriers necessarily employed than the compensation under the original contract bears to the stock and carriers necessarily employed in its execution, but being in accordance with contractor's proposition.

BRADY.

Rate of speed under the contract, three and one-half miles per hour now; new order, five miles.

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 5, 1878.

SIR: I hereby agree to expedite the schedule on route 31454, from Fort Worth to Yuma, so as to transport the mails each way in thirteen days for an additional compensation of $165,000 per annum added to my present pay.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. T. CHIDESTER,
Contractor.

Hon. D. M. KEY,
Postmaster-General.

Now, to fully appreciate the extraordinary circumstances I have related, it is necessary to go further into this history. A part of this route was let out at $124,000 in 1870, from Mesilla to San Diego, twice a week. The speed was increased and the service was raised first to three times and then to seven times a week, and the price was raised from $124,000 to $218,460 per annum.

In 1874 the Department again let out this route to the lowest bidder and reduced the trips from seven times per week to three times. The contract was let for $55,000. A short time afterward the trips were increased to seven times per week, the time expedited, and the price raised to $233,333. The House will please take notice that this route was first raised from two to three trips a week and then to seven trips, and the amount paid the contractors for carrying the mails on the route was raised in proportion. Then, when the route was again let in 1874, the trips were reduced to three per week; and if it had been done for the sole purpose of enabling the contractor to realize an enormous bonus when the trips were afterward raised to seven per week, it could not have been better arranged.

The rate at which this last contract was carried was about five and one-half miles per hour. When the contract was let last July, instead of reducing the number of trips per week the schedule of time was made lower and the route was bid off at $134,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand at first that the gentleman was speaking under the five-minute rule. The gentleman has already spoken eight minutes, but the Chair will not charge it against the time allowed for debate. The Chair will suggest that some gentleman will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] if he desires to continue his remarks.

Mr. WADDELL. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman for five minutes; or, if I can control the time, I will yield to him as long as he wants.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] will proceed.

Mr. MONEY. Now, this route, let at $134,000 a year to run over a length of route fifteen hundred and sixty miles in extent, according to the books of the Department, but fourteen hundred and fourteen miles according to estimates of a subcontractor, Mr. Taylor, as stated in his evidence, was to have the service performed in seventeen days. That seventeen days' service put the mails on the route at the rate of only three and two-thirds miles per hour. In a month and a half after the contract went into operation the time was shortened four days and the schedule made five miles per hour; and for that slight increase of speed, which at the best was but slow time, the contractor was paid out of the Treasury an extra amount of $165,000.

The Department claims as its justification in the first place that it had numerous petitions from citizens of all the towns along the routes, from Representatives and Delegates in Congress, from Senators, from the leading public men in the country receiving its mail service by this route. Now, here are the recommendations. They are very numerous, and they are signed by Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and the most influential men in that part of the country. But let us see what these recommendations are. They are simply to expedite the time. They only ask the Department to give these people the same schedule that they enjoyed before this contract began to operate; nothing more. Nothing unusual was demanded, nothing excessive. A very moderate rate of speed—five miles per hour—is all that was asked. These numerous petitions simply ask that the old schedule be restored. I would print the petitions and recommendations, but they would occupy a great deal of space to no purpose. It is admitted that they were strong and many.

But it is to be observed that none of these petitions, none of the Senators, Representatives, and Delegates and leading citizens made any recommendation whatever as to the compensation. It is to be supposed that the contractor would get increased pay, but of that the petitioners took no notice. It could have been little expected that the increase of speed would call for an increase of pay from $134,000 per annum to $299,000 per annum. The increase, $165,000, is largely over 100 per cent. of the original contract price. There had been much argument about this contract when made; it was said that it was not technically correct as to the requiring of the sureties, and also that it could not be profitably carried out at the price bid, but the technicalities were waived by the Department and the bid accepted, notwithstanding the irregularity, because it was cheap and a great saving to the Government. The saving, Mr. Speaker, just lasted six weeks. That exercise of economy was enough.

Now, the contractors under the previous schedule had made no complaint. The citizens along the route were perfectly satisfied with the old rate of speed. It was what a stage-coach drawn by four horses might reasonably be expected to make day after day. But for simply increasing the speed from three and two-third miles per hour to five miles per hour, the Department engages to give the contractor the extra sum of $165,000 per annum.

Where is the law for this? The only law authorizing the increased pay at all is that which says, when the speed is expedited the increased pay shall be in exactly the same proportion to the original pay as the increase of stock is to the original stock. In other words, it is provided that the increased pay shall keep pace with the increased expense. Now, it must strike the mind of any business man that when a mail contractor on a long route like this, fifteen hundred miles in length, has stage-coaches, men, horses, and all the appliances necessary for the successful operation of the line, it would be impossible in the very nature of things for him to double the men, stage-coaches, horses, &c., simply to increase speed from three and two-thirds miles to five miles per hour. But the increased pay in this case is more than 100 per cent. of the amount originally contracted for. This case is of a piece with many others. Time and again the Department has done this thing. I have here in brief a history of a great many routes in the West. They all show precisely the same history: an increase of speed, an increase of pay, an increase of trips.

The law provides definitely for the increased pay on increased trips. It says the pay shall be increased in the same ratio with the increase of trips—if one trip at $1,000, two trips at $2,000. When the schedule is expedited, then the proportion of the increased pay is to the original pay as the increased expense to the original expense. In the case of increased trips, the allowance of pay I find to be generally to the full limit allowed by law. The discretion of the Department goes to the benefit of the contractor.

Now, upon what sort of data can the Postmaster-General apportion to the contractor an increase of pay? Only upon the oath of the contractor that a certain increase of stock and appliances necessary for his business is demanded by the expedited schedule. Now, the contractor who goes into the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and makes oath—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, obtained the floor and said: I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY,] but I would like to ask him a question upon the point he is now discussing. In the course of his investigations at the Post-Office Department, has he had any reason to believe that as a rule service has been fixed upon various routes and those routes let out with the view of subsequently doubling the service and increasing the compensation?

Mr. MONEY. I cannot say what the intention of the Department was; I can only show the gentleman the history of these routes and the result.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman an additional question: when increased service is allowed upon any route, if the service is doubled, is not the compensation doubled? If the service is trebled is not the compensation trebled? Has not the gentleman discovered this to be the uniform rule?

Mr. MONEY. That is about the rule; there may be exceptions. Here is the oath which the contractor makes:

Sir: To expedite the schedule upon route 31454, from Fort Worth to Yuma, will require increase as follows: Requirements of present schedule 92 carriers and 378 animals; requirements of thirteen-day schedule would be 180 carriers and 926 animals.

I solemnly swear that the above estimate is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

J. T. CHIDESTER.

To the Hon. POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 3d day of August, 1878.

[SEAL.]

S. F. AUSTIN,
Notary Public.

Speed under original contract 2½ miles per hour; by the expedited schedule 5 miles per hour.

Distance 1560 miles—by Taylor estimated at 1410.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; has not the gentleman's time expired?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi had spoken eight minutes before the Chair was apprised that the five-minute rule was operating; then the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADELL] obtained the floor and gave the gentleman his five minutes; and then, as the Chair understood, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] yielded further time to the gentleman.

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir. I am speaking by the kindness of my friends.

The SPEAKER. There are now three minutes remaining of the time of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there are portions of this bill in regard to which the House requires some explanation; and I would suggest that the whole hour be not consumed in discussing the question to which he is now addressing his attention.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes; the committee of conference would like to have the benefit of the discussion on this bill.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. I know that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] is conversant with the subjects embraced in the bill, and therefore we would like to hear him upon the Senate amendment.

Mr. MONEY. I will reach the Senate amendment in a moment. I have given one specimen of the manner in which contracts are let in the Department, which, I think, will explain something of the demand for deficiency appropriation bills. Here, for instance, is a little route over in Maryland. I take the smallest one I can put my hand on—from Edgewood to Bel Air. Between these two places there are every week twelve trips and six half trips. The distance is eleven and a half miles. For carrying the mails over that route and six miles beyond, to Hickory, the contractor gets $779 per annum. There are twelve trips and six additional half trips every week. In other words, there are daily mails to the town of Bel Air, a town, I am informed, of about twelve hundred or fifteen hundred inhabitants. The inhabitants of that village receive three mails per day. The running time between Edgewood and Bel Air being three hours, to quicken it to two hours for the eleven and a half miles, and give Bel Air its mails an hour earlier, the contractor is allowed $1,070 additional. He carried the mails five and a half miles beyond Bel Air twelve trips per week, for $779. To increase his speed he got $1,070. Of course he made oath that his increase of stock and men were in proportion. But who cannot see that it is impossible for it to be so? The best men of the country signed a recommendation for increased speed, but not for this excessive and unreasonable pay. I include the papers in that case, that they may speak for themselves:

(No. 2032.)

Date: January 31, 1879; State: Maryland

No. of route: 10123.

Termini of route: Edgewood to Hickory

Length of route: Seventeen miles.

No. of trips per week: Twelve to Bel Air and six the residue, with six half trips additional between Edgewood and Bel Air.

Contractor: Emil S. Freidrich.

Pay: $779.79 per annum.

Senator WHYTE incloses petition from citizens, indorsed by Senator DENNIS and Hon. C. B. ROBERTS, for an expedited schedule on this route, reducing the running time from three to two hours between Bel Air and Edgewood, which they each recommend and ask to be granted.

Contractor under oath states that it requires the labor and service of three men and three horses for the present service from Bel Air to Edgewood, and under the proposed expedited schedule five men and thirteen horses will be required. Said increase of speed will cost pro rata $1,309.14 additional per annum; and contractor proposes to expedite as petitioned for at the rate of $1,070.45 additional per annum.

Senator DENNIS personally urges that this be done.

Order contractor to perform service between Edgewood and Bel Air by an expedited schedule of two hours each way, instead of three hours each way, and in accordance with the sworn statement of contractor allow $1,070.45 additional per annum, being less than pro rata, from February 1, 1879.

BRADY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MONEY. I have not concluded my remarks, and if there be no objection will proceed to finish them.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I cannot yield for a political or buncombe speech.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with that. The gentleman from Mississippi has control of his time, and it makes no difference whether he takes the whole of the thirty minutes or yields it to others. The gentleman from Illinois will not suffer, as he will have his thirty minutes to reply.

Mr. MONEY. I do not suppose it matters at all to the gentleman from Illinois how I put in my thirty minutes.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But I understood we were under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but by general consent the gentleman from Mississippi has been allowed to go on, but he cannot proceed longer than the thirty minutes allowed by the order of the House.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If there be unanimous consent that I shall also have thirty minutes to reply I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can have thirty minutes if gentlemen yield to him on that side as gentlemen on the other side have yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. But I object to anybody yielding.

The SPEAKER. It is not done by unanimous consent. The Chair cannot do that.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. We are proceeding under the five-minute rule, and when the gentleman's five minutes are up that is the end of it.

The SPEAKER. Members have been regularly recognized by the Chair at the end of every five minutes, and they have taken the floor and yielded their time to the gentleman from Mississippi. What remedy has the Chair against that?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask by unanimous consent that I may control the last thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to have that done for the gentleman. He thinks such is the understanding.

Mr. ELAM. I now take the floor, and will yield my five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. I now, Mr. Speaker, address myself to the bill under consideration, in order to relieve the anxiety of the gentleman from Illinois.

This is nothing but a simplification of the postal code. There are no new powers granted to the Department by this bill, none whatever. The only feature which has met with any considerable opposition in the bill is one requiring registration for public journals. I believe that is the only one upon which there has been any particular objection. In regard to that matter, there is no additional grant of power to any postmaster or to the Post-Office Department by this section. It is intended that the decisions made by the Post-Office Department upon the admission of matter to what is called the privileged rate should be logical and consistent. Under the present postal laws, as you are aware, a paper may be mailed at one point and it may go to a thousand different post-offices. First, the postmaster who mailed that paper must decide whether it can be admitted to the privileged rate, whether it comes under that description of mail matter which admits it to the postage of two cents per pound. But that does not settle the question by any means. At the thousand different offices of delivery each postmaster may set up his opinion in contravention to the opinion of the postmaster at the point of mailing, and the consequence is publishers of journals who have a sort of doubtful right of admission to privileged rates are troubled and vexed by the illogical and inconsistent decisions of different postmasters all over the country.

At last, when these postmasters differ, all they can do is to forward to the Postmaster-General the paper which has been denied access to the mails as privileged matter, and he must at last decide whether it shall be admitted or shall not be admitted. So then it goes to the Post-Office Department, and this takes time, and in that time the publisher is harassed by a thousand letters from his subscribers all over the country asking him how it is their papers are not received. Then the advertisers who give him business to do, who display advertisements in his columns, come upon him for rebate and claim he did not circulate their advertisements in as many papers as he professed to be able to do.

All this deranges and vexes and confuses the business of the publisher. As I have said, at last they go to the Post-Office Department. This bill carries it at once to the Post-Office Department. If any postmaster should refuse to admit a paper at privileged rates an appeal is at once made to the Postmaster-General. By him it is referred to the proper officer in his Department, and a ruling is made which is according to law and consistent with other decisions on like points. It has been contended by some gentlemen, who I am persuaded have not thoroughly examined this question, there is established a censorship over the press. It does nothing of the sort. It does not enlarge in any particular the power of the Post-Office Department. It simply refers at once for logical and final decision of the question whether the paper in question is entitled to the privileged rate. There can be no difficulty about it.

It does keep from the mails a vast bulk of matter which would go at the privileged rate, and which is made up simply of advertising concerns not intended for public education. We know the reason for which papers are allowed to go at a low rate of postage, amounting almost to the franking privilege, is because they are the most efficient educators of our people. It is because they go into general circulation and are intended for the dissemination of useful knowledge such as will promote the prosperity and the best interests of the people all over the country. Then all this vast mass of matter is excluded from that low rate of postage. I say, instead of being a censorship upon the press, it is for the protection of the legitimate journals of the country.

There is one provision to which I wish to call attention. It is as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent publishers of the second class and news agents from inclosing in their publications bills, receipts, and orders for subscriptions thereto; but such bills, receipts and orders shall be in such form as to convey no other information than the name, location, and subscription price of the publication or publications to which they refer.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the most illogical provisions in this bill. It just amounts to this: you publish a newspaper in the city of New York, and the letter-carrier cannot deliver that paper to a single subscriber within the limits of the free delivery of that city without the postage of one cent. But you can take that same newspaper and carry it over to Brooklyn or Jersey City and the letter-carrier is compelled to carry it to every solitary subscriber in the whole limits of his delivery. And more than that, that same newspaper can be put in the mail, can be transported to San Francisco, and there put in the hands of the letter-carrier and delivered free at the two-cents-a-pound rate to the citizen in San Francisco who is a subscriber. In other words, the Government will carry a newspaper two thousand miles and put it in the hands of the letter-carrier, who will deliver it to the subscriber, at the rate of two cents a pound. But right in the city where it is published the Government charges one cent for every copy, or about sixteen cents per pound.

Now you can see it is not only illogical and unjust but it is absolutely absurd; and how a bill with such provisions as that ever received the sanction of the two Houses of Congress is beyond my comprehension. And here, when the committee of which I have the honor to be a member has presented a bill which remedies this injustice and absurdity, that is amended again by the Senate and comes to us with the same old absurdity on its face. It does not need any argument to show the absurdity of the thing. It must be evident to every man who gives his mind to it for a moment.

Another provision of the amendment is to admit all classes of mail matter to the privileged rate of two cents a pound alike. As you are aware, publications issued less often than once a month are not admitted to this privileged rate of two cents a pound, but have to pay a rate of postage 50 per cent. higher. Now keep in view what was the original intention of the postal department: it was to disseminate useful information and to promote communication between the citizens from one end of their great domain to the other.

You must see there is an invidious distinction made in the bill against the very best class of periodical literature which has ever been offered to the American public. We have the daily newspapers, with their load of gossip and scandal and every-day topics that are floating through the press, carried at two cents a pound. But you have the higher class of periodical literature, which is an educator of the best kind, excluded from the privilege granted to the newspapers. The Missionary Herald, the oldest monthly in the United States, and a religious paper of the very first class, with a circulation of 100,000 copies, is excluded from the privilege which is enjoyed by the New York Clipper, the Day's Doings, and the Police Gazette. The agricultural journals, the school-teachers' journals, the Sunday-school journals, the journals devoted to bee culture, to fish culture, and all those others which tend to promote so much the education of the country, are excluded from the privileged rate at which this lower class of literature is admitted to the mails. I might instance also the reviews, the North American and the standard monthly magazines. They, too, are excluded from this rate of two cents a pound. Littell's Living Age, which is a periodical of the very highest merit, and is published fortnightly, is admitted to the rate of two cents a pound because it is published more frequently than once a month. But those other journals of the same class and character are denied the privileged rate.

I ask, gentlemen, is there any consistency in that? Is there any justice in that? Have we a right to levy a tax upon the very best periodical literature that this country furnishes to its people while we carry almost for nothing the lower class? If that is the intention of the House, I say they totally misconceive the object for which the Post-Office Department was originally organized and for which it is to-day supported by the contributions of the American people.

I, for one, have never objected to an appropriation to enable the Post-Office Department to carry on its operations and extend them in every direction. I believe it is the business and the duty of Representatives here to afford to the people of this country to its remotest corners a full and free and speedy communication with their brethren everywhere else in the Republic, and I have always, as a member of this House, supported the bills that come from that Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to yield a few minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] and then I would like to reserve the balance of it for use when the amendments are read for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Now one word only as to the first portion of the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MONEY,] containing, as it does, an attack upon the Post-Office Department for alleged increase of mail service upon certain routes. I admit, and I have myself called the attention of the House frequently heretofore to what appears to me to be an abuse under the law of the increase of service.

For instance, take the routes down South and at the West; there is where the devilment generally is done.

Representatives in Congress, governors of the States and Territories, and members of the Legislatures petition for the increase, and I have never yet seen a case where an alleged objectionable increase has been made but what you can find members of Congress or governors of States or Territories petitioning for such increase. I sometimes have thought that an increase has been made where it ought not to be made, but I am not here to discuss that question. I want to say I doubt as a matter of taste the propriety of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] making an attack on the Department in this way at this time, for the reason that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has been constantly investigating under a general resolution of this House for nearly two years and has never made a report as to the same.

Few of the matters to which the gentleman refers, I apprehend, have been investigated unless it be by the subcommittee of which he is a member.

I think the fair way would have been to have entered upon the investigation, call for persons and papers, and the recommendations to the Department; and if the Second Assistant Postmaster-General has done wrong you ought to have given him a chance to be heard, and if he has done wrong take the responsibility of making a report to the House.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Not just now; I will presently.

That committee has made no report; it has given this officer no chance to be heard, and now in the waning hours of the session, and for the purpose of making political capital, the gentleman prances in here to spread upon the RECORD this speech of his; and I apprehend it is purely for the purpose of making political capital. There I will dismiss it.

Mr. MONEY. I have here the certified copy of the increase of the mail service.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Certainly; have you not also the recommendations for that increase by the democratic members of Congress?

Mr. MONEY. I have.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will you put them in the RECORD?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly I will; and I say that no single case of this recommendation that there be an increase of over 100 per cent. affects a single name on this petition.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I yielded to the gentleman for a question, not a speech.

The law fixes these things. The law says what the increase of pay shall be for increase of speed and trips. The gentleman has been derelict in his duty as a member of the committee; if the law is wrong in that, he has not proposed legislation to cure the evil. There I drop that subject, because it is a mere matter of political capital upon the other side.

I want to talk about this bill. Instead of half an hour being time enough to discuss it there should be six hours. It is an important measure. It touches the publishing interests of the country. It affects everybody, and I think the most of its provisions are unwise and, if enacted into a law, it would work very great harm, not only to the citizens, but to the publishers generally.

I wish gentlemen would send and get the bill, if they have not already got it.

The amendment commences on page 16 and runs to page 32, and is called the classification of mail matter amendment. I think it proposes to make a bureau in the Post-Office Department that ought not to be made, and I believe that but for the desire of some employé or employes of that Department for the additional bureau the classification bill would not have been heard of.

Now let us talk about it. Turn to section 32 of this bill, and you will find it there provides for the "nest-egg" of this bureau. What is it? Why, to detail somebody to assist the Attorney-General to construe this particular classification bill, and pay him a salary of $2,250 a year. Now what is he to rule upon? Turn to page 16, and it divides the mail matter into first, second, third, and fourth classes. There are a few good amendments in it, but it does not make the law any plainer in this matter than it now is under the existing law.

But what else does it do? It provides that every newspaper before it shall pass through the mail as second-class matter shall be registered, and it is to be submitted to the postmaster, and if necessary an appeal may be taken to the Postmaster-General. Every year there is a one-dollar fee to be paid, and if the registry is refused, then the paper does not go through the mails at pound rates. Right there you can see the work that is to be done under this unnecessary and cumbersome machinery.

What for? Why to build up another bureau in the Department.

I commend my remark in that respect to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] who is so anxious that this Department shall be properly conducted.

Mr. MONEY. The bill does not show any such thing.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am not yielding now. The bill shows for itself. I would ask now if any of your publishers in Minnesota, Illinois, Ohio, Alabama, and South Carolina have ever besieged you with letters—I mean your country publishers—to enact this registration system? I guess not. Mine never did me, and I have some thirty-five or forty newspapers published in my district.

Then who are the publishers who are in favor of this? I will tell you. There are two classes of second-rate mail matter; one class pays two cents a pound, consisting of publications appearing once a week or more frequently, and the other class consists of publications appearing less frequently than once a week, and pays three cents per pound. Now, it is the latter interest which seeks for this change, because its rate will be reduced to two cents a pound.

I apprehend the conventions that have been held upon this subject have been brought about to carry out these two ideas—on the one hand to provide for a new bureau in the Post-Office Department, and on the other hand to cut the postage down from three cents to two cents per pound on this class of second-rate mail matter. Some one may say, is not that right? I do not think it is; and I will tell you the reason why.

One-half of the mail matter carried in this country is second-rate matter, and it takes $18,000,000 a year to transport it and distribute it. It pays, in round numbers, about $1,000,000 postage. That is pretty near the franking privilege, is it not, for this matter?

Now if you reduce this second-rate mail matter from three cents a pound to two cents a pound you will impair the revenues $70,000 a year, as has been stated by the Postmaster-General. Some one may say, ought not that to be so? I think not, because that class of publications go to comparatively few people, not to the many.

Well, says somebody else, if it would be fair to do it, then let all be served alike. Both rates are low; let us equalize them. Now there is no reason because one rate is too low that the other rate should be brought down to it, especially when a magazine is sent from New York to San Francisco, or from Philadelphia to South Carolina, twelve numbers a year, and distributed for twelve cents annual postage. Now it is proposed to cut them down to eight cents annual postage. That reduction will not cheapen the magazine to the subscriber. That reduction of four cents a year on each copy of the magazine will amount to $70,000 a year, and all that will go into the coffers of the publishers.

Now, right there, this mutual-admiration society has been organized, and as the fruit of its organization there is to be on the one hand a reduction of the postage, and on the other hand a new bureau in the Post-Office Department. Now, I submit, if every newspaper in the United States is to be registered, is to be submitted to this bureau for examination, is to be passed upon, and there is to be correspondence about it, and it is to be ruled in or ruled out, one man will not be found enough to do the work, and in less than twelve months you will be called upon to provide eight, ten, twelve, yes, fifteen clerks to assist in that business. Now, the right place to put your foot on this proposition is before the egg is hatched—right here and now.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SOUTHARD.) There are twenty minutes of the half hour remaining.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] and the same length of time to the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] and I will reserve the balance of the time for myself.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will yield to me to have a letter read he can have all the balance of my time.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will do so.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move to have read the letter which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, February 27, 1879.

DEAR SIR: Allow me to call your attention to the mail classification bill which has now been vigorously urged upon Congress for two sessions by the Post-Office Department. It passed the committee of your House in December, but failed to receive action in the House. The Department then caused it in a somewhat different shape to be attached in the Senate to the appropriation bill (H. R. No. 6143) which I understand is now before the House; and I presume that details will be settled in conference committee.

The feature to which I wish specially to call your attention, as that which is of chief public interest, is the plan of registration by which the whole press of the country will be subjected to the supervision of the Department. No newspaper or periodical is to have the advantage of privileged rates of postage unless it is registered by the postmaster, and registration is liable at any moment to be revoked. Although certain definitions are laid down for the guidance of postmasters in the discharge of their delicate duty, it is easy to see how power of this kind is liable, if irresponsible, to be abused through motives of partisanship, enmity, or corruption; and when the scheme was first proposed in the fall of 1877 the Editorial Association, of Pennsylvania, at its annual meeting denounced it unanimously as the commencement of a censorship of the press.

Convinced that the Department would persist in its plans until they were pushed through Congress, the publishers finally assented to registration, provided an appeal were allowed to the United States courts against the decision of a postmaster refusing or revoking registration. Against its will the Department embodied this provision in the bill introduced in the House at the commencement of this session, (H. R. No. 5428, section 6, lines 19-29, and section 7, lines 5-7,) in which shape it passed the committee. These provisions, however, are stricken out of the Senate amendment to H. R. No. 6143. Mr. Bissell, the representative of the Department in this matter, told me that he would have this done in the Senate or in conference committee, and he has thus far succeeded.

I regard the matter as one of so much public importance that although the bill as a whole has various provisions of advantage to me in my business, I would prefer to see it fail rather than that the registration scheme should become a law without some check upon the irresponsible power which it confers on officials.

I may add, as an excuse for thus intervening in the matter, that I am chairman of a committee of the publishers of Philadelphia appointed to look after this bill, and that I am acting in accordance with their action.

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall vote to non-concur in this amendment, because I am opposed to section 13 and section 17 of it. Section 13 provides:

SEC. 13. That publishers of newspapers and periodicals who may desire to have their publications transmitted through the mails as matter of the second class shall submit the same to the postmaster at the place of publication, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, together with the fee required for registration, which is hereby declared to be $1 per annum, payable at time of registration, and on or before the 1st day of January, for the ensuing year. The publication thus submitted shall be examined, under such regulations as shall enable the postmaster to ascertain its true character; and, if found to be within the conditions named in section 17, a certificate of registration shall thereupon be issued to the publisher by the postmaster at the place where such publication is published, who shall place a duplicate of the same on file in his office, and shall renew the said certificate on its expiration, in the absence of reason to the contrary. A duplicate of such certificate shall also be filed in the Post-Office Department. A temporary permit shall be granted to a publication about to be issued, when a written statement shall be furnished to the postmaster, accompanied by an affidavit from the person intending to publish the same, that it will comply with the conditions named in section 17, and that he will submit the first issue of his publication for examination as in this section provided. Publications thus registered, or to which a temporary permit has been granted, except as provided in section 29, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at two cents a pound or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law: Provided, however, That no publication shall pass through the mails at the second-class rate unless a certificate of registration has been issued, or a temporary permit granted to it: Provided, also, That every publication admitted to the second-class rate shall have printed or legibly stamped upon each issue thereof the words "Registered" (or "Temporary permit granted," as the case may be) "for transmission in the mails," which words of registration or temporary permit shall be evidence to a postmaster at an office other than that of publication that the publication bearing them is entitled to transmission through the mail, at the second-class rate, when presented by a news agent, to be sent to regular subscribers or to other news agents.

Section 17 states the conditions upon which publications shall be admitted to registration, and is as follows:

SEC. 17. That the conditions upon which a publication shall be admitted to the privilege of registration are as follows:

First. It must regularly be issued at stated intervals, as frequently as four times a year, and bear a date of issue and be numbered consecutively.

Second. It must be issued from a known office of publication.

Third. It must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguished printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

Fourth. It must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and having a legitimate list of subscribers: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to admit to the second-class rate regular publications designed primarily for advertising purposes, or for free circulation, or for circulation at nominal rates.

These provisions, it is claimed, are substantially existing law. If they are, then there is no necessity to re-enact them; if they are not existing law, then they ought not to be re-enacted.

Mr. MONEY. I stated in my remarks to the House that this proposition was intended to simplify existing law and was for the benefit and protection of publishers.

Mr. SPRINGER. I stated that if this be the existing law we need no new legislation on the subject; and if it is not the existing law, I think no such provision should be enacted.

I am sorry to differ with the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads about a matter of this kind; but it seems to me highly objectionable to delegate a power of this kind to postmasters in every county-seat and small town throughout the land. If it were exercised with proper regard for the provisions of the law, it might work very well. But I know and this House knows the great temptation to which local postmasters might be subjected. In many instances the postmaster is the editor or publisher of a paper in the town in which he is postmaster; and frequently there is a rival paper of the opposite party. Under this proposed legislation that rival publisher must go to the postmaster and submit his paper for inspection—for the censorship of the postmaster, from whose decision there is no appeal. If the postmaster decides unfavorably, the paper cannot go through the mails. A decision against the publisher in many cases would amount to the ruin of his business, because when you stop the circulation of a paper through the mails the publication of it ceases to be remunerative.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. It would not be excluded from the mails; it would only pay a higher rate of postage as an advertising sheet.

Mr. SPRINGER. That would practically amount to exclusion, if other papers of the same character were circulated at lower rates.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I now yield for a minute to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, I have sought the floor for the purpose only of saying that I concur in the views expressed by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER.] If this amendment cannot be amended in the particular to which he has referred, I shall feel it my duty to vote against the entire proposition. This may in the future prove to be a very dangerous measure. It may be the inception of a censorship of the press of the United States. We had better meet the question at once and defeat the proposition, than hereafter regret our acquiescence in it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I reserve the remainder of my time, and ask that the amendment of the Senate be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That mailable matter shall be divided into four classes: first, written matter; second, periodical publications under registration; third, miscellaneous printed matter; fourth, merchandise.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the words "under registration."

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a question of order. The pending motion is to non-concur in the Senate amendments. I wish to know whether pending that motion it is in order for the gentleman from Illinois to move an amendment to the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have asked the Speaker repeatedly about this point, both publicly and privately; and he has stated to me that when the time for debate had expired, the amendment of the Senate would be open to amendment.

Mr. MONEY. We are proceeding now under a motion to non-concur. The gentleman from Illinois moves to amend a certain section of the Senate amendment. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The motion made on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations is to non-concur; but any member can rise in his place and move to concur simply, or to concur with an amendment. The House might desire to amend the Senate amendment, and it should not be deprived of the power to do so.

Mr. MONEY. My question is whether, pending a motion to non-concur, a motion to amend the Senate amendment is in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes a motion to concur with an amendment as having priority of a motion to non-concur. If the previous question were pending the vote would be upon concurrence or non-concurrence, and amendments would be cut off, as was the case upon the question with reference to the Brazilian steamship line.

Mr. MONEY. Is it in order to amend the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. It is until the previous question is sustained upon concurrence or non-concurrence. Non-concurrence in this case is the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations; but any individual member may move to concur; and under the rule that question is first taken, for the reason that it tends to bring the two Houses to an agreement.

Mr. MONEY. Will the amendment proposed be subject to debate?

The SPEAKER. That right was reserved, the Chair thinks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not so understand. I understood the debate was limited to an hour absolutely.

The SPEAKER. For the time remaining the amendment would be subject to debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. But that time belongs to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MONEY. My point is that if an amendment is now entertained the gentleman from Illinois who controls the remainder of the hour may consume the whole time in debating only one side of the question upon that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be very unreasonable.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the gentleman from Illinois has the disposition of his own time.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman from Mississippi had his half hour, and I am occupying another half hour. I stated twice to the Speaker and to the House that I would consume all but ten minutes of my time, and would reserve the remainder for use when the sections were read for amendment. No objection was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Certainly; and the bill is now being read for amendment. I do not propose to use my nine minutes now.

Mr. WADDELL. I rise to ask whether it would be in order to move to substitute for the amendment of the Senate the House bill in relation to the classification of mail matter and rates of postage?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman moves it as an amendment he can do so after the previous question is moved and seconded. The House may not want to accept the Senate amendments, and may wish to accept only a part of them or to modify them, and it ought not to be placed beyond the power of the House to do so.

Mr. WADDELL. I should like to state that the House bill, which I will propose if some one else does not, as a substitute for this Senate proposition, is a bill we have had for eighteen months under consideration. The difficulty was to reconcile the conflicting interest of the publishers and the Department—the interests of the Department and various classes of publishers. Finally they harmonized on this proposition reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads after eighteen months' consideration of it. That committee is satisfied it is the best presentation of the case yet made. I should like to have that moved as a substitute for the Senate amendment as a whole. If it is proper, as I have already stated, I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The part of the bill relating to the classification of mail matter is now open to amendment, commencing with page 16 of the printed bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That mailable matter shall be divided into four classes: first, written matter; second, periodical publications under registration; third, miscellaneous printed matter; fourth, merchandise.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move in line 4, section 9, to strike out the words "under registration;" so it will read: "second, periodical publications." If, however, gentlemen desire to vote on striking out the registration scheme in section 13, I will let my amendment stand for the present and come back to it afterward.

The SPEAKER. If that paragraph be stricken out, of course it needs no machinery to carry out the registration.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let us go on regularly with the sections.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60, noes 25.

Mr. MONEY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the amendment of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. Mailable matter of the first class shall embrace letters, postal cards, and all matters wholly or partly in writing, except as hereinafter provided.

No amendment was offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That on mailable matter of the first class, except postal cards and drop letters, postage shall be prepaid at the rate of three cents for each half ounce or fraction thereof; postal cards shall be transmitted through the mails at a postage charge of one cent each, including the cost of manufacture; and drop letters shall be mailed at the rate of two cents per half ounce or fraction thereof, including delivery at letter-carrier offices, and one cent for each half ounce or fraction thereof where free delivery by carrier is not established. The Postmaster-General may, however, provide, by regulation, for transmitting unpaid and duly certified letters of soldiers, sailors, and marines in the service of the United States to their destinations, to be paid on delivery.

No amendment was offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That mailable matter of the second class shall embrace all newspapers and other periodical publications which are issued at stated intervals, and as frequently as four times a year, and which have been duly registered as hereinafter provided.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I move to strike out all of section 12 after the word "year," in line 4; that is, to strike out the words "and which have been duly registered as hereinafter provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That publishers of newspapers and periodicals who may desire to have their publications transmitted through the mails as matter of the second class shall submit the same to the postmaster at the place of publication, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, together with the fee required for registration, which is hereby declared to be $1 per annum, payable at time of registration, and on or before the 1st day of January for the ensuing year. The publication thus submitted shall be examined under such regulations as shall enable the postmaster to ascertain its true character; and, if found to be within the conditions named in section 17, a certificate of registration shall thereupon be issued to the publisher by the postmaster at the place where such publication is published, who shall place a duplicate of the same on file in his office, and shall renew the said certificate on its expiration, in the absence of reason to the contrary. A duplicate of such certificate shall also be filed in the Post-Office Department. A temporary permit shall be granted to a publication about to be issued, when a written statement shall be furnished to the postmaster, accompanied by an affidavit from the person intending to publish the same that he will comply with the conditions named in section 17, and that he will submit the first issue of his publication for examination as in this section provided. Publications thus registered, or to which a temporary permit has been granted, except as provided in section 29, when sent by the publisher thereof, and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission through the mails at two cents a pound or fraction thereof, such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law: Provided, however, That no publication shall pass through the mails at the second-class rate unless a certificate of registration has been issued, or a temporary permit granted to it: Provided, also, That every publication admitted to the second-class rate shall have printed or legibly stamped upon each issue thereof the words "Registered" (or "Temporary permit granted," as the case may be) "for transmission in the mails," which words of registration or temporary permit shall be evidence to a postmaster at an office other than that of publication that the publication bearing them is entitled to transmission through the mail at the second-class rate when presented by a news agent, to be sent to regular subscribers or to other news agents.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, in pursuance of former action, that all machinery for registration be stricken out of the remaining sections of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state them, as the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. After the word "shall," in line 3 of section 13, page 17, strike out down to the word "publications," in line 25, page 18, as follows:

Submit the same to the postmaster at the place of publication, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, together with the fee required for registration, which is hereby declared to be $1 per annum, payable at time of registration, and on or before the first day of January, for the ensuing year. The publication thus submitted shall be examined, under such regulations as shall enable the postmaster to ascertain its true character; and, if found to be within the conditions named in section 17, a certificate of registration shall thereupon be issued, to the publisher by the postmaster at the place where such publication is published, who shall place a duplicate of the same on file in his office, and shall renew the said certificate on its expiration, in the absence of reason to the contrary. A duplicate of such certificate shall also be filed in the Post-Office Department. A temporary permit shall be granted to a publication about to be issued, when a written statement shall be furnished to the postmaster, accompanied by an affidavit from the person intending to publish the same, that it will comply with the conditions named in section 17, and that he will submit the first issue of his publication for examination as in this section provided.

Then strike out all after the word "publications," in line 25, to the word "except," in line 26, as follows:

Publications thus registered, or to which a temporary permit has been granted.

And strike out all after the word "thereof," in line 31, to the end of the section, as follows:

Such postage to be prepaid, as now provided by law: Provided, however, That no publication shall pass through the mails at the second-class rate unless a certificate of registration has been issued or a temporary permit granted to it: Provided, also, That every publication admitted to the second-class rate shall have printed or legibly stamped upon each issue thereof the words "registered" (or "temporary permit granted," as the case may be) "for transmission in the mails," which words of registration or temporary permit shall be evidence to a postmaster at an office other than that of publication that the publication bearing them is entitled to transmission through the mail, at the second-class rate, when presented by a news agent, to be sent to regular subscribers or to other news agents.

The SPEAKER. In other words, as the paragraph in relation to registration has been stricken out, the gentleman now proposes to strike out all machinery provided in the bill for the carrying out of that registration.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes, sir; and I wish to add an additional amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can reserve that.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I now move, in line 31, section 13, page 18, after the word "thereof," to insert as follows:

When published as often as once a week, when published less frequently than once a week and as often as four times a year, three cents a pound or fraction thereof.

That leaves the law as it just now is.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Now I move to strike out all of section 14, which is still an additional part of this machinery.

Section 14 was as follows:

SEC. 14. That the certificate of registration granted as in the preceding section shall be revoked by the postmaster in case the publication shall have so changed its character as to make it no longer within the conditions named in section 17.

The motion to strike out the section was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I offer the following amendment to section 15:

In line 4 strike out the word "register" and add to the paragraph the following: And provided further, That the transmission of matter through the mails as second class shall be evidence to a postmaster at an office other than that of publication that the same is entitled to delivery at the second-class rate.

So that it will read:

SEC. 15. That matter of the second class shall be examined at the office of mailing, and if found to contain matter which is subject to a higher rate of postage, such matter shall be charged with postage at the rate to which the inclosed matter is subject: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prohibit the insertion in periodicals of advertisements attached permanently to the same: And provided further, That the transmission of matter through the mails as second class shall be evidence to a postmaster at an office other than that of publication that the same is entitled to delivery at the second-class rate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I offer the following amendment to section 15:

In line 1 strike out "shall" and insert "may;" so that it will read: That matter of the second class may be examined, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADDELL. I think these amendments are getting this matter into inextricable confusion. It would be better to make the whole amendment at once.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the House will agree to non-concur in the Senate amendments. That will be the simpler course.

Mr. HAYES. There are some amendments in which we should concur.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask gentlemen to agree to a couple more of formal amendments intended to strike out this machinery as to registration.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the sense of the House has been pretty well taken upon this matter. We are very much pressed for time, and I hope he will agree that a vote to non-concur be taken.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I think I can fix this in a moment. I ask that by unanimous consent sections 16, 18, and 19, which provide the machinery for registration, be stricken out.

The motion to strike out sections 16, 18, and 19 was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have one further amendment to offer. It is to section 29, line 1.

Mr. PAGE. I rise for the purpose of objecting to any more amendments being made by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. None have been adopted by unanimous consent. The amendments have been adopted by votes of the House.

RECUSANT WITNESS—GEORGE F. SEWARD.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House and said:

Mr. Speaker, as Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, in obedience to the order of the House, I have now at its bar George F. Seward.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Seward, you are presented at the bar of the House, upon the order of the House, under arrest on an alleged breach of the privileges of the House in refusing to answer certain questions propounded to you by a committee of the House, which questions that committee was authorized by the House to ask, and for standing mute when tendered an oath as a witness, and for failing to produce certain books as required by a subpoena duces tecum duly served on you. It is my duty now, by authority of the House, to ask whether you are ready to take the oath tendered to you by the chairman of the committee, to answer the questions propounded to you by the committee, and to produce the books as required by the subpoena duces tecum served on you.

Mr. GEORGE F. SEWARD (the witness) said: I have prepared, with the assistance of my counsel, a statement of the law affecting this question, which I beg leave respectfully to hand in to the House, with the request that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to read it, or does he desire to have it read?

Mr. SEWARD. I think it would be better for the Clerk to read it, as I am not used to speaking here.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read Mr. Seward's statement, as follows:

The answer of George F. Seward to the order of this honorable House requiring him to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, respectfully submits:

The alleged contempt of the House consists, as he understands, in his failing to comply with the requirements of a subpoena duces tecum, purporting to command him to produce certain books before the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department and to testify before that committee.

The respondent is now minister of the United States to China, having formerly held the office of consul-general at Shanghai.

On the 23d of January, 1878, he was charged, in a communication addressed to the honorable Speaker, by one John C. Myers, with the commission of various acts of the character of high crimes and misdemeanors during the time he occupied the office of consul-general at Shanghai. On the 5th of February, 1878, this honorable body referred that communication to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department for an investigation of the charges therein contained.

On that day the chairman of the committee addressed a letter to the President inclosing the communication of John C. Myers, together with other accusations against the respondent, and stating that the papers embodied charges affecting the official conduct of the respondent; that under the resolution of the House it was made the duty of the committee to institute an investigation into the truth of those charges; and that, before instituting such investigation, the committee desired that he be informed that an opportunity would be afforded him to appear before the committee in person or by counsel if he desired.

The record of the committee shows that it convened for the investigation of the charges preferred against the respondent on the 26th of February, 1878, when the parties appeared by their respective counsel, Mr. M. H. Carpenter appearing on behalf of John C. Myers and Messrs. R. T. Merrick and J. Hubley Ashton on behalf of the respondent; and it was then directed by the committee that the counsel of the prosecutor should formulate the charges contained in his communication to the Speaker, and any others he might have to make against the respondent. The record further shows that the prosecutor did so formulate his charges, numbering the allegations or specifications from one to thirteen, inclusive, and presented the same to the committee on the 27th of February, 1878.

The case was thereupon proceeded with before the committee, and during its entire progress, from that time to the present, it has been conducted according to the forms, methods, and procedure of criminal investigation, with the view and purpose of determining whether the respondent should be impeached for high crimes and misdemeanors. Before the evidence for the prosecution closed, the counsel of John C. Myers applied to the committee for a subpoena duces tecum, requiring the respondent to produce certain books described in an affidavit of the said Myers, presented to the committee as laying the foundation for the application, and in which it was alleged that the said books would show that the respondent had been guilty of various acts of crime and malversation in office while consul-general at Shanghai.

The committee thereupon issued a subpoena duces tecum, purporting to command the respondent to produce the books mentioned in the affidavit of John C. Myers, and to testify before the committee. The respondent, through his counsel before the honorable committee, respectfully insisted that inasmuch as the object of such subpoena was to compel him to be a witness against himself upon the charges under investigation by the committee, it was inoperative and void under the provisions of the fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and that he ought not to be compelled, and could not lawfully be compelled, to obey its mandate.

Since the subpoena was served upon him, the committee has heard arguments by the counsel of the respective parties upon the question whether articles of impeachment should be presented by this honorable House against the respondent, under the evidence before the committee, and the committee are now deliberating upon that question.

The respondent is advised by his counsel, and respectfully submits, that he is protected by one of the sacred guarantees of individual right and personal liberty contained in the fifth article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States from being compelled to comply with the supposed requirement of the subpoena which has been issued and served upon him in this case; and he respectfully claims the protection of that guarantee before this honorable body, for whom just authority he entertains the most sincere respect, and by whom his just rights as a citizen and officer of the United States will not be willfully or willingly infringed.

The fifth amendment of the Constitution of the United States declares that—

No person * * * shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.

This declaration embodies and expresses a fundamental maxim of the enlightened jurisprudence of England and America—Nemo tenetur se ipsum accusare; and incorporated as it is in the national bill of rights, was intended to bind and control all tribunals and all departments of the Government of the United States.

The maxim declares that investigations, whether by judicial tribunals or legislative bodies, into cases of alleged crime shall not be inquisitorial in their character, by compelling parties charged with offenses against law to give evidence against themselves.

The most enlightened jurists of modern times agree that it is a peculiar excellence of the common law of England and America that the accused in any criminal inquiry shall never be compelled to be a witness against himself.

Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations, has declared that a legislative body has no more right than a court to make its examination of parties or witnesses inquisitorial. (Constitutional Limitations, 3d ed., p. 313.)

The learned jurist cites as authority for this principle the judgment of the supreme court of Massachusetts in the celebrated case of Ex parte Emery, which involved the inquiry whether a like guarantee of the bill of rights of the State of Massachusetts applied to investigations before a legislative body, (107 Mass.) The argument by the attorney-general in that case proceeded upon the ground that the provision of the declaration of rights was designed simply to embody the common-law rule and not to affect the parliamentary law.

A legislative investigation, it was said, was not for the purpose of punishing any specific crime, but of purifying the public service. In such an investigation there is reason for dispensing with the rules applicable to the ordinary prosecutions for crimes. The constitutional provision had no reference to such a rare and extraordinary occasion. This is shown, it was said, by various considerations. All the other provisions of this article in the declaration of rights relate only to ordinary prosecutions. The marginal clause is simply "prosecutions regulated." No speech, debate, letter, or conversation of any of the framers of the Constitution is known which shows an intention to change the existing rule of parliamentary law. The rule requiring witnesses to testify before Parliament, even though it might criminate them, had existed in England side by side with the rule of the common law. It might well, it was argued by Attorney-General Allen, stand here side by side with the constitutional provision, which had reference only to prosecutions in the courts of law.

This argument was met and successfully answered by Mr. Justice

Wells, of the Supreme Court, declaring the unanimous judgment of that great tribunal, and the respondent would respectfully ask the attention of this honorable body to the following passages from the opinion of the court in that case. The court said:

"The question then comes, 'Do these provisions apply to investigations before a legislative body?' No one will contend, of course, that the Legislature is not limited in its power by the provisions of the constitution equally with all other departments of the government and the whole body of the Commonwealth, whether undertaken to be exercised in the ordinary form of laws enacted, or by those orders and requirements which are incidental to its functions and are adopted as means of their performance. There is nothing in the terms of the article in question to except legislative bodies from its operation. The nature and purpose of the provisions are equally applicable to investigations conducted by the Legislature itself, or by one of its branches, or by a committee of its own members, as when conducted before the courts or by commissioners or other tribunals established by law. Such tribunals can in no case disregard this rule of protection. The Legislature cannot by the most formal and solemn enactments of law authorize them to do it. If, then, the Legislature cannot by the formal enactment of all its branches subject a citizen to such compulsory disclosure, it is difficult to see on what ground of argument or inference from necessity, propriety, or the nature of constitutional republican government, an authority can be deduced for either branch of the Legislature to do so by its mere order.

"The protection of the subject is not secured by the constitution if it may be so invaded. The range of investigation which is open to inquiry by the Legislature is limited. It is the general court of the Commonwealth entitled to inquire into the condition and efficiency and mode of operation of all administrative departments of the government of the State, the proper execution of the laws, and all that concerns the public welfare. If other means of discovering offenses and convicting offenders are thought to be inefficient or unsatisfactory, investigations by direct authority of the Legislature, prompted by public complaints and intended primarily to furnish information upon which that body may act in remedying abuses in the administration of public affairs, may easily be perverted into an effective means of procuring material to aid in the institution and maintenance of criminal prosecutions. Committees of the Legislature or commissioners acting under its order to inquire into any supposed failure to enforce the laws, if freed from the restrictions of the Constitution in this particular, may be found useful and efficient as auxiliaries of the grand juries of the Commonwealth. In this way parties exposed to prosecutions would find their constitutional protection to have failed them. It is the capability of abuse and not the probability of it which is to be regarded in judging of the reasons which lie at the foundation and guide in the interpretation of such constitutional restrictions.

"It is argued by the attorney-general that the article in question is merely the adoption of a rule which prevailed at the common law; that, along with that rule, there always existed in the Parliament of England a practice to disregard it in investigations pertaining to the business of that body; and that the rule of legislative investigation remains unaffected by the constitutional article. But the rule of the common law did not control parliamentary inquiries, for the simple and obvious reason that the authority of Parliament was more potent than the common law, and might change, annul, or suspend its restrictions, as that body should determine. The example is not confined to investigations relating to the business of Parliament, but extends to all those in which it authorizes a disregard of the common-law rule, before whatever tribunal they are authorized to be conducted. It is because the constitution of Massachusetts is more potent and above, not only the common law, but the Legislature also, controlling all tribunals and all departments of the government alike, as well as all inhabitants of the Commonwealth, that this safeguard of individual rights cannot be suspended or invaded, either by general laws or the special order of the legislative body, or of any of its branches.

"It is to be observed that the provision relates to the privileges of the subject, and not to the authority of any tribunal or body before which inquiry may be made. It places a limit upon all inquiry to which he may be subjected, not by defining the extent of the authority by which it is made, but by surrounding him with a privilege of exemption, which cannot be set aside by any authority without his own consent. It excludes the Legislature as well as the courts. It follows, also, that in its exercise it is regulated by the same rules in legislative investigations as in judicial or other inquiries."

What is the rule of interpretation that should be applied to the solemn guarantees contained in the amendments of the Constitution?

Shall it be narrow, limited, and technical, disappointing the just expectation and belief of the citizen, and leaving him to become the victim of arbitrary power, and justifying itself by sophistries; or shall it be large and broad and liberal according to the common understanding of men, reaching to substance, and illustrating the glory of personal liberty by a generous application of the great principles upon which our system of constitutional freedom reposes?

These questions have been frequently considered and adjudged by courts of the highest authority.

In the case of The People against Hackley, (24 New York Reports, p. 82,) Justice Denio, in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

Constitutional provisions devised against governmental oppression, and especially against such as may be exercised under pretense of judicial power, ought to be construed with the utmost liberality, and to be extended so as to accomplish the full object which the author apparently had in view, so far as it can be done consistently with any fair interpretation of the language employed.

Referring to the fourth, fifth, and sixth articles of amendment to the Constitution, the Supreme Court, in Milligan's case, (4 Wall., p. 120,) uses the following language:

These securities for personal liberty thus embodied were such as wisdom and experience had demonstrated to be necessary for the protection of those accused of crime. And so strong was the sense of the country of their importance, and so jealous were the people that these rights, highly prized, might be denied them by implication, that when the original Constitution was proposed for adoption it encountered severe opposition; and but for the belief that it would be so amended as to embrace them, it would never have been ratified.

And in the case of Cummings against The State of Missouri (same volume) the court, dealing with this same class of constitutional guarantees, says:

The court deals with substance, not shadows. The inhibitions of the Constitution are leveled at the thing, not the name.

The rule of interpretation thus declared, the respondent is advised and submits, must be applied in the consideration of every question arising upon the construction of the declaration of the Constitution, upon which he relies before the House in the present case.

That the present is a criminal case within the just meaning of the constitutional amendment, the respondent submits is manifest from the character and object of the proceedings before the House and the committee to which he has referred.

Those proceedings were instituted and have been conducted in the exercise and execution of the power of impeachment, vested by the Constitution in the House of Representatives, and for the purpose of ascertaining and determining whether the respondent has been guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors justifying his impeachment by this honorable body.

He respectfully submits that the rule laid down by the honorable gentlemen who concurred in the report of the minority of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department states the true and just construction to be given to the constitutional guarantee under consideration, and it is this, "that when distinct charges of the commissions of officers constituting high crimes and misdemeanors are preferred against a public officer, and such charges are before a committee for investigation with reference to the exercise of the power of impeachment conferred by the Constitution upon the House, and proceedings are conducted for the purpose of ascertaining his probable guilt or innocence of the offenses imputed to him; according to the forms of law there is presented a 'criminal case,' which is subject to the prohibition in the fifth amendment of the Constitution that 'no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself.'"

The respondent respectfully submits, in regard to the nature and character of the books in question, that the following portions of the report of the minority of the honorable committee correctly represent the evidence before the committee, and accurately state the law applicable to the evidence upon that subject:

The undersigned desire also to express their views in regard to the character of the books mentioned in the subpoena, under the evidence which has been presented to the committee.

This question is to be considered in connection with the provisions of statutes and executive regulations which prescribe the number and kind of books which a consul is required to keep for the purpose of showing the monetary transactions at his consulate.

The statutory provisions on this subject are found in the eighteenth and twenty-seventh sections of the act of August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States." (11 Statutes at Large, 52.)

The executive regulations are contained in article 25 of Consular Regulations of 1874, entitled "Record Books and Archives." (Regulations, page 100.)

"ARTICLE XXV.

"RECORD BOOKS AND ARCHIVES.

"398. The following record books are to be kept at all inland consulates of the United States:

"399. A dispatch-book, into which are to be copied all official communications written by the consular officer to the Department of State. Press copy-books are not to be considered as permanent records.

"400. A letter-book, into which are to be copied all other official communications written by the consular officer.

"401. A fee-book, in which the consular officer shall register all fees received by him in the order in which they shall be received, specifying in such register or fee-book each item of service, the amount received therefor, from whom and the date when received, and indicating what items and amounts are embraced in each receipt given by him therefor, and numbering the same according to the number of the receipts, respectively, so that the receipts and register shall correspond with each other. The consular officer will specify the name of the person for whom and the date when he shall verify any passport, certify any invoice, or perform any other official service, in the entry of the receipt of the fees therefor in such register; and also number each consular act so receipted for with the number of such receipt as shown by such register. The fee-book is to be ruled and kept in accordance with form No. 101 or 102.

"402. A passport-book, in which are to be registered all passports issued or visaed by the consular officer. (No. 132.)

"403. An invoice-book, to be ruled and kept in accordance with form No. 133, and with the instructions prescribed in the article on verification of invoices.

"404. A miscellaneous record book, for the entry of those official papers and records which cannot conveniently be classified and entered in the record-books above named.

"405. A register of official letters received at the consulate, which shall embrace the following information: name of the writer, number and date of letter, when received, its import, and remarks thereon, as prescribed in form No. 118.

"406. A register of official letters sent from the consulate, stating the date and import of the letter, and the name of the person to whom sent, as prescribed in form No. 119.

"407. A register of landing or debenture certificates, stating the name of the consignee, the date of the certificate, the merchandise, the name of the vessel, the port of shipment, and the date of shipment, (form 134.) A similar form will answer for tobacco or snuff.

"408. In reports the following additional books will be used: A record-book of commercial returns, to be kept in accordance with form No. 120, in which must be stated, in respect of vessels, the number, date of arrival, class, name, and tonnage of all American vessels, where belonging, whence from, whither bound, when and where built, master and owner's names; and in respect of cargoes, both inward and outward, under distinct heads, as nearly as possible, the description, quantity, and value of the same, and where produced or manufactured.

"409. A seamen's register, in which shall be recorded a detailed list of all seamen shipped, discharged, or deceased at the consulate or commercial agency, and the payments made on account of each, according to form No. 124.

"410. A relief-book, showing the number and names of all seamen relieved, from what vessel discharged, date and cause of discharge, and date of leaving the consulate; embracing also the several amounts disbursed on their account, as particularly described in form No. 94.

"411. A quarterly account-current book, in which shall be recorded the account-current furnished quarterly to the Fifth Auditor, as per form No. 100.

"412. A protest-book, for the entry of notes of marine protests, in accordance with form No. 37.

"413. A book for the entry of extended protests. (See form No. 38.)

"414. A daily journal is to be kept, as prescribed in form No. 135.

The evidence seems to indicate that Mr. Seward kept all the books above mentioned with the exception (for a period of time) of the book entitled "ship's daily journal," and further that the books so required to be kept and so kept by him are in the possession of the Government and a part of the archives of the consulate at Shanghai. (See the testimony of Mr. Lewis, page 577 printed evidence.)

As to the book called ship's daily journal and the statement that this book was not kept at Shanghai, attention is called to that part of Mr. Lewis's evidence which shows that all the entries of money transactions affecting the Government which ought to be entered upon that book appear upon other books, and to the fact that Mr. Seward informed the Government in 1864 that he could not comply with certain requirements of the regulations, for the reason that he had not sufficient clerical force, and tendered his resignation because of the want of means to obtain it.

Besides the books thus authorized and required by law to be kept by Mr. Seward, it seems that he kept certain other books in which entries were made in reference to official business, and also in reference to his private and personal affairs. These books are not within the designation of "public books," but are to be denominated private books, as distinguished from public books, which constituted no part of the archives of the consulate under the statutes and regulations to which reference has been made.

It cannot justly be said that the United States have a proprietary interest in the writings and entries contained in those books, while so far as the entries relating to official matters are concerned, they were of assistance to Mr. Seward and his clerks in preparing the public accounts and returns; they were apparently devoted also to the credits given by the office to persons having business with it.

The Government thus received a certain benefit from the employment of the books in question; and whatever may be the state of the title to the books, considered as stationery, it would seem under the authorities that the contents of the books stand upon no different footing from the contents of any other books, papers, or documents in the possession of Mr. Seward.

The law as to what are public books which an officer is required to turn over to his successor is declared in the decision of the supreme court of New York in 11 Wendell, 545, and the decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania in 14 Sergeant & Rawle, 440. In the former case it was held that the docket of a justice of the peace was not a public book but was a private book, because no law required it to be kept, while in the latter case the court held such a docket to be a public book, and should remain in the office upon the express ground that justices of the peace were ordered by act of Assembly to keep a docket.

Whatever might be the value or effect of the contents of the books of account in question as evidence against Mr. Seward, it does not appear to the minority of the committee that there is anything in the legal character of the books themselves which would warrant the exercise of any power in respect to them not applicable to other private writings of Mr. Seward which were in the consulate at Shanghai while he was consul-general.

It is impossible to perceive upon what grounds of justice or right Mr. Seward can be affected with a responsibility beyond that attaching to him under the laws, regulations, and instructions to which he was at the time subject, by reason of having kept a set of books not provided for or even authorized by the Government. If new laws, regulations, or instructions are deemed necessary it would be appropriate for the competent department of the Government to make and issue them. The Government has heretofore proceeded upon the theory that consular officers should be required to keep books of certain kinds specified in the regulations and intended to exhibit the condition of accounts as between the consuls and the Government. It has nowhere prescribed that books necessary to keep the current credits given by consular officers to individuals, or by them to him, should be kept as public books, or that returns of such credits should be made.

The statement in the report of the majority that the accounts for the interpreters', marshals', and clerks' salaries and for the expenses of the consular court appear only in the books in question does not appear to be sustained by the evidence.

All accounts rendered by Mr. Seward are now filed in the Treasury and State Departments, and are open for the investigation of the committee. The greater part of them, indeed, have been furnished to the committee, and are in the evidence. There was no instruction or regulation requiring the accounts named to be entered upon any book of record at the consulate. Nor does it appear to be a matter of special concern to the Government in what form the data from which these accounts were made up were kept by the consul. No instructions apparently were issued to him in the matter. The reports of the auditing officers are directed to individual officers, and Mr. Seward's accounts with those connected with the office may be supposed to have related in whole or in part to particulars and details which were of concern to them and to him only.

The statement again that the books in question were kept by clerks appointed by the Government is not unqualifiedly sustained by the evidence. No clerk in Mr. Seward's office was paid by the Government until 1866, when one of those employed and paid by Mr. Seward was commissioned and in part paid by the Government, ($1,000 out of a total salary of $2,300.) In 1867 another clerk employed by Mr. Seward was commissioned and in part paid by the Government, the rate of pay given by the Government and by Mr. Seward being the same as in the first instance.

In view of the facts thus presented, and the law applicable thereto, the respondent respectfully submits that he is not in contempt of the House. He therefore asks that he be discharged from his present arrest.

GEORGE F. SEWARD,
R. T. MERRICK,
J. HUBLEY ASHTON,
Of Counsel for George F. Seward.

WASHINGTON, February 28, 1879.

Mr. SPRINGER. In order that the question raised by the witness to the House may be fully understood, I desire to have read that portion of the report of the majority of the committee which states the questions that were put to Mr. Seward and which he refused to answer.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the 20th day of February, 1879, Mr. Seward appeared in the committee-room in person and by his counsel, and thereupon the chairman of the committee submitted to him (Mr. Seward) the following questions: "Are you ready to produce the books mentioned in the subpoena duces tecum served upon you on the 19th instant, and submit them to the examination of the committee?"

Mr. Seward said that he would answer by his counsel. Thereupon the following question was propounded to him: "Will you at the next meeting of the committee—on to-morrow—or within a reasonable time produce the books and submit them to the inspection of the committee?" To which question he made the same response as to the other.

The committee, having heard argument of counsel as to the authority of the House of Representatives to compel the production of books described in the subpoena duces tecum, and having carefully considered the facts applicable thereto, adopted the following resolutions:

"First. That the blotters, cash-books, journals, and ledgers described and called for by subpoena duces tecum served on George F. Seward by order of this committee are books belonging to the United States, and contain official records of the consulate-general at Shanghai and of the United States; and said books also contain records of consular fees received by George F. Seward, which he claimed to be unofficial fees, and to belong to him individually, and to that extent he has claimed the books to be private. Also, that said books were used as general-account books for all the money transactions of the office, whether they were on Mr. Seward's private account or on the Government account.

"Second. That said blotters, cash-books, journals, and ledgers are the books of original entry of all fees and other moneys received and paid at the consulate-general at Shanghai from 1863 to 1871, inclusive, during which time George F. Seward was consul-general at Shanghai, and that no certain and complete examination of the receipts and payments at said consulate-general during said Seward's occupancy of said office can be made without the possession of said books.

"Third. That George F. Seward, after his appointment as United States minister plenipotentiary to China, took said blotters, cash-books, journals, and ledgers from the said consulate-general and carried them to Peking, the place of his residence as minister to China, and the said George F. Seward now has the possession and control of said blotters, cash-books, journals, and ledgers.

"Fourth. That the committee have applied to the State Department for said books, and have been informed by said Department that the books are not in the State Department.

"Fifth. That the said George F. Seward illegally and without right retains and deprives this committee of the use of said blotters, cash-books, journals, and ledgers. That the demurrer and answer of said George F. Seward, made through his counsel, be overruled; and that said George F. Seward be directed and commanded to forthwith produce the said blotters, cash-books, journals, and ledgers in obedience to the said subpœna duces tecum.

"Sixth. That should the aforesaid George F. Seward fail to produce the books referred to in the subpœna duces tecum, the chairman of the committee shall tender to the said George F. Seward the following qualified oath, to wit:

"You do swear that you will true answer make to such questions as may be put to you touching the possession, custody, and whereabouts of the books called for by the subpœna duces tecum served upon you."

"And that the said chairman shall also tender to the said George F. Seward the usual general oath tendered to witnesses before investigating committees of Congress."

The foregoing resolutions were read in Mr. Seward's hearing and in the presence of his counsel, and he was requested by the chairman to comply with the order requiring him to produce the books mentioned in the subpœna duces tecum.

To this request he made no response, but did not produce the books as required. The chairman thereupon, in pursuance of the last resolution above set forth, tendered to Mr. Seward the following qualified oath, to wit:

"You do swear that you will true answer make to such questions as may be put to you touching the possession, custody, and whereabouts of the books called for by the subpœna duces tecum served upon you."

The foregoing oath having been tendered by the chairman to Mr. Seward, he made no response, but stood mute.

The chairman thereupon tendered Mr. Seward the following general oath, to wit: "You do solemnly swear that the evidence you will give touching the matters of inquiry committed to this committee, and the answers you will give to the questions propounded to you by or on behalf of this committee touching such matters, shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God."

This oath having been tendered by the chairman to Mr. Seward, he made no response, but stood mute.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Seward, do you desire it to be understood that you decline to produce the books as required by the subpœna duces tecum which the committee have required you to produce? And do you decline to take the qualified or the general oath tendered to you by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. SEWARD. I stand here, Mr. Speaker, for my rights as a citizen and an officer. So long as persons who are my personal enemies are pursuing me before that committee, I shall hold all books and papers which I now hold. I say this with perfect respect and perfect deference for the House. But I shall stand for all the rights which I am guaranteed by the Constitution.

But I want to say this to this House that when the committee say that they are done with my persecutors they can have my books, and whenever the Administration, either the Treasury Department or the State Department, demands my books they shall have them, but not at the instance of my enemies.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George F. Seward having been heard by the House, pursuant to the order heretofore made requiring him to show cause why he should not respond to the subpœna duces tecum by obeying the same so far as the same requires the production of the books described in the subpœna duces tecum, be, and is therefore, considered in contempt of the House because of his failure to produce said books.

Mr. BUNDY. I desire to offer a substitute for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will hear it read for information.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

Resolved, That the answer of George F. Seward in response to the order voted by the House and issued by the Speaker, requiring him to show cause why he should not be declared in contempt, and all evidence and papers pertaining thereto, together with the reports of the committee, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report as early as practicable what action in their judgment should be taken by the House in relation thereto.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not authorized to yield for the introduction of this substitute. I would do so, however, if it were necessary to raise any question which involves the rights of this citizen. I desire to state in answer to the remarks which Mr. Seward has made in regard to his having been pursued by enemies before the committee—

Mr. HANNA. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. When Mr. Seward is brought to the bar of the House to show cause and he does show cause, I inquire whether or not it is then competent for a member to rise and attempt to answer him; whether it is competent for any member to proceed with an argument to answer the questions of law and fact embodied in his reasons presented to the House why he should not be punished? According to every rule of law known to the courts, it would be incompetent for such a thing to be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hardly thinks that a parliamentary inquiry. It is a question of propriety to be considered by the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is a refinement in regard to evidence which I never heard before, that the witness may make an answer to the House and that no member of the House or the House itself can say whether that answer is sufficient or not.

Mr. TIPTON. Is the question open to debate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has control of the floor, and the House has control of the subject.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to say in reply to a remark which fell from the witness, that the only witnesses before the committee were persons now in the Government service, and who were appointed by the late President Grant or by the present occupant of the presidential chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. I ask that the gentleman be required to confine himself to the subject-matter of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to draw the line as to what debate would be proper upon this question.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the House will let the matter go to the Committee on the Judiciary. The liberty of a citizen is at stake.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] will contain himself for a moment. There is no heathen Chinese in this case, although this person is from China.

Mr. HUMPHREY. There may be a negro on the fence.

Mr. SPRINGER. The chief witnesses in the case were men who were appointed either by the last or the present President. [Loud cries of "Order!" and "Vote!"]

Mr. BUNDY. I hope the House will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Oregon. The question before the House is whether the party arraigned at the bar has made sufficient answer or not, and to that the gentleman from Illinois should address himself and to no other.

The SPEAKER. The House is proceeding under the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will not detain the House but for a moment. I should not have felt it my duty to have said anything had not Mr. Seward stated that he was pursued by enemies, as if the committee had been used for the purpose of allowing his enemies to pursue him. Mr. Myers, the principal witness against him, was appointed by President Grant and confirmed by the Senate. He was a distinguished citizen of Pennsylvania, a constituent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania before me, [Mr. CLYMER,] who certifies that he is a man of good reputation.

The other witness was Mr. G. Wiley Wells, appointed consul-general by the present occupant of the presidential office. He went there and investigated this consulate. These are the two witnesses who Mr. Seward says are his enemies and are pursuing him. They are officials who went there in the service of the Government for the purpose of discharging public duties. Mr. Seward has been offered every opportunity before the committee for a fair hearing upon every question presented.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONGER. My point of order is that no member of this House sitting in judgment on this question, as a judge and not as a prosecutor, can attack the statement of Mr. Seward here as a witness against him; but he must do it by testimony outside of the knowledge of that member, and by proper testimony presented to this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it was quite natural for the witness to say what he did. And the Chair sees no impropriety in the chairman of a committee which has been attacked as to its course in this case making a statement before the House in refutation of the reflections upon his committee.

Mr. SEWARD, (the witness.) I desire to say that I have had no intention of attacking the chairman of the committee. I had not the slightest intention of doing so.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Seward stated that he was persecuted by his enemies. A member of the House rises here and testifies to this House that these enemies are respectable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois—

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Seward has expressly stated to the House that he has been treated with the utmost fairness by the committee— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I shall not delay the House.

Mr. McMAHON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question if he will allow me.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McMAHON. I would inquire of the gentleman if the witness made answer under oath that these are private or public books?

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to explain that matter. The answer is just this: the witness was not required to be sworn at all before the committee in the first instance; he was only asked to produce these books, and a subpœna was directed to him. I declined to ask that he be sworn; but as chairman of the committee I put the question to him whether he would produce the books. To that question he made no response except that he would answer by his counsel.

I then asked him the other question whether he would produce the books at some convenient time, at a meeting of the committee to be held thereafter. To that question he made no other response than an answer by his counsel.

Then, by order of the committee, I asked him to take a qualified oath as to where the books could be found. He declined to be sworn and sat mute. Another general oath was tendered to him, not because the committee wanted to ask him any question, but to save a point which was raised by a member of the committee, that unless he was sworn he could not be regarded as a witness. He refused to take both oaths, and the only object of this proceeding is to secure the books; that is all.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, before pressing Mr. Seward, the defendant, to testify and furnish evidence, he admonished him that the Constitution of the United States prohibited any citizen from being used as a witness against himself in a criminal case?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state that Mr. Seward was represented by distinguished counsel before that committee, and he did not need to be advised by the chairman or any member of it as to his rights. I will state that when the question was put to him I distinctly stated to him that he could confer with his counsel before making answer.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Do you know that he has any other books except those that he has surrendered?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do, by overwhelming evidence. And it is not disputed in this answer that he has made here to-day that he has a set of books, running from 1863 to 1872, in his possession, and which he has declined to produce. He has admitted in his statement that he had them, and would at some other time produce them—when his enemies ceased to pursue him. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Furthermore, I desire to answer the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] by stating that it has never been said by Mr. Seward that these books, if produced, would criminate him.

Mr. LATHROP. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, [Mr. SPRINGER,] whether the committee put to Mr. Seward any question which required him to give testimony concerning the merits of the matter of this investigation, or concerning the merits of the charges against him?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer the gentleman. No question of that kind was put to him; nor was it the intention of the committee to do anything except to secure the production of these books, which belong to the Government and contain the only original entries of the Government business at that consulate.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Speaker, I had not expected to say a word in regard to this matter. But unexpectedly I have been referred to by the chairman of the committee as to the character of the principal witness in this case.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I object to any member on this floor rising to vindicate the character of any witness.

Mr. CLYMER. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CONGER. I make my point of order against this proceeding.

Mr. CLYMER. When a constituent and a friend of mine is charged with being an enemy and a pursuer of a high public functionary, I claim it as my just privilege to bear my testimony in regard to his general character; and I know that the fair men of the House will listen to me.

Mr. CONGER. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. I shall say nothing which will offend the ear of the most earnest advocate of Mr. Seward.

Mr. CONGER. Before the gentleman proceeds, I desire the Chair to rule on the point of order I have made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order—

Mr. BUNDY. I trust the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will not press the point of order, hoping that after the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been heard upon the question which it seemed to be understood by the gentleman from Illinois in yielding to him should be the subject of his remarks, the minority of the committee will be heard for at least five minutes, and only upon the question that may be discussed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONGER. My point of order is that none of the judges in this case should appear before this body to testify as to the character of witnesses.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary question. It is a question of propriety, to be decided by the gentleman addressing the House.

Mr. CONGER. It is a question of order which the Chair must decide; otherwise we might spend months here in testifying about the character of witnesses.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will say that as soon as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is through, I desire to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that he knows no rule which allows him to stipulate with a member what he shall say.

Mr. CONGER. But when the gentleman has gone so far as to show that he is going outside of the question to talk about the character of witnesses—

The SPEAKER. If the Chair interposed to prevent all debate which went outside of the questions before the House, debate would be very much more limited than it is.

Mr. CONGER. I think the Chair should keep the remarks of gentlemen within the limits of the subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will try to do so; but it is a very hard task.

Mr. CLYMER. I am sorry the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] declines to hear my statement with reference to this matter.

Mr. BUNDY. I again request the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw his point of order. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CLYMER. Now, Mr. Speaker, with reference to John C. Myers, the principal witness in this case. I have known him from boyhood. He has been my friend, my associate, although always my political opponent. A more just, a more upright, a more conscientious man I do not know; and if he has done anything here which may have offended any one I believe it was done under a misapprehension of the facts, although with a conscientious desire to do his duty to his country and to himself.

Mr. BUNDY. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY?]

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; I cannot yield further.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Then I rise to another point of order. I submit that no more extraordinary proceeding could take place than for a member to rise here and testify to the good character of a witness in this case. Every member of the House might undertake to testify on that question. I say it is an extraordinary proceeding, and I protest against it.

Mr. TURNER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; I cannot yield to any one. I demand the previous question; but before that is voted on, I will ask that the resolution, as modified, be read.

Mr. BUNDY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Illinois should be voted down, will it not be in order to move the proposition offered by myself to refer the legal and constitutional question here involved to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. The object of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNDY] can be reached, if the House so desires, by voting down the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. If my resolution is voted down, the House declares that the witness is not in contempt, and that ends the question.

Mr. CONGER. Why may not the resolution of the gentleman from New York be offered as a substitute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan must be quite aware of the reason. The gentleman from Illinois has demanded the previous question upon the resolution submitted by himself, and that cuts off any amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I had not understood the gentleman as demanding the previous question, or I should not have made the inquiry.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask a question for information. I have been informed that the defendant admits these are the public books of the Government. I wish to know whether I am correctly informed in that regard?

Mr. BAYNE. I should like to answer that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order unless he rises for the purpose of asking a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for order in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks that, too, and means to have it. Gentlemen will make up their mind that the public business shall not proceed further until order is restored.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize anybody until order prevails so the public business may proceed intelligently. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania rises to a parliamentary inquiry, and will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. If the minority is entitled to be heard at all, I desire to reply to the question put by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. It is not a parliamentary inquiry, and can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUNDY. I rose to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUNDY. In my humble way I failed to secure the attention of the House or Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs to correct the gentleman; the Chair recognized the gentleman to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BUNDY. But I did not finish it. I now wish to finish that parliamentary inquiry, and it is this: if the previous question is not seconded, then will the resolution submitted by myself be in order?

The SPEAKER. In answer to that question the Chair states that if the call for the previous question be not seconded it will throw this whole subject open for further debate and amendment.

Mr. BUNDY. Then the proposition to send the subject to the Committee on the Judiciary will be next in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course it will be.

Mr. BUNDY. Very well, I want that perfectly understood.

Mr. SPRINGER. I now ask for the reading of the resolution as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George F. Seward having been heard by the House, pursuant to the order heretofore made requiring him to show cause why he should not respond to the subpoena duces tecum by obeying the same so far as the same requires the production of the books described in the subpoena duces tecum, be, and is therefore, considered in contempt of the House because of his failure to produce said books.

Mr. BUNDY. I desire tellers on seconding the demand for the previous question. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BUNDY. Yes, I want tellers.

The SPEAKER. Not one-fifth of a quorum has voted for tellers and they are not ordered.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have a division on the question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 106.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand tellers.

Mr. CONGER. Tellers were refused.

Mr. SPRINGER. Tellers were refused on a cave voce vote, but not on a division.

The SPEAKER. Tellers were refused prior to the division, and there has been intervening business.

Mr. CONGER. The question was put and the Chair decided tellers were refused.

The SPEAKER. There must of necessity be some time when the House can of itself review the count of the House by the Speaker, and that right it has in ordering tellers. However, the gentleman from Illinois could reach his object in another way by moving to reconsider the vote by which tellers were refused.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. BUNDY were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 110.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result the Chair desires to state that in this case primarily there was a demand for tellers refused, but there are two modes by which the House has the right to review the count of the Chair—one is by tellers and the other is by the yeas and nays. To suppose the declaration of a vote by division under the count by the Chair is not susceptible of review would be to cut off one of the rights of the House. The House has refused to second the demand for the previous question, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BUNDY.]

Mr. BUNDY. Now I offer as a substitute the resolution I send to the desk, and upon that I call the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the answer of George F. Seward, in response to the order voted by the House and issued by the Speaker, requiring him to show cause why he should not be declared in contempt, and all evidence and papers pertaining thereto, together with the reports of the committee, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report as early as practicable what action, in their judgment, should be taken by the House in relation thereto.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays on the substitute. We may as well have a test vote on this amendment. If voted down, the question will immediately recur upon the resolution. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask that the amendment and the resolution for which it is a substitute be read.

The resolution and amendment were again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 108, not voting 70; as follows:

Mr. COLE. I am paired with Mr. JOHN B. CLARK, jr. If he were present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

Mr. BENEDICT. I am paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I am paired with Mr. ERRETT. If he were present, he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. RYAN. I am paired with Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, on the Post-Office appropriation bill; that was the extent of my pair to-day, and I vote "ay" upon this question.

Mr. HASKELL. I am paired with Mr. FRANKLIN. If present, he would vote "no" and I should "ay."

Mr. FRYE. My colleagues of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. KNOTT and Mr. LAPHAM, are paired, and are attending to the duties of their committee.

Mr. THOMPSON. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. HEWITT. If present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BUNDY. I move to reconsider the vote by which this amendment was adopted; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. EWING. I ask for a division on the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SPRINGER. Pending that motion I move that the House take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I would suggest eight o'clock.

Mr. BUNDY. I desire to withdraw my motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. It is now half past six o'clock; make the recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. BUNDY. Do not let the matter go over until to-morrow. I withdraw my motion to reconsider and lay on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Has the gentleman a right to withdraw it until the House has taken action upon it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have Rule 40 read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment, but not after the previous question is seconded; it may, however, be withdrawn while the House is dividing on a demand for the previous question, and all incidental questions fall with such withdrawal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman has a right to withdraw the motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to move that the House non-concur in the balance of the amendments on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BURCHARD. Let us finish the privileged question first.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that, pending further proceedings in the case, the respondent at the bar be discharged on his personal recognizance to attend when called for. I think there can be no objection to that.

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I desire to renew the motion to reconsider and lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman vote on the prevailing side?

Mr. FINLEY, of Ohio. I did not.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman has no right to make the motion to reconsider and lay on the table.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] moves that pending the further consideration of the case the respondent at the bar be discharged on his personal recognizance to attend when called for.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will agree to that if the gentleman will allow the resolutions to be so amended as to require the Judiciary Committee to report to-morrow, for there are but two legislative days remaining.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of privilege, and the Committee on the Judiciary can report it back at any time.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I want to instruct the committee to report at a particular time. I do not want the House to dodge the question, but to settle it squarely and fairly. [Loud cries of "Order!"] If the object in referring the resolution is to kill it, then I am opposed to the discharge of the respondent.

Mr. BUNDY. I desire to say that while I duly appreciate what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] says in this matter, I do not know that any instructions we can give the Committee on the Judiciary would be any more emphatic than those contained in the substitute which has been adopted by the House. That substitute provides that the Committee on the Judiciary shall report at the earliest practicable moment. Is it necessary to instruct them to report earlier than that?

The SPEAKER. The committee on such a subject as this would have the right to report at any time.

Mr. SPRINGER. If we leave the question to them as to the earliest practicable moment, we may not get the report to-morrow. I want to say to them that they shall report to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. When the gentleman charges that the House will dodge on this question he is simply making a charge that is impertinent.

Mr. BUNDY. I hope I will not be understood by the gentleman from Illinois as intimating any desire for delay. After hearing the eloquent speech of the accused to-day, in which he stated that he is ready to meet his accusers—[cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]—I only ask to be heard long enough to say that I second the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. And if the Committee on the Judiciary have given this matter any consideration, and are ready to do so, I hope they will report here and now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUNDY] objects to the committee reporting at any time.

Mr. BUNDY. I do not.

The SPEAKER. The question then is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to hear that read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that it was satisfactory to the gentleman that the committee should report at any time.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; I said that I would agree to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] provided the Committee on the Judiciary were instructed to report on this question to-morrow, as there are but two legislative days of this session after to-day. I will agree to his motion upon that condition and upon no other.

The resolution, as amended, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the answer of George F. Seward in response to the order voted by the House and issued by the Speaker, requiring him to show cause why he should not be declared in contempt, and all evidence and papers appertaining thereto, together with the reports of the committee, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report as early as practicable what action, in their judgment, should be taken by the House in relation thereto.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want that amended so as to instruct the committee to report to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as amended by the adoption of the substitute.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BUNDY moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I now move that, pending the consideration of this question by the Committee on the Judiciary, the respondent at the bar of the House be allowed to depart on his own recognizance, to return upon notice.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move that the remaining amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill be non-concurred in, and that a committee of conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The committee of conference should have the views of the House touching this bill; and as this is a safe time to non-concur, I am willing that should be done.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 852) granting a pension to Mary E. Pauley;

An act (S. No. 1763) for the relief of Albert U. Wyman, late Treasurer of the United States; and

An act (H. R. No. 4414) to amend the laws relating to internal revenue.

Mr. SAMPSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, also reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 138) for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy;

An act (H. R. No. 1162) for the relief of Alfred Muller, late acting assistant surgeon United States Army;

An act (H. R. No. 1301) for the relief of Henry E. Wilkinson, late first lieutenant of Company I, Ninety-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; and

An act (H. R. No. 4289) for the relief of Thomas W. Segar.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted, by unanimous consent, as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON, for this evening's session;

To Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, during the remainder of the session, on account of important business; and

To Mr. TURNER, for this evening's session.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Unanimous consent was given for the withdrawal of papers in the following cases:

To Mr. ALDRICH, in the case of Benjamin L. Britten; no adverse report;

To Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, in the case of Sarah B. Topping; no adverse report; and

To Mr. CHALMERS, in the case of Adeline Shirley; no adverse report.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. EVINS, of South Carolina, obtained unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as a portion of the debates of the House, remarks upon the contested-election case of Richardson vs. Rainey. [See Appendix.]

Mr. ELLSWORTH obtained leave to print remarks upon the alcoholic liquor traffic. [See Appendix.]

EXPENDITURES IN THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GLOVER asked unanimous consent to have printed and recommended to the committee, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider, the report and testimony taken by the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, relating to the Mint Bureau, Marine Hospital Service, Secret Service, Engraving and Printing Bureau, captured and abandoned property, customs frauds at Norfolk, Virginia, and unclaimed interest.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

NATIONAL ENLISTMENT LABOR ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HARMER asked and obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the following memorial of the National Enlistment Labor Association of Washington, District of Columbia:

To the honorable members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

GENTLEMEN: Your memorialists respectfully represent that they are members of an association known as the Enlistment Labor Association, organized for the purpose of securing such information as will enable them to work in the most effective manner for the success of such measure or measures as will relieve the present widespread distress among the workmen of our common country; and in order that the legitimate objects and causes which originally led to the establishment of the above-named organization may be more clearly defined and thoroughly understood, and to remove at the same time any doubts, apprehensions, or suspicions regarding the purity of the motives which have actuated the membership in the formation of the organization referred to, it is deemed best to state in the outset that it is entirely free from affiliation with any civil, political, or kindred association of whatsoever name, character, or creed, its main object now and in the future being purely and exclusively in the interests of philanthropy in its broadest and most comprehensive sense, and to this end will all its labors and efforts be especially directed.

In stating this much by way of introduction and explanation, the next thing in order is to show the urgent necessity existing for some immediate action either on the part of the General Government or through organized effort of individuals to provide the means whereby prompt and efficient relief may be secured to the large army of unemployed laborers throughout the country, whose idle hands cannot at present find honest and honorable means to provide food, shelter, and clothing for themselves and families.

The following brief epitome of reasons will, it is hoped, clearly and forcibly demonstrate the necessity for some comprehensive plan that will meet successfully the requirements of the situation. All will agree that the wheels of industry are almost at a stand-still; "that the sound of the grinding is low;" that the doors of the workshops are shut; that the cities are overcrowded with idle men, both white and black; that fathers are wandering far from home and loved ones in the wild and fruitless search for employment; that non-success on the one hand, and starvation of the family on the other, not infrequently lead to lunacy, crime, demoralization, and suicide—the legitimate fruit of enforced idleness.

In addition to this comes up the wall from the plague-stricken South—the suffering and horrors of which, during the past few months, can never be told. But why continue this enumeration of details further; they are apparent to every thinking man and woman, and are evidence conclusive that some plan must of necessity be devised that will be comprehensive enough to absorb this idle element. It is a mistaken idea and sheer folly to attempt to underrate the grave consequences that must inevitably ensue if some action looking in this direction is not soon taken.

Your memorialists, in the pursuit of their inquiries, have carefully examined the various plans heretofore submitted for your approval, and from a comparison of the same are led to the conclusion that the plan of colonization upon the enlistment plan, as embodied in the bill (H. R. No. 5839) introduced by Hon. A. C. HARTMAN, of Pennsylvania, on January 16, 1879, offers the most prompt and effectual remedy for the prevailing distress, and therefore most respectfully urge and request your honorable body to take prompt and favorable action upon the same, for the following reasons: The exposed condition of our frontiers is such, as shown by the reports of the governors of the Territories made to the honorable Secretary of the Interior during the past year, as to offer to the emigrant contemplating a removal with his family thereto, the hard alternative of jeopardizing the lives of himself and family by a residence in his lonely cabin upon the Government lands, liable at any time to attack from roving bands of savage Indians; or, by remaining in his present position vainly seeking employment, of seeing his dear ones perish by hunger or become objects of charity.

The objections to a life on the frontier will in a great measure be obviated by organized colonization on the above plan. The greatest objection urged against it is the expense. It is estimated that to put the plan proposed into active operation will require an expenditure of $38,000,000. This amount will cover the entire expense necessary, as the enterprise will virtually become self-supporting after the first year. The apparently large sum involved will appear insignificant when compared with the great savings that will accrue through the instrumentality of the enterprise, as will be observed by an examination of the following statement obtained from official sources:

Annual cost maintaining regular Army	$40,962,000
Annual cost maintaining Indians	6,914,000
Total yearly cost	47,876,000
Total for five years	239,380,000
Add claims for Indian depredations passed	2,000,000
Add claims for Indian depredations presented, but not yet adjudicated	8,000,000
Total	249,380,000
Deduct cost of enlistment plan	38,000,000
Balance to credit of plan	211,380,000
Add to this sum the amount in value of annual yield, estimating for the cultivation of one million acres, (which, by the way, is a very low one, if improved machinery is to be used,) producing an average in value of, say, $15 per acre, or $150 in value as the result of each man's labor	15,000,000
Add the probable enhancement in value of land cultivated (one million acres) at an average of $10 per acre	10,000,000
Also, the approximate value of stock on hand	3,000,000
And we have a total grand aggregate to credit of plan of	239,380,000

The enlistment feature of the plan operates:
First. To place the whole enterprise under the direct control of the General Government.

Second. To establish or demand peace and protection to settlers on the frontier, a boon hitherto unknown; and last, to be available for duty in a military capacity whenever their services might be required.

Fixing the number at fifty thousand at any one time instead of a less aggregate was for the purpose of making the enterprise of sufficient magnitude to absorb the major portion of the unemployed element throughout the country, as well as to form a permanent barrier against future Indian troubles.

By reference to the foregoing statement it will be observed that the enormous expense incurred annually of maintaining the Indians may be obviated through the agency of the plan proposed—in this wise: To surround the various tribes with civilization on their different reservations; or compel the entire race, which consists of only four hundred and ten thousand, to locate on the Indian Territory proper, (which was originally intended to be their exclusive place of abode, and which contains over thirteen millions of acres more than the State of New York, and would, therefore, after all the Indians were placed thereon, support a less population, by four millions, than the State referred to,) and thus compel them to be self-supporting after the first year. This element could, therefore, be speedily transformed into a productive instead of a destructive, troublesome, and expensive one.

The plan proposed is fully capable, in every single particular, of bringing about these happy results. If it should, therefore, be adopted by the Government all this large expense which would be saved thereby ought to be placed to its credit as a partial offset.

Already we have seen that the cost of maintaining the Army and Indians foots up for five years in the neighborhood of $250,000,000.

This enterprise could not possibly, at the most extravagant estimate, cost over $75,000,000, because after the first year, as previously stated, it would be virtually self-supporting.

Hence, taking into consideration the amount saved from the settlement of the Indian question; the rapid enhancement of the public lands; the annual yield of products, embracing in variety not only the cereals, but also live stock, lumber, wool, and minerals, &c., it will be observed that the plan is not only capable of self-support, but has a large margin to place to the profit or credit side of its account with the Government.

The foregoing ought to be argument sufficient that the plan is not only practicable, but opens up a new source of wealth in the country, besides being immensely profitable in various ways. Other reasons, however, than those already presented argue in favor of its adoption, and are as follows:

By acts of July, 1862 and 1864, Congress authorized the issue of guaranteed bonds to the several railroad companies amounting in the aggregate to..... $64,623,000

Amount of interest already paid since this issue

Total..... 100,835,000

These bonds have thirty years to run.

Congress has also granted to the several railroad companies, since 1862, an area of 285,000,000 acres of public lands, which, valued at $1.25 per acre, (the price at which the Government holds it,) amounts in value to $356,250,000.

Appropriations are also made, in addition to the above, for mail subsidies, steamboat companies, private war claims, transits of planets, grasshopper plagues, Mexican claims, public charities, overflows of rivers, and a great variety of similar objects, the aggregated cost of which makes the enlistment labor enterprise fade into comparative insignificance when compared therewith.

As to there being a sufficient quantity of arable land left of the public domain wherewith to operate a project on a scale of the magnitude described, it is necessary to refer, briefly, to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the year ending June 30, 1878, which says that during that period there were 8,041,011 acres of Government lands surveyed, while the total number of acres surveyed since the beginning of public surveys is given as 734,311,477. There yet remains unsurveyed in the States and Territories an area of 1,000,461,171 acres.

As to the constitutionality of the project, the Constitution of the United States plainly states that Congress shall legislate for the general welfare of the people.

It may be well to state in this connection that petitions, containing over two hundred thousand persons, were received by the last Congress asking for some plan to be provided whereby work could be given to the unemployed.

There need be no serious apprehensions concerning a probable overproduction of any single commodity. As for instance: foreign papers state that Europe can take two million cattle from the United States every year, the limit of cattle raising having been reached in many parts of Europe. In regard to other products Great Britain is now importing three million bushels of grain per week. France two millions in the same time. The exportation of American fruit has increased in value from $209,000 in 1872 to over $3,000,000 in 1877. Therefore, it is believed that the Government can easily afford to make this valuable experiment with credit to itself in many, very many directions. The spirit of magnanimity and benevolence shown in this sore hour of trial will not be lost, but, on the contrary, it will reappear again in many new and substantial forms. Men's thoughts will be turned in a new channel, and the paternal care exhibited on the part of the General Government will tend to endear, identify, and wed to its liberties and interests by the most lasting bonds every true lover of his country.

In view, therefore, of all this array of incontrovertible facts and figures, we are willing to rest the case with your honorable body, believing that you will not fail to endorse the adaptability, constitutionality, and practicability of the enterprise, and appreciate the wisdom and necessity of lending it all the aid and encouragement possible, to the end that peace and prosperity may speedily give place to the universal feeling of discontent and despondency, so unmistakably prevalent at this time.

In conclusion, your memorialists would respectfully state that they are in receipt of communications from persons of large experience and fully acquainted with the frontier and unsettled portions of the public domain, the value and resources of the same, among others from John C. Fremont, the great "Pathfinder," cordially approving the plan of organized colonization as embodied in said bill, and they are thereby encouraged to request your attention to the provisions thereof, confident that the measure only requires a candid, impartial examination in order to meet with approval and support, and feeling certain that at a time like the present, when foreign governments are assisting their unemployed laborers to emigrate to the unoccupied lands of our public domain, paying their passage across the seas and by rail to the West, our own Government will not refuse to lend a helping hand in like manner to those of its own citizens willing and anxious to obtain homes for themselves, and who in return for such aid are willing to serve as enlisted soldiers at any and all times when such service may be required.

The people who contribute by their taxes to assist their fellow-laborers to become self-supporting and tax-payers also will promptly sanction your action as their representatives in enacting the required legislation to afford the desired relief. And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

OFFICERS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

President—Samuel R. Stratton, of Pennsylvania.
Vice-President—Frank Bell, of Pennsylvania.
Recording Secretary—M. C. Rordell, of Arkansas.
Corresponding Secretary—Morris J. Foote, of Ohio.
Treasurer—L. H. Pike, of Illinois.
Attorney—J. W. Starr, of New Jersey.
Executive Committee—John R. Miner of Ohio; Dr. John Theo. Stratton, of Pennsylvania; John Love, of Arkansas; William Cowan, of Pennsylvania.

JOSEPH BAUMER.

Mr. HERBERT, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, Joseph Baumer for services as messenger; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

IMPROVEMENT OF YELLOWSTONE AND MISSOURI RIVERS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Montana, asking for an additional appropriation for the improvement of the Yellowstone and Missouri Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, instructing the Senators and requesting the Representatives from that State to vote against any proposition extending Government aid to the Union Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

NORTH AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to an estimate for an appropriation for the prosecution of researches in North American ethnology; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXPENDITURES FOR WESTERN SURVEYS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement in regard to the total amount expended in the prosecution of surveys west of the one hundredth meridian; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, on motion of Mr. CONGER, ordered to be printed.

PAY OF LETTER-CARRIERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before House a letter from the Postmaster-General, relative to an increase in the clerical force in the free-delivery division, made necessary by the passage of House bill No. 5271 increasing the pay of letter-carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE COINAGE OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Idaho, in favor of free coinage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

INDIAN AGENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, suggesting an amendment to section 2056 of the Revised Statutes, relating to Indian agents; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

JAMES GLEASON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Quartermaster-General on the claim of James Gleason, late of Company D, First New York Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

IMPROVEMENT OF WAGON-ROAD IN MONTANA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Montana, in favor of improvement of the Mullan wagon-road; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SURVEY OF LICKING RIVER, KENTUCKY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of Major William E. Merrill, Corps of Engineers, of a survey of Licking River, Kentucky; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the year 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, on motion of Mr. CONGER, ordered to be printed.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF HON. FRANK WELCH.

Mr. MAJORS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the necessary funeral expenses of Frank Welch, late a Representative from the State of Nebraska; such payment to be subject to the approval of the Committee of Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I now move that the House take a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. What will be the business at the evening session?

The SPEAKER. The evening session has been ordered for the consideration of pension bills and political disability bills, exclusively.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. REAGAN, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 34, noes 73.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. RICE, of Ohio, for a recess until eight o'clock.

Mr. LATHROP. I suggest to the gentleman to modify his motion so as to fix half past eight o'clock as the hour of meeting this evening.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I will do so.

The motion of Mr. RICE, of Ohio, as modified, was agreed to; and accordingly (at six o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past eight o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The order fixing the business for this evening will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. AMERUS V. RICE, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That there be a session of the House on Friday evening, commencing at seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., for the consideration of business in the following order:

First. The consideration of House pension bills on the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments thereto.

Second. Senate pension bills.

Third. Political disability bills.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Are we to understand that nothing else is in order but the bills indicated in the order just read?

The SPEAKER. Nothing except what is literally embraced in the order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. A bill, for instance, to place some person on the retired list, or some other bill of that character.

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions be allowed on the floor this evening. There was no objection, and leave was granted.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to make an inquiry. Would it be in order to move to go to the Speaker's table to take up a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The first bills in order will be House bills with Senate amendments.

Mr. CHALMERS. I made the inquiry with a view of reaching a disability bill.

The SPEAKER. The bills for the removal of political disabilities will come up last.

WILLIAM W. STEPHENSON.

The first pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 480) granting a pension to William W. Stephenson, captain of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Line 3 strike out "Twenty-fourth" and insert "Thirty-fourth."

Line 5 strike out "from and after this date."

At the end of the bill insert "from and after the passage of this act."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting a pension to William W. Stephenson, captain of Company H, Thirty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteers."

Mr. HANNA. That is a bill which I introduced, and the error of describing the regiment as the Twenty-fourth instead of the Thirty-fourth was an error of my own. I know the man personally, and know this is a meritorious case. The pension is granted on account of deafness. The man is entirely deaf.

The amendments were agreed to.

HENRY BROWN.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 491) granting a pension to Henry Brown, late a private in Company C, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Lines 2 and 3 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

At the end of the bill add the following: "And pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

DANIEL MIDDOUGH.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 529) granting a pension to Daniel Middough:

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Lines 2 and 3 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

At the end of the bill insert "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

MARY A. ALLEN.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 550) granting a pension to Mary A. Allen.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Lines 2 and 3 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

At the end of the bill insert "and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

DANIEL C. PUTNAM.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 585) for the relief of Daniel C. Putnam.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all after "pension-roll" in line 2 down to and including "laws" in line 4.

At the end of the bill insert "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

NATHAN UDELL.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 698) granting a pension to Nathan Udell.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Lines 2 and 3 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

At the end of the bill insert "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

ELIZABETH TEAGARDEN.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 830) granting a pension to Elizabeth Teagarden.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Lines 2 and 3 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

At the end of the bill insert "and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments were agreed to.

THOMAS C. YOUNG.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 846) for the relief of Thomas C. Young, late private of Company F, Thirty-ninth Iowa Infantry.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Lines 5 and 6 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and insert "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

MRS. ELIZA A. SEMPLE.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 989) granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza A. Semple.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Lines 2 and 3 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

GEORGE W. BROWNING.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 1045) to place George W. Browning on the pension-roll.

At the end of the bill insert "and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments of the Senate were agreed to.

JAMES H. COOK.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 4957) granting a pension to James H. Cook.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Lines 3 and 4 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

At the end of the bill insert "and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act."

The amendments of the Senate were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now proceed to the second class of bills.

ABIGAIL S. TILTON.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 399) granting a pension to Abigail S. Tilton.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask that that bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions. I know nothing about the bill, and it has not been considered by the committee. We do not propose to take action on bills which have not been properly examined.

The SPEAKER. The bill will go, then, to the Calendar.

A MEMBER. Is it a Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The question was put on Mr. RICE's motion; and it was agreed to

MARY LEGGETT.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 460) granting a pension to Mary Leggett.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I make the same motion in regard to that bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

HARDIE HOGAN HELPER.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1051) for the relief of Hardie Hogan Helper.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I make the same motion in regard to that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

MICHAEL MEENAN.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1359) granting pensions to the widow and minor children of Michael Meenan, deceased.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I make the same motion in regard to that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I understood that the object of the session of this evening was to pass House and Senate bills. There is no possible advantage in coming here to refer pension bills at this stage of the session to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SINICKSON. I shall ask the House to pass some bills which we have examined and the passage of which we recommend, but there are some that we know nothing about.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the several votes by which the amendments of the Senate to the bills of the House have been agreed to; and also move to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Are we not to pass any pension bill if objection is made to it because it has not been examined?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that under the order of the House an opportunity would be offered to-night for the passage of the Senate bills which grant pensions.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose so. It was stated by the Chair that some seventy pension bills had come from the Senate, and if they were to be referred to the Committee on Pensions I certainly misunderstood the object of to-night's session.

Mr. FORT. I suggest that if there be any member present who can explain a bill and vouch for its correctness we ought to consider it.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I wish to say on my own behalf and on behalf of the committee that we have examined some of these Senate bills and can vouch for them, and those we have examined we propose to ask the House to pass, but I am unwilling that a bill which has not been considered by the committee shall be passed.

Mr. CONGER. Do not the reports of the Senate committee accompany the reports?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Sometimes they do and sometimes they do not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will send for them. They are generally on file in the document-room.

Mr. CONGER. Then I suggest that these bills which we have passed over be considered as laid aside until we get the reports of the Senate.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I presume the suggestion of the Speaker is the better one, that they be laid aside for the present.

The following bills were then taken from the Speaker's table, and the reports not being present were passed over:

A bill (S. No. 1400) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy Bassett; and

A bill (S. No. 1465) granting a pension to Theodore Halberstadt.

The bill (S. No. 1509) granting a pension to John Willans was then taken up and read by its title.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask that that bill be passed over for the present. The committee of the House have been trying for one month to get the papers in that case. They seem to have been lost somewhere, and as there has been no report from the committee of this House we are not willing to recommend action upon it.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. In regard to that bill I will say that there was a report made in the Senate upon it.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I have examined the report made by the Senate committee, and upon that I cannot say that I am willing to report favorably upon this bill.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. It is hard that a party should suffer here because the papers have been lost. I have myself no personal knowledge in this case, but the report of the Senate committee is exceedingly full and satisfactory. If the committee will allow this bill to be passed, I think it would be doing but an act of justice.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I think that in all probability the papers will be found before the close of the session, and, if so, I have no doubt the Speaker will recognize the gentleman to call up the case.

The SPEAKER. The papers have been sent for.

Mr. McMAHON. I would suggest that the bill be either passed or rejected, and then a motion to reconsider entered. If that is done the case can be called up at any time.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. I am informed that this is a case that ought really to be acted upon at this session.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. There are twenty-four hundred cases that ought to be acted upon if we can do it. The Committee on Pensions are unwilling to take the responsibility of recommending the passage of a bill unless they have examined the papers in the case.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. If the committee is unwilling to act upon this bill, of course I cannot get them to do otherwise.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I shall certainly object to this bill.

Mr. CLARK, of Iowa. Then let the bill be passed over.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

The following bills were then read by their titles and passed over:

A bill (S. No. 1511) granting a pension to Dederick Blank;

A bill (S. No. 1512) granting a pension to Peter Gettert;

A bill (H. R. No. 1513) granting a pension to Charles Reed;

A bill (H. R. No. 1514) granting a pension to Simeon Ingalls;

A bill (H. R. No. 1515) granting a pension to James H. Poland; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1571) for the relief of William W. Ross.

LOUISA BAINBRIDGE HOFF.

The next bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1602) granting a pension to Louisa Bainbridge Hoff.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Louisa Bainbridge Hoff, widow of Henry Kuhn Hoff, late rear-admiral United States Navy, and daughter of William Bainbridge, late commodore of United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DURHAM. Is the $50 a month the amount allowed by law in such cases, or is that only an arbitrary amount fixed by the committee?

Mr. SINICKSON. This is the daughter of old Commodore Bainbridge and the widow of Rear-Admiral Hoff. The Senate committee was unanimously in favor of this bill, and our committee have passed several such bills.

Mr. DURHAM. It does not make any difference whose daughter she is. The question is, whether this is the amount fixed by law or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the amount of $50 a month is never exceeded.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The committee are in favor of this bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. How old is this lady?

Mr. DURHAM. It looks to me like a very extraordinary sum.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. This is according to the old law.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. There may be some reason for giving so large a pension in this case. If we pass this bill it will establish a precedent for fixing this rate of pension which may come up hereafter to annoy us.

Mr. DURHAM. All I desire to know is whether this amount is all right.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. It is.

Mr. FORT. I understand that the House committee are unanimously in favor of this bill, and I do not see why we should stop to debate the matter. The longer we consider this bill the longer we will be delaying the case of some other poor widow.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. The point is to do justice, not to give this widow more than we give the widow of some soldier who performed meritorious service in the Army. I do not object to this bill, but $0 a month is the largest sum allowed.

Mr. LATHROP. I would like to inquire whether this pension is payable out of the naval pension fund?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer that question.

Mr. SINICKSON. All naval pensions are paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The amount fixed by the old law was $50 a month, and most of the old cases have been readjusted at that rate.

Mr. FORT. Let the bill be passed; the committee are unanimously in favor of it.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill; and upon a division there were—ayes 45, noes 11.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. EDEN. I suggest that this bill be laid aside by consent and that we do not break up the session for the want of a quorum. It is evident there is no quorum here.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I do not desire to press the bill.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I insist that at this late stage of the session we should not be brought here at night sessions to consider public business without a quorum. I think that from now until the end of the session I will make the point that there is no quorum present at every night session when there is no quorum.

Mr. BANNING. It was hardly expected that there would be a quorum here to-night.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I have never heard a stump-speech made in my life when it was not always said that all the obnoxious legislation of Congress was passed at sessions like this when there was no quorum present.

Mr. BANNING. Stump-speeches of that kind should not be believed; they are not believed in my country.

Mr. MCMAHON. I have had a great deal of experience in regard to these pension bills, and I think I can say truly that when a bill has gone through such a scrutiny as this it ought to satisfy gentlemen that it should be passed. I have had charge of at least one hundred bills which have passed the House and gone to the Senate, and I have not got through more than six of them.

Mr. TUCKER. I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman who has these bills in charge; that is, if there is any serious objection made to any one of the bills, we pass it over and go on to the next, and let as many be passed as can be without objection.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I have made that suggestion.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I raise the point that there is no quorum here, and I insist upon it.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. It is agreed that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. BANNING. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PRIDEMORE] make the point of order that there is no quorum present, if it is understood that this bill be laid aside and passed over?

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I have no particular objection to this bill; my objection is to legislating in this House without a quorum. I intend to raise that point from now until the close of the session.

Mr. CONGER. Let this bill be passed over, and let us go on until we reach some bill to which there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PRIDEMORE] will not object.

Mr. TUCKER. If my colleague continues to raise his point of order in regard to all these bills, that is an objection to any legislation to-night, and we might as well adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That will amount to an objection to the third class of business to be acted upon to-night, disability bills.

Mr. CONGER. If we can get through with these pension bills, then we will reach the disability bills, to which there will be no objection unless soldiers are cut off from having their pension bills passed. I think we should go on until we reach some bill to which there is an objection. I do not object to this bill being laid aside and passed over unless there is some objection to it. The gentleman who raises the point that there is no quorum present stated that he had no objection to this bill.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. What is the question now before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is as to whether there is a quorum present.

Mr. STEELE. Why does not the House then test the question as to whether there is a quorum or not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is satisfied there is not a quorum present.

Mr. STEELE. Is that so? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not want to break up the session.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I am sure there will be no objection to going on with the pension bills and passing such as there is no objection to.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I understand that this bill has been laid aside and passed over. Let us go on.

The SPEAKER. That is not the difficulty. If the point of order is raised that there is no quorum present the Chair cannot go on with other bills.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I believe that point is withdrawn.

Mr. REILLY. I understood the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PRIDEMORE] to say that he would only raise the question of no quorum in those cases where the committee of this House had not examined the bills.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary the gentleman said that he had no earthly objection to the bill under consideration, but he raised the question that less than a quorum had no right to legislate.

Mr. FORT. Is it in order to move to commit this bill?

The SPEAKER. The question is whether there is a quorum present. If that point is insisted upon the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. At the last night session here, I objected to the consideration of a bill, and then, at the suggestion of friends, I withdrew it. It was not more than five minutes before somebody else got into a discussion, and we came very near passing a very important bill which, I have been informed by letter to-day from the city of New York, would have been a very improper bill had we passed it.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Virginia prevented the passage of the bill.

Mr. PRIDEMORE. I understand that; but just previously, when I made the same point, I was induced to withdraw it, and by renewing the objection I offended the gentlemen who desired the passage of the bill.

I will say now, that if these bills are to be considered as liable to a single objection, I will withdraw the point of order in regard to a quorum. It is proper for me to say that I know nothing in the world about this bill. I do not make my point against this bill particularly.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINNICKSON. I call for the reading of the order under which we are proceeding to-night. I think that all these bills are within the order made for to-night.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SINNICKSON. I understand that the order was that we should consider House bills passed by the Senate with amendments and such Senate bills as the committee of this House had acted on.

The SPEAKER. The order does not so read.

The order of business for the evening session was again read.

JAMES C. DAGGETT.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1705) granting an increase of pension to James C. Daggett.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Let that bill be laid aside.

MRS. JANE DULANEY.

The next pension bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1723) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Jane Dulaney.

The bill directs the Commissioner of Pensions to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Jane Dulaney, widow of Colonel William Dulaney, late of the United States Marine Corps, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $30 a month from July 4, 1868, when her husband died, less the pension heretofore paid her.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] wishes to make a statement in regard to this bill. I will say that the bill has been considered by a majority of the committee.

Mr. ELLIS. Mrs. Dulaney is a very old lady, the widow of a hero of three wars. A bill of this kind passed the House in the Forty-second Congress and the Forty-third.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the report of the Senate committee be read.

Mr. ELLIS. I would be glad to have it read. This is a most meritorious case.

The Clerk read the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, as follows:

Jane Dulaney is the widow of the late Colonel William Dulaney, of the United States Marine Corps, who died on the 4th of July, 1868. This officer entered the service of the corps July 10, 1817, as second lieutenant. He served continuously on shipboard and at different naval stations to July, 1828, having been promoted in the mean time to first lieutenant, captain by brevet, captain, and commanded the guard of the United States frigate Constitution in December, 1825. He was the first officer of the Marine Corps to volunteer his services for field duty at the breaking out of the Florida war, and served with conspicuous gallantry and untiring energy and devotion throughout that war, commanding the marines and a portion of the Army. He was complimented by Major-General Jesup in General Order No. 102, and tendered the thanks of the country therein, and General P. F. Smith also testified in the highest terms to the Navy Department his appreciation of Dulaney's brilliant services, and in his honor Fort Dulaney was named. During these campaigns he was prostrated by disease and advised by a surgeon that to remain longer in that malarious climate would endanger his life; but, notwithstanding this advice, he continued in the field until the close of the war, when he returned in command of his force.

When in command of Fort Pickens, in 1846, he again tendered his services for the Mexican war, and commanded the marines in that war with marked gallantry, and was at the storming and capture of the castle of Chapultepec and the capture of the Belen Gate and the City of Mexico, and in the mean time was promoted and commissioned major by brevet and major, and, for gallant and meritorious conduct, received, after the capture of the City of Mexico, as a high appreciation of his splendid and noble services, the brevet of lieutenant-colonel.

After the close of the Mexican war he served continuously in command of the marine barracks at New York, Boston, and Portsmouth; and, although a native of Virginia, at the firing of the first gun at Fort Sumter he again offered his services to his country for duty in the field, and he was at once commissioned, by the lamented President Lincoln, colonel, and placed in command of the marine battalion at Norfolk, Virginia, and continued in active service until after the close of the late civil war.

On the 8th of November, 1865, after having served his country faithfully for almost half a century, he was retired under the act of Congress retiring officers of forty-five years' service. He died upon the retired list, July 4, 1868, as before stated, leaving no blot upon his name. The physician who attended him in his last sickness certifies that he died of congestion of the brain, arising from causes produced while in the service of his country and in the line of duty.

His widow, Mrs. Jane Dulaney, is poor, and entirely dependent upon others for support in her old age.

This bill has twice passed this House, Forty-second and Forty-third Congresses, without any opposition.

In consideration of the foregoing facts, all of which are established beyond any doubt by the evidence submitted to the committee, your committee are of opinion that Mrs. Jane Dulaney is entitled to a pension, and they report back said House bill 1118, and recommend that it do pass with the following amendment:

After the word "pension," in the eighth line, insert the following: "at the rate of $30 per month."

Mr. CONGER. There is no objection to that.

Mr. DURHAM. I would like to offer an amendment.

Mr. HANNA. The effect of an amendment at this stage of the session will be to defeat the bill.

Mr. DURHAM. I move to amend by striking out all after the words "$30 a month," in the eighth line, and inserting "from the passage of this act." The bill in its present form runs back for ten years from this date.

Mr. POWERS. It gives this lady $4,000 at once.

Mr. HANNA. I suggest to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] that, as I am informed, the arrears of pensions bill, now under consideration in the Senate, will be so amended as to provide that where pensions are granted by special act such pensions will not be upon the same footing as those to persons who have made application and had their pension granted upon claims regularly filed. Hence when that bill comes up from the Senate, as it will most likely to-morrow or Monday, and becomes a law, it will meet the difficulty which my friend from Kentucky suggests.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HANNA. To amend this bill now would be equivalent to its defeat. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be made.

Mr. DURHAM. My amendment simply puts this lady upon the same footing with all other pensioners we have provided for to-night.

Mr. SPARKS. This bill makes provision to go back and cover arrears in the same way as the arrangements of pensions bill passed by the House would have done. But the Senate has amended that bill, so that as to all pensions granted by special law the arrearage of pension act will not apply.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. ELLIS. I ask to be heard a moment on the amendment. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. POWERS] objects that the bill would pay to this aged and necessitous relict of the hero of three wars nearly $4,000. Now, suppose it does; how inadequate, how utterly inadequate to her maintenance is $30 per month? How is she to be taken care of on such an allowance? I know her necessitous condition; and I know that $30 per month will not be any adequate provision for her. Considering the distinguished services of her husband, considering her absolute want and great age, I think this bill ought to pass as it comes from the Senate. If we amend it, requiring it to go back to the Senate for concurrence, it may never be acted on in the pressure of business, the adjournment being so near. I appeal to the patriotism, I appeal to the humanity, I appeal to the charity of the House of Representatives to vote down the amendment and pass the bill as it comes from the Senate.

Mr. POWERS. Onemoment. I have examined this bill now for the first time. I find that it proposes to give this widow some $4,000 the first time she draws her pension, and to place her on the pension-roll at the rate of $30 a month. Now, I know not what may be the reason why she has not drawn the pension for the last ten years, but I apprehend she did not come within the general purview of the pension laws. I do, however, know this: that there have been hundreds of bills considered by us for the relief of soldiers who have lost their health in the service, and that in every instance we have placed them on the pension-rolls to draw their pensions from and after the passage of the act. Since the passage of the general law would have permitted some of them to have gone back for arrears, the Senate has amended all our bills, so that they should not go back.

Now, why we should make a special exception in this case and pay this widow $30 a month for nearly eleven years, amounting to some $4,000, when we do not give it to any other widow of a soldier or to the soldier himself, I do not see. I believe in letting them all stand and fall together, and must object to passing the bill in this form.

Mr. CONGER. What the gentleman from Maine has just stated may be true about all former bills, but we have supplied the deficiency in other bills by passing an arrearage bill to pay back as this does; and that law provides that in case of a special pension dating back from the commencement of the disability the arrearage law shall not apply. This bill is in accordance with the rule which has been adopted. It is a special bill, giving the arrears by a special law, and the case cannot come under the operation of the general law. If this is amended, we know the bill cannot go back to the Senate and be passed. There is no use of passing it at all unless we pass it as it came from the Senate. In either event, under the operation of the law, this pensioner will receive the same amount, either as arrears under the general law or the arrears provided for in this bill; no more and no less.

The question being put on Mr. DURHAM's amendment, there were—ayes 17, noes 42.

Mr. SPARKS. A quorum has not voted.

Mr. BANNING. Making the point that a quorum has not voted amounts to an objection to the bill; and that being the case, I hope it will be withdrawn that we may go on with other bills.

Mr. SPARKS. I am willing that the bill should pass if it is amended so as to put this case on the same basis as others. When it is insisted that a discrimination shall be made in favor of this pensioner, I object.

Mr. DURHAM. I hope gentlemen will consent to this amendment being adopted. It will relieve us of all difficulty and risk.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be laid aside and the next bill will be read.

Subsequently,

Mr. ELLIS said: I understand that the point made against Senate bill No. 1723, granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Dulaney, will not be insisted upon. I ask that the bill be taken up and passed.

The SPEAKER. It is understood that the amendment was voted down.

Mr. ELLIS. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES C. DAGGETT.

Mr. JOYCE. When the bill granting a pension to James C. Daggett was called my attention was diverted for the moment. I intended to ask the House to pass that bill. Mr. Daggett, who seeks this pension, was before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and all the members of the committee who were present at the time saw the helpless condition in which the man was. His arms and legs are completely paralyzed so that he has to be drawn around in a little cart, and he requires to have a man constantly in attendance upon him. He came from the section of country where I live. Although I had no personal acquaintance with the man until I saw him here, I know his people, and I know his is a very meritorious case.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. Let the bill be again read. When it was read before the circumstances had passed out of my mind.

The bill (S. No. 1705) granting an increase of pension to James C. Daggett was again read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of James C. Daggett, late private Company E, United States Signal Service, and to pay him a pension of $72 per month from and after the passage of the act.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. My recollection is that our committee favored $50 a month.

Mr. JOYCE. The man is totally and absolutely helpless.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. He is in a terrible condition; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. JOYCE. My impression is that it was understood at the time that the bill should be favorably reported. The committee said "all right; the man ought to have that money."

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. What is he getting now?

Mr. JOYCE. I do not remember the amount he draws at present.

Mr. DENISON. This Daggett is wheeled around in a chair, and is compelled to employ two men to take care of him. He cannot walk or lift his hands to his mouth. Every particle of food that is put into his mouth is put there by a hired person. He cannot live without two persons taking care of him. Rather than live without the pension, if I were in his place, I would die.

Mr. EDEN. Let it pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOYCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN SMITH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1723) granting a pension to John Smith.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I know nothing about this case; I move that it be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

MATTHEW O. REGAN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1739) granting a pension to Matthew O. Regan.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that it be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

REBECCA WILLIAMS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1740) granting a pension to Rebecca Williams.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that it be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

ELIZABETH McNEIL BENHAM.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1741) granting a pension to Elizabeth McNeil Benham.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that it be laid aside.

Mr. CONGER. I hope that bill will be passed. It is a bill for the relief of the daughter of a soldier who spent forty or fifty years in the service of his country, and who is herself the widow of another soldier. I know the parties myself.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the question is on the third reading of a Senate bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCES M'NEIL POTTER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1742) granting a pension to Frances McNeil Potter.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that the bill be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH E. WEBB.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1759) granting a pension to Sarah E. Webb and minor children.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that it be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN M'NULTA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1841) granting a pension to John McNulta.

Mr. FORT. I hope there will be no objection to that bill. General McNulta served gallantly in the Army during the late war and was since a member of this House. He has lately, from the effects of wounds and exposure while in the Army, been paralyzed, and unless he gets a pension very soon it will in all probability be too late. He may not live until another Congress meets.

In reply to questions of gentlemen around me here, I will again state that I understand he was badly wounded and suffered extreme exposure, by which his health was broken down, during the late war, and has since been shattered by a severe paralytic stroke, and must now with unsteady step march his remaining journey of life, and is now almost helpless physically. General McNulta was a brave soldier and is an honorable man, and would not apply for national relief till misfortune and extreme affliction overtook him. He has a family and is needy, and I hope this bill may now pass.

The SPEAKER. He was a former member of this House.

Mr. FORT. Yes, Mr. Speaker, he was a former member of the House, and served faithfully and honorably. He was always patriotic, and sacrificed his physical powers upon the altar of his country; and, sir, I do hope that there may be no objection to this bill, and that it may now pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES C. SMITH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1848) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Smith.

The bill was read.

Mr. EWING. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. EWING. I hope the bill will be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EWING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCES M'NEIL POTTER.

Mr. STEELE. I beg leave to state that the case of Frances McNeil Potter (S. No. 1742) is of the same character, and I think that if there is no objection to the passage of the bill in one case there should be none in the other.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. L. E. M'CAULEY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1849) granting a pension to Mrs. L. E. McCauley.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that it be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

HANNAH M'LAUGHLIN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1854) granting a pension to Hannah McLaughlin.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that it be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY W. JONES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1855) granting a pension to Mary W. Jones.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I move that it be laid aside.
The motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELIZABETH WIRT GOLDSBOROUGH.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1733) granting Mrs. Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough, widow of the late Admiral Goldsborough, a pension of $50 per month, to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I ask for the reading of that bill.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Navy to place on the pension-roll the name of Elizabeth Wirt Goldsborough, widow of the late Admiral Goldsborough, and pay her a pension of $50 a month during her widowhood out of the naval pension fund, not to be entitled to arrears of pension.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to that bill.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection on the ground that there is no quorum present?

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. This bill is certainly right.

Mr. BRAGG. As I understand it, all naval officers share in the prize-money and I suppose Admiral Goldsborough had some of it. Besides, this naval fund is a humbug.

The SPEAKER. The bill being objected to, it will be passed over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The House will now proceed to the next class of business, being bills for the removal of political disabilities.

Mr. SINICKSON. There are some pension bills which the committee have acted upon.

The SPEAKER. This is the third class of business.

Mr. PAGE. It is a very strange state of affairs that a pension bill cannot be passed through the House for want of a quorum, while disability bills, requiring a two-thirds vote to pass them, can be passed through without objection. I do not desire to object.

The SPEAKER. Those gentlemen who objected to pension bills are not gentlemen who are likely to be interested in disability bills. About sixty pension bills have been passed to-night. The disability bills will now be acted upon.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose that in all these cases the petitions accompany the bills.

The SPEAKER. They are all here. The Senate requires a petition in every case.

DISABILITY BILLS.

The following bills were then taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof:

A bill (S. No. 1844) to remove the political disabilities of S. W. Ferguson, of Mississippi;

A bill (S. No. 1775) to remove the political disabilities of Isaac R. Trimble, of Baltimore County, Maryland;

A bill (S. No. 1625) to remove the political disabilities of William T. Welcker, of California; and

A bill (S. No. 1776) to remove the political disabilities of Henry H. Lewis, of Baltimore, Maryland.

Mr. BEALE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6524) to remove the political disabilities of H. B. Littlebridge, of King William County, Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to inquire if there is a petition accompanying this bill?

Mr. BEALE. There is.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The House will now receive reports of pension bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I have a bill here which I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report favorably to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that Senate bills be first taken up and acted upon, for the reason that House bills passed now will have but little chance to become laws during this session.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. That is a Senate bill which I have reported.

Mr. SINICKSON. We do not want to report anything but Senate bills.

The following bill, reported by Mr. RICE, of Ohio, was then read a third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 1040) granting a pension to Richard Middleton.

Mr. SINICKSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate bills; which were severally ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 1309) granting an increase of pension to Isabella H. Silvey;

A bill (S. No. 932) granting a pension to Cornelius Le Roy;

A bill (S. No. 1419) granting a pension to Mrs. Rosa Gale; and

A bill (S. No. 663) granting a pension to William H. H. Buck.

Mr. POWERS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported the following bill, with a favorable recommendation:

A bill (S. No. 1310) granting a pension to Edmund R. Batchelder.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. That bill provides for arrears of pension, and I move to amend it so as to strike out that provision.

The SPEAKER. Quite a number of bills have been passed to-night reported from the Committee on Pensions which do not seem to correspond with the amendments which the Senate have put on such bills.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I always move such an amendment to a bill when my attention is called to it, so that the pension shall run from and after the passage of the act.

The SPEAKER. There can be unanimous consent given to make that change in the bills which have already passed.

Mr. SINICKSON. I object so far as my bills are concerned.

Mr. MORRISON. It means the same thing under the law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought it due to the House to state the fact. If it means the same thing the Chair has no objection.

Mr. POWERS. It does.

Mr. LATHROP. Have these bills the unanimous recommendation of the committee?

Mr. POWERS. They have.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POWERS, from the same committee, reported, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate bills; which were respectively read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 929) granting a pension to Hiram Howard; and

A bill (S. No. 1189) granting a pension to Ellen Devlin.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate bills; which were respectively read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 969) granting a pension to Mrs. N. E. Belrichards; and

A bill (S. No. 889) granting a pension to John Etzell.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. RAINEY, from the same committee, reported back adversely Senate bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (S. No. 962) granting a pension to William H. Criddle; and

A bill (S. No. 1646) granting a pension to Phoebe C. Dossie.

BILLS PASSED.

Mr. MACKEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate bills; which were read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 362) granting a pension to A. G. Ege;

A bill (S. No. 687) granting a pension to William H. Bagley; and

A bill (S. No. 872) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann W. Steele.

Mr. MACKEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following bills; which were objected to:

A bill (S. No. 1454) granting a pension to Ann M. Paulding, widow of Hiram Paulding, late senior rear-admiral United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 5241) granting a pension to Ann M. Paulding, widow of Rear-Admiral Hiram Paulding; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5963) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel C. Schoyer, late of Company G, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. METCALFE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate bills; which were respectively read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 971) granting a pension to William Leibig;

A bill (S. No. 1163) granting a pension to Mary E. Parker; and

A bill (S. No. 1214) granting a pension to Amos Argle.

Mr. JOYCE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the following Senate bills; which were respectively read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. No. 1137) granting a pension to Harmon Vann;

A bill (S. No. 996) granting a pension to Edmund Woog; and

A bill (S. No. 1380) granting a pension to Josiah Kellogg.

Mr. BLAIR. Senate bill No. 399, granting a pension to Abigail S. Tilton, was passed over by inadvertence. I ask now that it be taken up. This bill has been passed by the Senate and reported favorably in the House. It grants a pension, at the rate of $8 per month, to the surviving widow of a soldier of the Revolution—probably the only case of the kind in the country. She is a lady some eighty-six years of age.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POWERS. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 1759, granting a pension to Sarah E. Webb and minor children.

The bill was read.

Mr. POWERS. This bill was laid aside at the request of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. RICE,] as we had not then considered it. Since that time we have looked over the bill and agree that it should be passed.

The bill was passed.

Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN WILLANS.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio. I desire to call up the bill (S. No. 1509) granting a pension to John Willans. There is no objection to it, and it is the last bill I shall call up this evening.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of John Willans, late a captain and assistant adjutant-general United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension as of the rank of captain from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. CONGER. What will be the business when the House reassembles to-morrow after the recess?

The SPEAKER. The business will be confined to reports from the Committee on Public Lands with the understanding that no bill objected to shall be considered.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until Saturday morning at ten o'clock a. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired the House (at ten o'clock a. m., Saturday, March 1) resumed its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The session this morning is set apart for reports from the Committee on Public Lands; bills to which there shall be no objection.

Mr. EDEN. Only reports from the Committee on Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. Nothing else.

SETTLERS ON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1160) to extend the provisions of an act approved June 22, 1874, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers on railroad lands."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of June 22, 1874, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers on railroad lands," be, and the same are hereby, extended so as to embrace the claims of all bona fide settlers under the homestead or pre-emption laws who shall make proper proof of such settlement and of the necessary qualifications to enter under said laws, although no filing or entry may, previous to the date of said act, have been admitted in favor of such settlers: Provided, That the restrictions of existing laws respecting lands classed as double minimum in price shall not be relaxed in favor of the claims falling under the provisions of this act.

Mr. FULLER. I desire the Clerk to read the statute, the provisions of which are extended by this bill, in order that it may be understood what the bill provides for.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act for the relief of settlers on railroad lands.

Be it enacted, etc., That in the adjustment of all railroad land grants, whether made directly to any railroad company or to any State for railroad purposes, if any of the lands granted be found in the possession of an actual settler, whose entry of or filing has been allowed under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States subsequent to the time at which, by the decision of the Land Office, the right of said road was declared to have attached to such lands, the grantees, upon a proper relinquishment of the lands so entered or filed for, shall be entitled to select an equal quantity of other lands in lieu thereof from any of the public lands not mineral and within the limits of the grant not otherwise appropriated at the date of selection, to which they shall receive title the same as though originally granted. And any such entries or filings thus relieved from conflict may be perfected into complete title as if such lands had not been granted: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall in any manner be so construed as to enlarge or extend any grant to any such railroad, or to extend to lands reserved in any land grant made for railroad purposes: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed so as in any manner to confirm or legalize any decision or ruling of the Interior Department under which lands have been certified to any railroad company, when such lands have been entered by a pre-emption or homestead settler after the location of the line of the road and prior to the notice to the local land office of the withdrawal of such lands from market.

Mr. FULLER. It will be observed that all the bill provides for is that settlers who have settled on railroad land-grants, and in favor of whom no filing or entry may have been admitted, shall have the same privilege as is allowed to settlers under the act of 1874 whose entry or filing has been allowed, the railroad being allowed to give up the land to the settlers and take other lands within the limits of the grant. This allows settlers to perfect their titles.

Mr. EDEN. The settlers, if I understand the gentleman, get the lands under the homestead laws, and the provision of this bill is to allow the railroad company to go outside the limits of the grant and get other lands.

Mr. FULLER. No, sir. If the settler has settled on railroad lands and did not know it, then the railroad company is allowed to give up those lands to the settler and to take other lands in lieu of them within the limits of the grant. The bill is in the interest of the settler altogether.

Mr. PRICE. Is the bill general in its character? I did not hear it read.

Mr. FULLER. It is.

Mr. PRICE. That is right.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FORT SMITH MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. GAUSE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 5702) to provide for the reappraisal and sale of the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, Arkansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to cause the abandoned military reservation at Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, at the earliest practical moment, and to be laid off in the following manner, namely: Beginning on the western boundary-line of the said reservation, lay out a street fifty feet in width on a line with Byrne street of the said town of Fort Smith, parallel to Garrison avenue of said town, and at a distance from said avenue of one hundred and forty feet, extending from said western boundary-line to the point of intersection of the said new street with the northeastern boundary-line of said reservation; also a street fifty feet in width around the outside of the walls of the national cemetery located on said reservation; also extend Ozark and Greene streets of said town across said reservation, and to a width of not less than sixty feet; also an avenue from the southern boundary-line of said reservation, along, by, and parallel to the front wall of said cemetery, and at a distance of twenty feet therefrom, and extending from said southern boundary-line until it intersects Greene street extended as aforesaid, and having a width of not less than eighty feet; and that the remainder of said reservation be divided into lots of not more than forty acres.

SEC. 2. That immediately after said reservation shall have been laid off as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint three citizens of Arkansas, near the said reservation, to reappraise the said several lots, who shall go upon the premises, ascertain the actual cash value per acre of each lot separately, and report the same under oath to the Secretary of the Interior as soon after their appointment as practicable.

SEC. 3. That as soon as said report shall have been received by the said Secretary, he shall, after having given thirty days' notice in the papers of said town of Fort Smith of the time and place of sale, cause the said lots (except such as are hereinafter excepted and reserved from sale) to be exposed to sale at public outcry at the court-house door of the United States district court for the western district of Arkansas, to the highest bidder: Provided, That no lot shall be sold for less than its reappraised value as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That so much of said reservation as is occupied by the said Garrison avenue and wharf of said town; also so much as is included between Ozark and Washington streets of said town, if extended; also so much as is included between the new street first above mentioned and western boundary-line between Greene street extended and Washington street of said town; and also so much as is included between said new street first above mentioned and the said northeastern boundary-line of said reservation be, and the same are hereby, reserved from sale as aforesaid.

SEC. 5. That persons having lots fronting on said Garrison avenue and extending back to said northeastern boundary-line of said reservation shall have a pre-emption right to purchase, within twelve months next ensuing after said reappraisement, so much of said reservation as shall be necessary to complete their respective lots back to said new street first above mentioned, at the appraised value per acre of the subdivision including said lots or parts of lots, and upon proof within said twelve months being made before the register of public lands at Dardanelle, in said State, of their titles to said incomplete lots, and their consequent right to purchase under this section, and the payment of said appraised value to the receiver at said Dardanelle, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent to said purchasers respectively to issue to so much as shall be necessary to complete said lots as aforesaid.

SEC. 6. That so much of said reservation as is occupied by the wharf and said avenue of said town of Fort Smith shall be sold to said town for and in consideration of its opening Greene street of said town from said avenue to said reservation within twelve months after the passage of this act, and to a width of not less than sixty feet; and upon the Secretary of the Interior receiving notification, properly attested, from the mayor of said town, within said twelve months, that said street has been opened as aforesaid, then he shall cause a patent to issue to said town for so much of said reservation as is now occupied by said avenue and wharf: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to expose to sale any of that part of the said reservation included in the stone walls surrounding the barracks, or any of said walls, or the buildings used by the judge or district attorney or marshal of said district court for the western district of Arkansas for offices or for jail or court purposes, or any ground included in the national cemetery aforesaid.

SEC. 7. That upon payment of the purchase-money of any of said lots as aforesaid to the receiver at the land office at said Dardanelle, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent to issue to the purchaser thereof for said lot. And in the event that any of said lots are not sold at their appraised value as aforesaid, then such lots shall be subject to entry at the land office at said Dardanelle, as any other lands belonging to the United States: Provided, That they shall not be entered at a price less than their reappraised value as aforesaid.

SEC. 8. That the sum of ——— dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. EDEN. I reserve the right to object until I hear an explanation of the bill.

The amendment of the committee was to strike out section 8 of the bill.

Mr. LATHROP. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX, of New York.) There is no report.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. GAUSE. In explanation of the bill I will say that this is an old abandoned military reservation. There is a large tract there near the town of Fort Smith, which has been reserved for some years. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, everybody who has ever had anything to do with it, has recommended in the annual reports for the last five or six years that this reservation be disposed of, on the ground that the Government has no use for it whatever. No troops were ever quartered at Fort Smith. No use has been made of the barracks, and no use has been made of the reservation in any respect except for court purposes. All the buildings are given for the use of the district court.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Arkansas whether the bill now pending has received the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. GAUSE. I do not know that this bill has received his indorsement, but a similar proposition has.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas how it is any parties have obtained a pre-emption right on this reservation?

Mr. GAUSE. They have not.

Mr. EDEN. If I heard the bill read aright, there is some provision made for persons who had acquired rights of property on this reservation. I do not see how any person could acquire any rights of property there.

Mr. GAUSE. I think the gentleman from Illinois has misconceived the language of the bill. The bill provides that after laying out the lots on this reservation the persons owning property lying next to them shall have the right to buy the lots lying next to their own lots at the appraised value.

Mr. EDEN. Then they are to be sold to those persons at their appraised value?

Mr. GAUSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. Does this bill propose that the lands shall be sold at public sale, and if not at public sale then at the appraised value?

Mr. GAUSE. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. Why not include all of them in that?

Mr. GAUSE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. CRAVENS.]

Mr. CRAVENS. I think I can explain the matter to the satisfaction of the gentleman. The principal street in Fort Smith is Garrison avenue, and runs parallel with this reservation, and the line of this reservation has been in time past uncertain. The line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian Territory is the western boundary of this reservation. Garrison avenue was laid out under a misapprehension of the line; in fact, the reservation extends into Garrison avenue, now the southwestern side of Garrison avenue.

Mr. PAGE. If this bill is going to create a discussion I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. PAGE. No; but I shall if there is a discussion about it. The committee have a great many bills to report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDEN. I object until I can have an explanation of the bill from the gentleman.

Mr. CRAVENS. Some persons have already built houses on this land.

Mr. GAUSE. I withdraw the bill.

LAND GRANTS TO MINNESOTA.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 1073) granting lands to the State of Minnesota in lieu of certain lands heretofore granted to said State.

The bill was read. It provides that there be, and hereby are, granted to the State of Minnesota, to be selected by the governor of said State, twenty-four sections of land, out of any public lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated, in lieu and in stead of twenty-four sections of the land granted to said State of Minnesota by the fourth subdivision of section 5 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the people of the Territory of Minnesota to form a constitution and State government preparatory to their admission in the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved February 26, 1857, and selected by said State, but which were subsequently otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which the United States cannot make title to the said State of Minnesota; provided that the lands herein granted shall be selected within three years, and from unoccupied lands of the United States lying within the State of Minnesota.

Mr. LATHROP. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no report.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I have a printed report here.

Mr. STRAIT. I will state that the bill relates to saline lands that were settled on before this selection was made by the State, and this act is to enable parties to take other lands in lieu thereof.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I have a written report accompanying the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman propose to have it read or printed?

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I propose to have it printed.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. SAPP, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 5103) to extend the time for payment of pre-emptors on certain public lands in the State of Minnesota.

The bill was read. It provides that the time at which pre-emptors on the public lands, in the State of Minnesota, including the lands within the Fort Ridgely and Sioux Indian reservations, are now required to make final proof and payment, be, and the same is hereby, extended one year, from October 1, 1878.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 7, strike out "one year," and insert in lieu thereof "two years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAPP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SECTION 2403 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. WIGGINTON, from the same committee, reported back the bill (S. No. 801) to amend section 2403 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in relation to the deposits for surveys.

The bill was read. It provides that section 2403 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 2403. Where settlers make deposits in accordance with the provisions of section 2401, the amount so deposited shall go in part payment for their lands situated in the townships the surveying of which is paid for out of such deposits, or the certificates issued for such deposits may be assigned by indorsement, and be received in payment for any public lands of the United States entered by settlers under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States, and not otherwise.

Mr. EDEN. Under the law as it now is, I suppose the money that is deposited can only be applied to the particular township that is to be surveyed.

Mr. WIGGINTON. It can only be applied to the payment of the particular tract of land that the party locates under the pre-emption and homestead laws.

Mr. LATHROP. I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. LATHROP withdrew the objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WIGGINTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado, from the Committee on Public Lands, asked unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4801) to place the States of California, Nevada, and Colorado upon an equality with other States in the matter of public lands for common-school purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment.

Mr. BUCKNER. I object to that bill. I think this House is too thin to act upon such important bills as this.

Mr. PATTERSON, of Colorado. I do not think the gentleman will object after explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House.

CONFEDERATED OTOWE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. MAJORS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 373, to amend an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the Confederated Otoe and Missouria and the Sac and Fox of the Missouri tribes of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 3 of the act of August 15, 1876, chapter 308, entitled "An act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the Confederated Otoe and Missouria and the Sac and Fox of the Missouri tribes of Indians," shall be amended so as to read as follows:

That after the survey and appraisal of said lands, the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, authorized to offer one hundred and twenty thousand acres from the western side of the same for sale, through the United States public land office, at Beatrice, Nebraska, for cash to actual settlers or persons who shall make oath before the register or receiver of the land office at Beatrice, Nebraska, that they intend to occupy the land for authority to purchase which they make application, who shall, within three months from the date of such application, make a permanent settlement upon the same in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to each purchaser: Provided, That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, it shall be more advantageous to sell said lands upon deferred payments, he may, with the consent of the Indians expressed in open council, dispose of the same upon the following terms as to payments, that is to say, one-third in cash, one-third in one year, and one-third in two years from date of sale, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum: And provided further, That no portion of said land shall be sold at less than the appraised value thereof, and in no case less than $2.50 per acre: And provided further, That whenever a settler on any of the lands subject to sale under the act to which this is amendatory shall apply to purchase a tract containing a small excess over one hundred and sixty acres, owing to the legal subdivisions being made fractional by boundary-line of reservation, township, or section line, his application shall not be rejected on account of such excess; but, if no other objection exist, the purchase shall be allowed as in other cases.

The amendment reported from the committee was to add to the bill the following:

And provided further, That bona fide claimants at present occupying lands under the provision of the act of which this is amendatory, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be allowed additional time to make the deferred payments required by said act for the lands so claimed and occupied by them in good faith, not exceeding one year on each payment so required to be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill, as amended, to a third reading.

Mr. LATHROP. Is this advised by the department?

Mr. MAJORS. The only change this makes in the existing law is in reference to deferred payments. It is for the benefit of settlers.

Mr. LATHROP. That is not the question I asked. I asked whether this is recommended by the Indian department.

Mr. MAJORS. The only change in the existing law is the amendment which has been read.

Mr. LATHROP. The question I asked is whether this is recommended by the department.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MAJORS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1051) for the protection of settlers on the public lands of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when any person entitled to avail himself of the benefits of the pre-emption or homestead laws has made, or shall make, a bona fide settlement on lands subject to settlement under any such laws, such settlement shall be deemed to create a contract between the Government and the settler, and his claim shall constitute a vested right of property, only to be forfeited by his neglect or refusal to comply with the conditions prescribed by the law under which he claims.

SEC. 2. That when any such person shall have made settlement upon unsurveyed lands of the United States, the right to enter the quarter section or any lesser legal subdivision on which he shall be located by the survey shall date from his actual settlement upon the same; but no filing shall be required of any settler until such survey shall have been made.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FULLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOARD OF EDUCATION, HARPER'S FERRY, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. GAUSE, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1737) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to convey, by deed, to the board of education of the district of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, a lot of ground, (No. 2 in block B,) with the buildings thereon, for the use of the common schools thereof.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to convey, by deed, in fee, to the board of education of the district of Harper's Ferry, in Jefferson County, West Virginia, for the use of the common schools, the lot of ground, with buildings thereon, known as lot 2, in block B, on Shenandoah street, as laid down on the map of 1852, now occupied for a post-office, schools, and office for the corporate authorities of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia.

Mr. EDEN. Do I understand that the building is to be conveyed that is on this land?

Mr. GAUSE. It is; to be used for school purposes.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GAUSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD SETTLERS ON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. SAPP. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 5627) to grant additional rights to homestead settlers on public lands within railroad limits. The Senate has passed a bill precisely similar to the bill of the House, with the exception of the amendment which I am instructed to offer in the nature of an additional section. I ask that Senate bill No. 959 be taken from the Speaker's table and considered at this time.

Mr. EDEN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDEN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SAPP] why he proposes to give the settlers on lands within the limit of railroad grants one hundred and sixty acres, which are worth $2.50 an acre, while the settlers outside of those limits are allowed only one hundred and sixty acres, worth $1.25 an acre?

Mr. SAPP. It is only to protect them against railroad companies.

Mr. EDEN. How does this protect them against railroad companies?

Mr. SAPP. By giving them additional rights to those they already have.

The amendment to the Senate bill was to strike out the words "shall be permitted so to do without payment of fees and commission" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "shall receive credit for the fees and commission paid upon his abandoned entry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following:

SEC. — That any person who has heretofore made an entry of more than eighty acres within the limits of any land grant and complied with the requirements of the act of May 20, 1862, shall be entitled to perfect his said entry and receive a patent thereof.

Mr. SAPP. I now ask that the question be taken on the amendment proposing an additional section.

Mr. LATHROP. Mr. Speaker, is this bill liable to a single objection?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. LATHROP. I object to it, because it proposes to give one class of pre-emptors double that which is or can be given to another.

LAND DISTRICT IN DAKOTA.

Mr. KIDDER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 791) to establish a land district in the Black Hills, in the Territory of Dakota.

The bill was read. It provides in the first section that all the public lands in the Territory of Dakota lying west of the one hundred and third meridian of longitude and south of the seventh standard parallel shall constitute a new land district, to be called the Black Hills district.

The second section authorizes the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess thereof, and until the next session after such appointment, a register and a receiver for said district, who shall be required to reside in Deadwood, in said Black Hills, until such time as the President may, in his discretion, remove the site of the land office from Deadwood; and such register and receiver shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may be provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in said Territory.

Mr. SCALES. Is there any report accompanying this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is not.

Mr. KIDDER. The establishment of this new land district is absolutely necessary. At present persons have to go a thousand miles to enter their lands.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KIDDER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House adjourn. We must adjourn at any rate in five minutes.

Mr. WIGGINTON. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion; we want to pass two or three more bills.

The motion was not agreed to.

FEES, ETC., ON VOID ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WIGGINTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 989) for the relief of certain settlers on the public lands and to provide for the repayment of certain fees and commissions paid on void entries of public lands.

The bill was read. It provides in the first section that in all cases where it shall, upon due proof being made, appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that innocent parties have paid the fees and commissions and excess payments required upon the location of claims under the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to enable honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, their widows and orphan children, to acquire homesteads on the public lands of the United States,' and amendments thereto," approved March 3, 1873, and now incorporated in section 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which claims were, after such location, found to be fraudulent and void, and the entries or locations made thereon canceled, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to repay to such innocent parties the fees and commissions and excess payments paid by them, upon the surrender of the receipts issued therefor by the receivers of public moneys, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be payable out of the appropriation to refund purchase-money on lands erroneously sold by the United States.

The second section provides that in all cases where homestead or timber-culture entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled for conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and cannot be confirmed, the receiver of public moneys of the land office in which such entry was made shall repay to the person who made such entry the fees and commissions and excesses paid upon the same upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The third section provides that the receiver of public moneys shall repay such fees, commissions, and excesses, the repayment of which is provided for in the second section of this act, out of any money in his hands received in payment of fees and commissions and excesses on like entries of public lands.

The fourth section authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make all necessary rules and issue all necessary instructions to carry the provisions of this act into effect.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WIGGINTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SAPP. I hope the gentleman will yield, in order to allow me to have some bills placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDEN. We must adjourn; in a moment or two the House must begin the session of Saturday.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and fifty-nine minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of wholesale grocers and dealers in sugar, of Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, that duties on sugar be regulated on the ad valorem principle—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Isaac Conard and others, of West Grove, Pennsylvania, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ALDRICH: The petition of A. Booth, McNab & Johnston, and 24 other firms and individuals of Chicago, Illinois, engaged in the fish trade, against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3689) relating to the establishment of a board of commissioners to regulate the fisheries on the great lakes of the Northwest—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BICKNELL: The petition of Louisa J. Teaford and 120 other women, of Floyd County, Indiana for legislation to make effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862—to the same committee.

By Mr. BLAIR: The petition of the Cedar Congregation of the Society of Friends, of Randolph County, Indiana, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of John F. Barkley and others, citizens of New Vienna, Ohio, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of the Poplar Run Congregation of the Society of Friends, of Randolph County, Indiana, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. BREWER: The petition of the First Presbyterian church of Peotone, Illinois, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. CUMMINGS: The petition of Thomas G. Orwig and other inventors of Iowa, against the passage of the Senate bill amending the patent laws—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CUTLER: The petition of the Lutheran church of Stewartsville, New Jersey, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAVIS, of California: The petition of cigar-makers of San Francisco, California, against the passage of the bill requiring coupon stamps to be placed on cigars—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the California State Grange, for the establishment of an experimental farm, and the detail of an officer especially to gather information relating to agriculture on the Pacific coast—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ELLSWORTH: The petition of Camilla Lowell and other ladies, of the District of Columbia, for legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District except for medicinal, mechanical, and scientific purposes—to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania: The petition of Thomas C. Robinson and other citizens of Washingtonville, Pennsylvania, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FOSTER: The petition of Jacob Hershey and others, citizens of Woodington, Ohio, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. FRYE: The petition of the Union Congregational church of East Bridgewater, Massachusetts, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of R. J. Boylan and others, citizens of Illinois, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Oliver Pope and others, citizens of Windham, Maine, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of the Church of the Pilgrimage of Plymouth, Massachusetts, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. GAUSE: The petition of citizens of Arkansas, that the Government be made responsible for articles lost while being transported in the mails—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HASKELL: The petition of the People's Christian Temperance Society of Edgerton, Kansas, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. KEIGHTLEY: The petition of Mrs. T. E. Egbert and 50 other ladies, of White Pigeon, Michigan, for legislation to make effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAPHAM: The petition of Julia A. Schutt, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of women of West Bloomfield, New York, for legislation to make effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PRICE: The petition of the Reform Episcopal church of Newark, New Jersey, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of the Grand Division Sons of Temperance of Illinois, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Women's Christian Temperance Union of Shell Rock, Iowa, and 64 others, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. REA: The petition of 50 women of Caldwell County, Missouri, for such legislation as will make effective the anti-polygamy law of 1862—to the same committee.

By Mr. STEWART: Memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking that, as a condition-precedent to the extension of the time for the completion of the Hastings and Dakota Railway, said railway company be required to release all claim to certain sections of land settled upon by residents of the county of Renville in said State—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. STONE, of Iowa: The petition of M. J. Johnson and 77 others, of Henry County, Iowa, that the laws against polygamy be made effective—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of 278 women of Henry and Van Buren Counties, Iowa, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. STONE, of Michigan: The petition of J. E. Wells and 140 others, citizens of Michigan, wholesale grocers and dealers in sugar, against the passage of the Robbins sugar bill—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of John Farlow and others, citizens of Level Plains, New Jersey, for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 1, 1879.

The Senate met at eight o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the three bills from the House which came yesterday be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Where are they now?

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are they the bills the second reading of which was objected to?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are on the Calendar. They will be now read the second time and referred.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were read the second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. No. 6516) to amend section 3697 of the Revised Statutes with respect to interest on surrendered or called bonds;

A bill (H. R. No. 6515) respecting protests or appeals from decisions of collectors of customs, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 248) in regard to remission of duties. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. No. 791) to establish a land district in the Black Hills, in the Territory of Dakota, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading.

The bill (H. R. No. 1737) to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to convey by deed to the board of education of the district of Harper's Ferry, West Virginia, a lot of ground (No. 2 in block B) with the buildings thereon, for the use of the common schools, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading.

The bill (H. R. No. 5103) to extend the time for payment of pre-emptors on certain public lands in the State of Minnesota was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading.

The bill (H. R. No. 1160) to extend the provisions of an act approved June 22, 1874, entitled "An act for the relief of settlers on railroad lands," was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading.

The bill (H. R. No. 1051) for the protection of settlers on the public lands of the United States was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading.

PRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the resolution I offered this afternoon before the adjournment be sent to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was so referred.

FOREIGN WINES AND LIQUORS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the Senator from West Virginia to waive the call for a moment. A few days ago I presented and had referred to the Committee on Finance two resolutions asking for information; one from the Secretary of the Treasury, the other from the Secretary of State, in regard to the product of wine, &c. The information is very important to the people of my State. As it is very well known that during the morning hour I have been absent on committees for a week or more, and unable to call up these resolutions—they are favorably reported from the Committee on Finance—I ask the Senate to consider the resolutions at this time, and pass them.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let them be read for information.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to transmit to the Senate, as early as is practicable, any information in the possession of the State Department, or that may be obtained through the consular service, relating to the methods of production and preparation and the nature of the various kinds of fermented and alcoholic liquors imported into the United States from foreign ports at which are stationed officers of the consular service of the United States; also, relating to the laws and customs of trade in force and prevailing at such ports affecting the purity of such liquors and the genuineness of labels and marks designating them, and to what extent such laws and customs and the regulations of the consular service prevent or encourage the importation into the United States of falsified, adulterated, and falsely designated wines and other alcoholic liquors; also, to inform the Senate as to what legislation may be necessary, if any, for the regulation of the consular service in order to encourage the commerce only in pure and genuine wines, brandies, and other alcoholic liquors, and to prevent the importation of falsifications, adulterated compounds, and falsely labeled articles; also, to furnish the Senate such information as may be obtained concerning the internal systems of taxation or prohibitions which may affect the exports of the United States to foreign countries, in addition to the tariffs or customs taxes of such countries, and, so far as is practicable, concerning the quantities of American alcohols and other articles exported from the United States, which are consumed in the countries to which they are exported, or, if re-exported, the ultimate destinations of such articles; also, information showing what proportions of articles imported into the United States are the products of the countries from which they are so imported, and the original sources of articles imported from countries not producing the same; also, showing the nature, characteristics, quantities, and values of alcoholic liquors imported into foreign ports from any countries other than the United States.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. There is another resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for other information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate, as early as is practicable, such information as may be in the possession of the Treasury Department, or that may be obtained from collectors of customs and through any other agencies of the Department, showing the relative quantities and natures of the various kinds of fermented and alcoholic liquors imported into the United States from foreign countries; the percentage of absolute alcohol contained in each of the several kinds; the relative quantities of imported wines which are fortified with alcohol and exceed in strength 13 per cent. of absolute alcohol, and on which the tariff for still wines is collected; the relative quantities of such imported articles that are re-exported without paying customs taxes; together with such information as the Department possesses or may obtain, showing in what proportions these articles are imported from different countries; and, so far as is practicable, the original sources of such articles or any of their ingredients when the same are imported from countries which do not produce them.

The Secretary of the Treasury is also directed to inform the Senate concerning the facilities which the Treasury Department has, or may require, for the prevention of the importation of falsified, adulterated, and falsely labeled or designated fermented and alcoholic beverages; also to inform the Senate to what extent the commerce and public revenues of the United States may be affected by taxing wines, fortified with alcohol, according to the tax on spirits for each degree of alcohol contained in such wines in excess of 13 per cent.; also to furnish a statement showing the quantities of alcohols, wines, and other alcoholic liquors, produced in this country, which are exported to foreign countries, and the destinations of the same, showing also their alcoholic strength and other characteristics.

Mr. SARGENT. The word "showing" should be "as may show." I move to strike out the word "showing" and insert the words "as may show."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending amendment is that of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] which will be read for information.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and settle the claims of the late Captain Sam C. Reid, commander, and the owners, officers, and crew of the American private armed brig General Armstrong, belonging to the port of New York, destroyed by a British fleet in the neutral port of Fayal, in September, 1-14, as proved before and audited and adjusted by the Court of Claims in its report submitted to Congress, amounting to the total sum of $70,739; and that he be, and is hereby, further authorized and directed to pay to the said claimants, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, the amount which shall be thus ascertained to be due them respectively, not to exceed said sum adjudicated by said Court of Claims, which is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WINDOM. I thought the sundry civil bill was before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thought so. This is an amendment proposed to it.

Mr. WINDOM. It is a private claim bill. I raise the point of order on that, that it is a private claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is apparent.

Mr. COCKRELL. I accompanied the presentation of the amendment with a letter from the Secretary of State, and I now desire that it be read. The letter of the Secretary will only take a moment, and then I will make a point, and the Chair can decide the question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 25, 1879.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 8th ultimo, inclosing the memorial of Sam C. Reid, in behalf of the claimants of the private armed brig General Armstrong, and requesting, "with as little delay as convenient, any recent information in the possession of" this Department, with its views as to the justice and equity of this claim."

In reply, I have to state that, by Executive reference of the 25th ultimo to this Department of a communication addressed to the President by Sam C. Reid in behalf of the claimants of the General Armstrong, relating to a certain claim growing out of the liability of the Government under a treaty with Portugal of the 1st September, 1851, submitting this claim to arbitration, the matter was laid before the law officer of this Department for a thorough examination. His report, with the papers referred to, is submitted herewith for your information.

This Department has no hesitation in approving of the justice and equity of the claimant's appeal to his own Government.

The attending circumstances would seem to justify this Department in recommending that the report, with the papers herewith inclosed, be presented to the Senate for the consideration and action of that body, with a view to an appropriation.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM M. EVARTS.

HON. WILLIAM WINDOM,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In kindness to the reading clerk the Chair will read the thirtieth rule of the Senate:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

The Chair fails to find the law cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. There is an inadvertency in printing, or rather in making up the amendment, on page 29.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senator speaking in reference to this amendment?

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir. I propose an amendment to the bill on page 29, from line 687 to line 693. I call the attention of the chairman to it. The original House bill read—

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for the maintenance of revenue steamers on the coast of Alaska, $20,000.

The Committee on Appropriations, intending to state more definitely what it should be, intended to say:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to use revenue steamers for the protection of the interests of the Government on the seal islands and sea-otter hunting-grounds, and the enforcement of the provisions of law in Alaska, $20,000.

But in writing it out the first words were left off. I move to prefix to the amendment already adopted by the Committee of the Whole these words:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to use revenue steamers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move to amend on line 711, page 30, by striking out "seventy-five" and inserting "ninety," so as to make the amount appropriated $390,000 instead of $375,000. The object is to enable the Chief Signal Officer to lay a cable for a signal station on Block Island from the mainland to Block Island.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is the amendment?

Mr. WINDOM. It is adding to the $375,000 allowed for the Signal Service $15,000. That I believe has the indorsement of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims to offer the following amendment to come in on page 49, after line 1195; it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

For compensation to William A. McKenney for compiling the reports of the Committee on Private Land Claims of the Senate and House of Representatives from the Nineteenth Congress to the present time, and for making indexes and correcting proofs, the sum of $750 in addition to his pay as clerk of the Committee on Private Land Claims; which compilation is hereby ordered to be printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I now have an amendment to propose that does not contain any appropriation but is simply an authority to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I ask that it may be considered. It is to come in on page 3, at the end of line 47. I send it to the Chair to be read; and also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject.

The SECRETARY. After line 47 it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to repair and extend for the use of the Government offices at Cleveland, Ohio, in accordance with specifications submitted by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the Government building at Cleveland, Ohio: Provided, That the cost of the same shall not exceed $150,000.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that the letter be read. The amendment I offered makes no appropriation now.

Mr. WINDOM. I am afraid I shall have to raise the point of order on the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope this is not out of order.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it is subject to two or three points of order.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know what they are.

Mr. WINDOM. In the first place, it is legislation, and in the second place it is not moved by any standing committee.

Mr. THURMAN. But it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I introduced it and had it referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not help it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Ohio introduce it in behalf of any standing committee?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Individually?

Mr. THURMAN. Individually.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And it has not the approbation of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have not reported it, at any rate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. FERRY. By direction of the Committee on Claims I offer an amendment which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. On page 76, after line 1851, insert:

For compensation to Warren P. Sutton, commercial agent of the United States at Matamoras, at the rate of his annual salary for a period covered by the time occupied by him in reaching his post over the time usually consumed in transit, the delay having been occasioned by detention through the enforcement by the authorities of the State of Texas of quarantine regulations against the port of Matamoras, the sum of $456.50.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that that is a private claim, and is not admissible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. FERRY. It comes within the last paragraph of Rule 29. This has been allowed by the Committee on Claims, and has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That does not help it as far as the thirtieth rule is concerned. It is a private claim.

Mr. FERRY. I am aware that it is a private claim, but Rule 29 covers the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire now to renew the amendment which I offered before the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations were concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, after line 1182, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office may make settlement with parties who have heretofore cut and removed timber from the public lands on such terms and conditions as he may deem just, and the moneys arising from such settlement shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is legislation. Mr. PADDOCK. If it is legislation it is legislation in the right direction. It is putting money into the Treasury instead of taking it out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not at all sure of that.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer the following amendment to come in on page 39 at line 936:

For the improvement of Stanton Square, and the pedestal of the statue of General Greene, $5,000.

This amendment comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WITHERS. And reported by them?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not reported by them. Stanton Square, Mr. President, has never had anything done for it. It is adorned with one of the finest works of art in the city, and it certainly should be put in order. Other squares have received large benefactions from the Government; Franklin Square has received $65,000 besides $8,000 the original cost of the purchase of the land. This has received nothing. It stands at the center of eight streets, and at the intersection of Massachusetts and Maryland avenues.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is evident that we shall not get through this bill unless points of order are made on all amendments as they come up.

Mr. ANTHONY. We cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want the Senator from Rhode Island to hear me and I will speak a little louder. It is evident to my mind that unless all the objections the rules will allow are made to amendments we shall be here all night offering them. I wish now to say to the Senate that so far as one member is concerned, if he can get the floor he intends to raise questions of order on all amendments, and that is for the purpose of economy to the Government, and in the right direction.

Mr. ANTHONY. This amendment is not subject to any point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One moment, if the Senator pleases. In my judgment it is the duty of the Senate, as carefully as we can, to prevent things being done without consideration. I hope, therefore, that Senators will take notice that I intend, whatever others may do, to raise all points of order that can be raised, and I hope the chairman of the committee will protect the bill, and not let things go on it that do not belong to it. The chairman will excuse me for using that expression, for I know that I have assumed what belongs to him several times, and I beg his pardon for it.

Mr. WINDOM. I am much obliged to my very kind friend from West Virginia and hope he will take the lesson to himself and in the very near future follow it. I certainly have made the best effort I could to protect the bill. I think I have been reasonably strict in that matter. I will, however, receive any assistance from my friend; and I hope that he may get into practice as early as possible, for he will find it a very unpleasant task, I think, in the future.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is always customary when a Senator proposes to do a harsh thing to give notice that he will do it after this case. [Laughter.] Therefore, I hope the Senator from West Virginia will let this go through and enforce his rule upon all others; and if he will do that, I will join him in regard to all others. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is very kind in the Senator. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to this amendment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir. So far as I know as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, this is the first I have heard of the amendment. I do not know whether it was before the committee or not. I ask the chairman whether he knows that it was referred?

Mr. WINDOM. Does the Senator refer to the matter presented by the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. I will say to the Senator that his lecture to me was entirely without any good ground upon that point, for I remember very well that the matter was before the Committee on Appropriations and I took the word of the Senator from Rhode Island most unhesitatingly that it was reported by a standing committee. Consequently, it was not in my power to raise a point of order upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Rhode Island to say that this amendment had been moved by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If so, it is in order.

Mr. DAWES. I reported it myself from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and on my motion it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to explain for myself, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, (and I think I attend every meeting of that committee,) that this was the first time I had heard of the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island. Therefore, I took the liberty to ask the chairman whether in his recollection it had been before the committee. Of course I shall accept what the Senator from Rhode Island has said; but it may not have reached the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment: it is agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer an amendment which has been reported by them, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to come in immediately after line 1919, on page 79:

For the annual rent of a suitable building and grounds for a post-office for the city of Washington, District of Columbia, $10,000, or so much thereof as shall be agreed upon by the Postmaster-General, for a term not exceeding two years, and for altering and fitting up the property to be leased, $5,000. And the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of State, and the postmaster of said city, or a majority of them, are hereby authorized to select the property to be leased.

I simply desire to state that the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment on that page to purchase the Centennial building for a city post-office. They were impressed, as was the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with the absolute necessity of making room in the General Post-Office building. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds were not prepared to recommend any purchase at this time. There were a variety of sites offered and a great deal of controversy, if I may use that term, between competing points. The committee were of opinion that it was economy and wisdom to rent some suitable place for say a couple of years while a proper site was being selected either upon the grounds owned by the United States in this city or by a proper purchase. This interferes with the interest of no party who desires to sell it; commits the United States to no point; but relieves the Post-Office Department from a pressure which it is absolutely necessary for the transaction of the business of the Post-Office Department to relieve it from; and it involves simply the expense of a rental for two years and leaves the selection of the building to the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of State, and the postmaster of the city.

Mr. BECK. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question for information. A communication has been handed to me since the Senate adjourned, saying that in consequence of the erection of the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the Sixth Auditor and all his force can be removed from the Post-Office Department to the Treasury Department, and then there will be no pressing necessity for a change at present. How is that?

Mr. DAWES. The matter was discussed before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Postmaster-General and the officials from the Treasury said that the duties of the Sixth Auditor are so closely connected with, confined, in fact, to the business of the Post-Office Department that it was almost absolutely necessary to have it located in that building. It was the opinion of all parties that it would not be practicable to remove the Sixth Auditor's Bureau from that building.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 14.

Mr. DAWES. I do not care to force this upon the Senate. If the Senate does not desire to provide these accommodations, it certainly will not grieve me at all, and I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. DORSEY. I have one or two amendments from the Committee on Appropriations and one from the Committee on the District of Columbia, which I desire to offer. On page 111, after line 240, of section 2, I move that the following be inserted:

And the commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to adjust and pay William Forsyth, late surveyor of the said District—

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a private claim.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. To pay for what; and how much?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is raised that this is a private claim, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope the Chair will not sustain the point of order until he knows what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair heard the amendment.

Mr. DORSEY. The face of the amendment, I am sure, could not show the Chair what it means.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again reported.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. DORSEY. Now I will state, if the Chair will permit me, what the case is. As I understand it, Mr. Forsyth for many years had been the surveyor of this District. Some two years ago he was discharged from that office. When he left his position of surveyor he took with him a very large number of plans and papers which he claimed to be his own, but which the District authorities claimed belonged to the records of the District. He retains those maps and surveys to this day, the District commissioners refusing to pay him his salary until he returns them, and he refusing to return them until he is paid. It is thought if this amendment is adopted that the commissioners can adjust the matter with him so as to recover these reports and pay him whatever is due him for his services, which is but a small amount.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment contravenes the thirtieth rule of the Senate, and the Chair rules that it is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. I offer the following amendment: on page 79, at the end of line 1930, insert:

The sum of $1,483.34 to pay J. H. Jenkins for discharging the duties of secretary of the Territory of Colorado from April 6 to June 30, 1875, or so much as may be necessary to settle the accounts of the said Jenkins with the United States.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that that is a private claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point is sustained.

Mr. DORSEY. I had not gotten through with the amendments I had in my hands when I was taken off my feet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator had taken his seat. The Chair now recognizes him.

Mr. DORSEY. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment, to come in on page 69, after the word "dollars," in line 1680:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay S. B. Pennybaker, John H. Gittings, R. S. Atkinson, James B. Bailey, T. B. McLean, and James R. Richardson, acting pages in the Senate, the difference in the pay received by them respectively and that received by the regular pages of the Senate, from December 2, 1878, to April 30, 1879, inclusive, and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point that that has not been reported by a standing committee.

Mr. DORSEY. I do not know whether the Committee on Appropriations is a standing committee or not, but I have understood that it was.

Mr. WINDOM. This was doubtless before the Appropriations Committee, because there was a numberless array of that class of cases; but the point I raise is that it has not been reported or recommended by any standing committee.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope the chairman of the committee will not raise the point of order in this case. These boys have been appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Arkansas to say that he moved this amendment in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, sir, I made that statement, and the names of the members of the committee who recommended it are on the back of the amendment I sent to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is a question of fact which the Chair must leave to the members of the committee.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Appropriations Committee has recommended it, I certainly retire from the contest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. So far as my knowledge goes the Appropriations Committee never agreed to it; on the contrary, my recollection is very distinct that the Appropriations Committee declined to put it on the bill or recommend it. I make that statement, and I think the fact is so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair cannot settle this question of fact as to the action of the committee. It is not his province.

Mr. WITHERS. The names of the members of the committee who signed the recommendation are on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. I have another amendment of the same kind coming from the same source:

To pay William H. Manly for services as page in the Senate for second session. Forty-fourth Congress, $101.50.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In regard to the question that was before us a moment ago, I stated that as far as my knowledge went the names that had been read (and so it is as to the present amendment just offered) did not come from the Committee on Appropriations, and I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and others will bear me out. At first the Chair stated that it was a question of fact, and so it is, and I hope he will now allow me to say that what I said was the fact, and I think there is no member of the committee who will differ with me on the fact. If that be so, then I submit to the Chair whether the amendment is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon the assumption of the Senator from West Virginia it is not, but what is the report of the committee is a question of fact which the Chair must leave to the Senate as it comes.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I admit that. I ask now the members of the committee whether or not the fact is as I have stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question of veracity between respective Senators is not for the Chair.

Mr. WITHERS. So far as I am concerned, I signed the paper requesting that this amendment might be offered, and I know that several other members of the committee also signed it. I do not know who did sign it; but the signatures on the paper will develop the fact.

Mr. DORSEY. When I presented that amendment I said what the face of the paper showed. I think there are five or six names on it. A majority of the committee signed the paper at all events. In addition to that I asked the chairman if he had any objection, and he said there was none, in his opinion, and I offered it as coming from the Appropriation Committee, not by any verbal statement, because they had signed their names to it.

Mr. BECK. I should be glad to know what the amendment is. I have lost sight of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The amendment of Mr. DORSEY was read.

Mr. BECK. I have only this to say, that I have been struggling all the time to get these pages paid, and I have no doubt they ought to be paid.

Mr. WINDOM. Doubtless what the Senator from Arkansas states is correct. There have been times to-day when at least half a dozen gentlemen have asked me questions at the same time, and if I gave the answer which he states, (and doubtless I did or he would not state it,) I certainly did not understand what he asked me. The fact is that the Committee on Appropriations were so overrun with applications from pages, from messengers, from doorkeepers, from every conceivable employé almost about this building, for some difference in salary that would make each one equal to somebody else, that I had resolved that under no circumstances would I vote for any such amendment. I remember distinctly that one very agreeable young gentleman came to me this morning or yesterday evening and asked if I would not agree to his amendment. I said, "No; I will not agree to any one under these circumstances;" and I authorized him as a page to go and say to every other page and every doorkeeper and every messenger about this building that I will vote nothing to make up the difference between his salary and anybody else's salary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the pending amendment offered by consent of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Though a majority of the members of the committee may be got in the Senate to sign a paper, that, I submit, is not sufficient to make it in order as an amendment. It must have unanimous consent if it is done outside of the committee meeting, and this was done outside of the committee, not in committee. Otherwise all that would be necessary would be to get five members of the committee to sign something, and the other four might know nothing about it, and that would be reported as coming from the committee. That can hardly be so. I submit that this amendment is out of order from the fact that it has not been before the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I find my name attached to that paper, and I see it relates to a number of pages about this floor, young boys who are acting as pages although receiving a smaller compensation than the regular pages. I signed it having in view the fact that on the deficiency bill we put a large number of employés of one kind and another, and therefore I felt that an injustice had been done to some of these boys who are doing us faithful service here, and therefore I signed it. I think if we are to regulate on these appropriation bills differences of salary, we ought to treat as nearly as we can all the employés alike; but what will be the final fate of this amendment I should not like to undertake to prophesy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the pending amendment here by consent of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WALLACE. This subject-matter was considered in the Appropriations Committee and rejected.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is so.

Mr. WALLACE. The subject-matter was not brought to the attention of any member of the committee by the chairman of the committee on the floor. The pages perambulated the Chamber and appealed to several members of the committee, and I believe got a majority. I declined to sign it. If the paper is here by the authority of the committee, it is in that form and none other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As many as are of opinion that these amendments are presented by consent of the Committee on Appropriations will say "ay;" those opposed, "no." [putting the question.] By the sound the noes have it. The noes have it; and the amendments are not before the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. I offer the following amendment as a separate section:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to contract for the purchase of a proper site in the city of New Castle, State of Delaware, and the erection thereon of a building proper and sufficient for the accommodation and use of the post-office, deputy collector of customs, and internal-revenue officials: Provided, That the cost of said site shall not exceed the sum of $3,000, and of the said building when finished, $12,000; and the said sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for payment for the said site and building.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator if that is reported from a standing committee?

Mr. BAYARD. This amendment comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It proposes that the sum of $15,000, including the cost of the land and the building, shall be appropriated to put up, for the use of the United States Government at the town of New Castle, in Delaware, a building proper for a custom-house, post-office, and office of internal revenue. The building when completed is not to exceed the cost of $15,000—a simple, commodious, and I will say to the Senate a necessary and proper building, such a one as any private individual having the same business at that point and the same interest that the United States Government has, would not hesitate to erect for his own use.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to say a single word? I raise the point of order if it applies because I feel that I must apply the same rule to others. I want to say to the Senator, however, that I know the amendment was before the Committee on Appropriations. I voted for it there, and I will vote for it here again. I believe it is right.

Mr. WITHERS. But it was rejected by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WINDOM. I know it was, and it is now before us on our own individual responsibility.

Mr. BAYARD. This is an appropriation recommended by one of the standing committees of this body, and it comes before the Senate on its own merits, and its own merits I think are very obvious, if the Senate will give two minutes of their time to listen to the case. The amendment is thoroughly in order. There is no objection to it that I know of as an amendment to the present bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that this was moved originally by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BAYARD. It was offered as an amendment by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to this present bill and the Committee on Appropriations have had four days' notice of it.

Mr. WINDOM. That is true.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. BLAINE. I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say one word.

Mr. BAYARD. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations four days ago.

Mr. MORRILL. In the winter season the port of Philadelphia is so frozen up that it is impossible to do the custom-house business there, and it is therefore necessary to have this port at New Castle.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall not oppose the adoption of this amendment, but I think the country has yet to see the instance in which a building for a post-office, an internal-revenue office, &c., can be built for $12,000. It will cost nearer $100,000 before it is finished. I will make that prediction.

Mr. BAYARD. No, sir; it is when completed not to exceed the amount appropriated. We do things in a sensible, business like way.

Mr. SARGENT. The thing has been here over and over again. We have put limits on the cost of buildings, and in every instance the cost exceeds two, three, or four times the first limit, unless the amount originally named is very large, and then it is increased 20, 30, or 40 per cent. I have no confidence at all that the building can be built for the price named.

Mr. BLAINE. Even if it did cost as much as is supposed—I am no judge of that—one says it will cost $15,000 and another $100,000—I know that here is a harbor of refuge for a very large amount of the coasting trade of the country, and all facilities ought to be afforded at that place. What is asked is very moderate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I offer the following amendment: on page 5, line 104, after the word "thousand," insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

For salary of one superintendent for the house of refuge on the coast of Florida, $1,000; and of one superintendent for the life-saving and life-boat stations on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, $1,000, and of one on the coasts of Lakes Ontario and Erie, $1,500.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point that this amendment has not been recommended by any standing committee of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the Senator from Michigan on that question.

Mr. FERRY. I am aware of that, but I am very sorry to hear from a member of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard an unwillingness to increase the salary of the superintendent of the life-saving station on Lakes Ontario and Erie from $1,000 to $1,500. I want it to go to the country that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations interposes his objection to the increase of this salary to $1,500. Here are superintendents, men who have the care of the lives and property upon the sea, men who are trained to the sea, who are obliged to have sufficient qualifications to train other men to these duties, who peril their own lives to protect the lives of others, and yet the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations seeks to keep their salary at a thousand dollars. I want it known.

Mr. WINDOM. If they train other men to their duties, they should have trained the Senator from Michigan to have had this amendment recommended by some standing committee before offering it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan has the sympathy of the Chair, but the rule is imperative. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor to offer the following amendment, which has been before the Committee on Appropriations: on page 58, after line 1406, insert:

For cataloguing and caring for the collection now in charge of the Bureau of Education, including educational apparatus and appliances, articles of school furniture and models of school buildings, illustrative of foreign and domestic systems and methods of education, and for preparing the same, $5,000.

For expense in wrapping, tying, directing, and packing publications of the Bureau of Education for distribution, $2,000.

Mr. WINDOM. Has that been recommended by a standing committee?

Mr. BURNSIDE. It is recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WINDOM. I know it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, but I did not know that it was recommended by the other committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My impression is that the amendment is in order, having been recommended by a standing committee. I wish to say that the Committee on Appropriations gave considerable attention to this bureau.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The amendment is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior also.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that the Committee on Appropriations took it into consideration, and perhaps gave more attention to it than almost any other bureau, from the fact that they wanted to be thoroughly informed upon the subject, and we came to the conclusion that this appropriation ought not to be made upon the merits.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The second appropriation of $2,000 is precisely the same as one that was made last year; only it is $500 less. The one of last year was $2,500, and the Commissioner only asks for $2,000 now. The appropriation of $5,000 is for cataloguing and putting the museum in order; and I believe from personal knowledge that it is a necessary appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONOVER. I offer the following amendment to come in on page 4 after line 68:

For the purpose of constructing a suitable public building in the city of Tallahassee, Florida, for the use of the United States courts, the post-office, the surveyor-general, the United States land office, and other Government offices, the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, however, That no money hereby appropriated shall be expended for the purpose aforesaid until a valid and sufficient title to the site of said building shall be vested in the United States.

Mr. WINDOM. I regret to have to raise the point of order on my friend from Florida, but I am afraid he has not the recommendation of any standing committee.

Mr. CONOVER. I hope that I violate no confidence, but I think the chairman of the committee stated to me in the committee-room a few days ago that he would not raise the point of order on that amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINDOM. I most humbly apologize to the Senator from Florida. The committee-room was very much crowded, and in order to get rid of the consideration of this question I believe I did say I would not raise the question of order. I think the amendment is in order under the circumstances. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. CONOVER. I think if I am not mistaken my friend from West Virginia and my friend from Minnesota, and also the Senator from Arkansas, were there—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no mistake in the rule.

Mr. CONOVER. I hope the point of order will be withdrawn.

Mr. McPHERSON. I offer an amendment, on page 62, to strike out these words:

For the completion of the work of the United States entomological commission, under the Department of the Interior, in the special investigation of the Rocky Mountain locust, or grasshopper, and the cotton-worm, the sum of $10,000.

I find that provision on this subject is made in another appropriation bill. This confers on the Department of the Interior the investigation of the grasshopper and the cotton-worm. I believe last year an appropriation was made to the Department of Agriculture for this same purpose, and whatever work has been done has been done under the control of that Department, and the appropriation has been made for it in another appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey say that this is provided for elsewhere?

Mr. McPHERSON. On page 86 of the legislative, &c., bill, I find that there is a provision giving the Department of Agriculture the sum of $5,000 for a like purpose, and I have understood from the Department of Agriculture that the work is nearly completed and requires but a small sum.

Mr. PADDOCK. The legislative bill to which the Senator refers has not yet been considered by the Senate, and this is simply the continuation of that inquiry which was authorized three years ago, and exactly that. It is proposed now to continue it in terms. The Senator labors under a misapprehension when he says the appropriation of last year was made for disposition by the Department of Agriculture. The appropriation last year was made simply to continue that which had been commenced before and that which had been prosecuted under and by the Interior Department. This is in continuation of that, and there have been three years of continuous service, starting, as I have said, under the Interior Department.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will state that the Department of Agriculture has had full charge of this matter, and the entomologist has been under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture. In order to perfect this perhaps it would be as well not to strike out the whole clause, but to strike out in line 1518 the words "Department of the Interior" and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture" instead. I withdraw the original motion and move that amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not think that is advisable. The work commenced under the Interior Department, the reports have been made to the Interior Department, the work has been done through that Department; and while I should be glad to give all the jurisdiction that it is possible to give to the Department of Agriculture, at the same time I think it would be better under the circumstances to continue this matter as it started.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey desire his amendment put to the Senate?

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes, sir. I move to amend in line 1518 by striking out "Department of the Interior" and inserting in lieu thereof "Commissioner of Agriculture."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MORGAN. I first brought this subject to the attention of the Senate during the last session in reference to the cotton-worm. The investigation of the cotton-worm has all the time been under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, but the investigation of the grasshopper has been under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. Now, the bill making provision for legislative and executive expenses provides for the continuation of the investigation of the cotton-worm by that Department. If this provision be kept in this bill it will lead of course to confusion and unnecessary expenditure. I think, in reference to the further prosecution of the investigation of the cotton-worm, that it should be by the Commissioner of Agriculture. I am informed by the Commissioner of Agriculture that there is no necessity for the further investigation of the locust or grasshopper, so far as he knows. That matter is now completed. I have nothing to do with that, however. But I desire to have the prosecution for the investigation in reference to the cotton-worm kept in charge of the Department of Agriculture, where it has been all the time hitherto. That is the only interest I have in this amendment. If you retain the investigation of the grasshopper, the amount here will not be sufficient; but if you confine the investigation to the cotton-worm alone, the amount named in the clause will be sufficient, and it ought to be continued in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BECK. Without having very accurate information about this matter, I propose to amend, on page 62, line 1520, by striking out the words "and the cotton-worm," and reducing the same from $10,000 to $5,000; so that the paragraph will read:

For the completion of the work of the United States entomological commission, under the Department of the Interior, in the special investigation of the Rocky Mountain locust or grasshopper, the sum of $5,000.

Then the House and Senate together in conference can ascertain exactly how the laws are. My recollection is that we gave the Department of Agriculture the grasshopper investigation, and that they have all the facts about the subject. If so, an appropriation can be made for them to complete that, as they have all these facts. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill we have a provision such as the Senator from Alabama wants. Thus by diminishing the appropriation in the sundry civil bill, at the bottom of page 62, from $10,000 to $5,000, and striking out the words "and the cotton-worm," the investigation can be had and the true condition of the matter ascertained.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the Commissioner of Agriculture informs me there is no money for the investigation he desires. I want the grasshopper to have the honorable name of "the Rocky Mountain locust" and to have that investigation continued, but the amendment leaves it all open.

Mr. INGALLS. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey ought not to prevail. He probably is not aware that immediately after the great invasion of locusts in the Mississippi Valley a special commission was appointed, consisting of three entomologists, of whom Professor Riley, of Saint Louis, was the chief, under the Department of the Interior, for the purpose of conducting specially the investigation into the habitation and into the methods and into the habitats of the locusts, and that during the past year they conducted their investigations in the Northwest, and have prepared a volume of very great interest and value to the agricultural community of the West.

Instead of this sum being reduced it ought to be increased. I saw Professor Riley this afternoon, and am informed by him that in order to carry out the investigation they have commenced they really need this year the sum of $15,000 rather than $10,000. I need not say to those Senators from the West who have been familiar with the ravages committed by the locusts during the past ten years, especially the Senators from Texas and from Missouri, as well as those from elsewhere, that the results of that investigation have been of very great consequence to the agriculture of that valley.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey will not prevail, because he is misled by supposing that the investigation proposed by this clause and the amount appropriated in the legislative bill refer to the same subject. They do not. I hope the Senate will not agree to his amendment, because I am very confident that the sum ought to be increased rather than diminished.

Mr. BECK. How would it do to strike out the words, in line 1520, "and the cotton-worm," so that it may be left open to the conference committee to examine the question?

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from New Jersey would have no objection, I should prefer to have those words stricken out, and have the appropriation on page 86 in the legislative bill increased by so much as the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK,] for instance, may deem necessary. But we certainly feel that the appropriation for investigating depredations of the locust ought not to be diminished. During the last year or two, when they invaded the valley, the actual loss to the agriculture of the West was not less than $50,000,000 by very accurate estimates.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to say to the Senator from Kansas that I accepted the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky only from the fact that there is in the legislative bill, at page 86, an appropriation of $5,000 for the cotton-worm. I supposed that an appropriation of $5,000 for each purpose in each of the bills, one being under the head of the Department of Agriculture and the other under the Department of the Interior, would be perfectly right, and therefore I advocated that proposition.

Mr. MAXEY. The beginning of this investigation into the grasshopper and cotton-worm was in the summer of 1876 in the Senate, and the policy was adopted of having an investigation into the habitat of both the cotton-worm and the grasshopper. The proposition here covers both. It is said that there is an additional provision made to the extent of $5,000 in another bill. It is also said by the Senator from Kansas that $10,000 is necessary for the grasshopper investigation alone. This is only $10,000, and an appropriation of $5,000 is provided by the other bill. I therefore think it is best to let this bill remain as it is, covering both the grasshopper and the cotton-worm. I speak with great disinterestedness on that point, because my State is affected with both the cotton-worm and the grasshopper.

I suggest that we leave this provision as it is as well as the provision in the legislative appropriation bill, and thus the two appropriations will probably cover the entire investigation, which certainly ought to be made, and which so far has resulted in good to the country.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw my amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is withdrawn.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will withdraw his amendment also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been withdrawn some time ago, the Chair understands.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand that my amendment now in lines 1518 and 1519, to strike out "the Department of the Interior" and insert "the Department of Agriculture," has been agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from New Jersey to accept the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McPHERSON. I supposed the amendment proposed by me changing "Department of the Interior" to "Department of Agriculture" had been adopted.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the Senator will withdraw his amendment after the statement which we have heard.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. The Chair supposed the Senator from New Jersey had accepted the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky in lieu of the one which the Senator from New Jersey proposed, and the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky was withdrawn.

Mr. McPHERSON. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Kentucky proposed a further amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair now understands the explanation. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. With the permission of the Senate, I will read an amendment which I propose to the bill now before the Senate, and which has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations. On page 36, after the word "dollars," in line 866, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to put the navy-yard at Pensacola in a state of efficiency, the sum of $243,700.

Mr. WINDOM. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida what standing committee recommends this amendment?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The head of the Navy Department recommends it.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that it is not recommended by any standing committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to submit an amendment, which has been reported by the Committee on Railroads. On page 31, after line 745, I move to insert:

Austin, Topolovampo: For report and survey of a postal and commercial route, permission being first obtained of Mexico, from the westernmost terminus of railroads in Texas to Topolovampo, on the Gulf of California, under the Secretary of War, $20,000; to be immediately available.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Colorado if that amendment is recommended by a standing committee of the Senate?

Mr. TELLER. I will say that the amendment is recommended by the Committee on Railroads, and that it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator states that it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. It was so referred several days since. It has been the third time reported from the Committee on Railroads, either in the shape in which it is now presented or in some other shape.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that that is not merely the appropriation of money recommended by a committee, but it provides for entering into relations with a foreign state to get leave to take possession of its territory for the operations of our Government, and that it is legislation of a general character on an appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained by the Chair.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the bill by striking out that portion of it commencing at line 572, on page 24, and ending with line 581, inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay the State of Georgia $72,396.94, in full settlement of advances made to the United States for the suppression of the Creek, Seminole, and Cherokee Indians in 1835, 1836, 1837, and 1838; and that said sum be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GORDON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin on what ground he proposes to strike out those words?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Wisconsin would like to hear upon what ground the clause ought to stay in, I take it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I understand that the principle embraced in that portion of the bill which I move to strike out is the same that was ruled out last evening upon a question of order. I understand that Georgia has been settled with by the General Government on a certain basis then agreed upon; that is, that all the payments made were first applied upon the principal and then upon the interest; but since the time of that settlement, as I am informed, the State of Maryland and the State of Massachusetts succeeded in some way in settling with the General Government upon a different basis, and applying the basis upon which the Government settled with Maryland and Massachusetts there remains now due to the State of Georgia the amount mentioned in that portion of the bill which I move to strike out.

Mr. GORDON. Do I understand the Senator to say that it is only interest?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I did not state that. I do not know whether it is or is not, but I understand that the State was settled with by the General Government, and paid up in full upon the basis of settlement then agreed upon by the State and the General Government.

Mr. GORDON. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The General Government never has settled in full with Georgia. It paid her at different times certain sums leaving a balance of principal unpaid at the last payment which is clearly stated in the papers furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury himself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear them read.

Mr. GORDON. I shall be very glad to have them read.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think I am so nearly right that the mistake is very slight. The amount that remained due as I am informed was very small.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The papers will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE.
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, in compliance with your request and as authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury, a tabular statement showing the amount of principal and interest, computed at the rate specified in the act of March 3, 1851, due the State of Georgia in connection with her claim for reimbursement of expenses incurred in suppressing Indian hostilities in 1835, 1836, 1837, and 1838, and the removal of the Cherokee Indians in the last-mentioned year.

To make the statement as complete as possible, I have included an item of $2,722.26 that has not yet been paid to the State of Georgia and two items amounting to $15,278.72 on account of interest on the sum of $9,835.30 advanced by the State of Georgia for the payment of militia called out in 1838 during the removal of the Cherokee Indians. This interest is necessarily estimated, as I have no record of the dates on which the principal was paid by the State.

The acts under which the claims of the State of Georgia have been audited are as follows:
August 11, 1842, March 3, 1851, March 3, 1853, and resolution approved February 9, 1859.

Very respectfully,

E. B. FRENCH, Auditor.

W. O. TUGGLE, Esq.,
Agent for the State of Georgia.

Mr. GORDON. Now I ask the Secretary to read the paper which I send to the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the paper.
The Secretary proceeded to read as follows:

CLAIMS OF THE STATE OF GEORGIA IN CONNECTION WITH THE SUPPRESSION OF INDIAN HOSTILITIES, 1835 TO 1838.

Tabular statement showing the amount of principal and interest, computed at the rate specified in the act of March 3, 1851.

Before the reading was concluded,
Mr. GORDON. I suggest that the Secretary read only what the Secretary of the Treasury says. Does the Senator from Vermont wish the rest of those figures read?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I can get along without them. I believe I understand the case.

Mr. GORDON. I certainly can, Mr. President. I do not ask to have it read. I now ask to have the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 10, 1879.

SIR: I inclose herewith the information from the Second and Third Auditors requested by you on the 4th instant.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

W. O. TUGGLE, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I notice on looking into this list of private claims that the Senate has had printed for general information, that the claims of Georgia in respect of this Indian business began by the payment of a balance claimed in the Twenty-third Congress, for which she had an act passed, approved the 19th of June, 1834. Then in the Twenty-seventh Congress, for reimbursement of expenses for protection against the Creeks and Seminoles there was an act approved the 11th of August, 1842, which covers the same description in the act itself that is covered by this provision of the bill. Again, in the Twenty-seventh Congress there was a provision for the same object, upon which I suppose the bill was passed. Then in the same Congress, at the next session, there was an allowance for compensation for the services of seven companies of her militia in the same war, that appeared not to have been brought in, approved the 4th of February, 1843. Then, in the Twenty-ninth Congress she put in a claim for compensation for further services by a resolution of her Legislature, which she failed to get. Again, in the Thirtieth Congress the claim was once more presented and considered, and the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged, and the petitioners had leave to withdraw. Then, after passing over sundry matters about the repayment of duties on railroad iron, &c., in the Thirty-first Congress a claim was presented by Georgia for compensation for the horses and equipments lost by volunteers and militia in these same Indian affairs. Also, in the Thirty-second Congress a claim was again presented for horses and equipments for volunteers, &c., which was not passed. Again, in the Thirty-first Congress, going back a little, (this table is not arranged in its proper chronological order in every instance,) a claim for interest on advances made for the suppression of Indian hostilities got through and was approved the 3d of March, 1851. That was passed, as it appears here, as a settlement of a claim for military service based on her own memorial. Then in the Thirty-second Congress also there was a claim by citizens of Georgia and Alabama, for indemnity for depredations by the Creek Indians in 1836 and 1837, which does not appear to have been passed. Coming to the year 1853, which does not appear here so far as I can see it, without taking too much of your time, sir, I see a provision of law in the tenth volume of the statutes made in the year 1853, to which I will call attention, later than any of these things that I have read. I will take 1852 first. The fourteenth section of one of the acts of that year, of the 31st of August, provided:

That in the settlement of the claims of the State of Georgia under the provisions of the act of the 11th August, 1842, providing for the settlement of the claims of Georgia for the services of her militia, which have heretofore been suspended or disallowed, the accounting officers of the Treasury Department allow and pay, upon proof that the State has allowed and paid the same, all accounts for forage, subsistence, hospital stores, medical services, and transportation which have not been heretofore allowed by the United States. That for the pay of mounted infantry the pay of cavalry be allowed; the same to be paid out of the fund appropriated by the act of the 11th of August, 1842.

Then in 1853, the next year, I believe there is another provision which I saw just now.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will allow me to call his attention to the acts, the settlement was made under three acts, the acts of August 11, 1842, March 3, 1851, and March 3, 1853.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was merely showing how carefully this whole thing had been scrutinized in the time of it and for about twenty years afterward, from time to time and year to year, until the last drop in the bucket apparently had been exhausted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. Is there objection to his proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have been obliged to refer so much to the statutes that my time has been consumed. The act of 1853 made a further provision upon the same subject, which I shall not take your time to read, but it reopened the thing again. Then another act of 1853 provided:

That for the settlement of the remaining unpaid claims of the States of Georgia and Alabama, for advances made in suppressing Indian hostilities, the Secretary of the Treasury pay to the State of Georgia her claims now remaining unpaid for moneys paid by the State in suppressing hostilities of the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians, in the year 1835, and since, upon proof that the sum was paid by the State; and that the provisions of the act of Congress relative—

To the former settlements with Georgia, &c., be applied. I condense in order to save your time, Mr. President.

The consequence is that immediately after these events occurred, now more than forty years ago, the State of Georgia presented her claims to the Treasury of the United States and they were considered; they were presented to the Congress of the United States and they were considered, and reconsidered, and again considered. Money was provided to have them audited and adjusted and paid, and as far as they were audited and allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, who were the judges between the United States and the States, they were paid. Having thus got the principal paid as far as the auditing officers of the Treasury would allow, because as in every case, as we all know, some items were disallowed and some were suspended, &c., a further provision was made for paying a large sum of interest, and that was paid. Now after the thing has slept for a period of twenty-five years, it is proposed to reopen it again upon the principle of squeezing out of the Second Auditor some items that had been disallowed before of principal, and out of the Third Auditor some recomputations of interest, (perhaps I have the auditors reversed, but no matter for that, out of one some principal and out of the other a recomputation of interest) by which the sum of seventy-odd thousand dollars is to be educed again, and I should imagine upon the same principle that at the end of twenty-five years more a much larger sum will be due, because interest accumulates rapidly.

I am told by the chief officer of the Treasury Department, to whom I have applied for information upon this matter since my attention was drawn to it, that the principle upon which this scheme proceeds in this clause will involve the Treasury in respect of the readjustment of others of these long since settled and disposed of claims to the extent, so far as is already known, of more than $2,000,000.

The question I wish to submit to the Senate, and then I shall have done, is whether it is consonant to the principles of good government all around, consonant to good policy, consonant to justice, to reopen stale claims in favor of a State any more than anybody else, and retry some method or other of building them up into claims upon the Treasury. There ought to be a period of repose; at last we should make an end of things of this kind. Of course the claim of the State of Georgia is no worse than that of others that fall under the same head. I am not speaking of that; I am only speaking to the Senate to set itself, if it can, against the proposition of reopening these things that have been settled in the time of them, readjusted again to guard against any accident and interest computed and all settled and wound up, and after a period of a quarter of a century not to start the whole thing again and to deplete the Treasury to the extent that this necessarily does.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I only wish to say one word, and then I shall leave this case to the sense of justice of the Senate. That word is this: this claim was sifted by the House of Representatives as probably no claim has ever been before sifted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must ask my friend to observe the rule. I dislike to make a point of order, but my friend will see that that is not the ground on which he should press us to allow the claim; we must sift it for ourselves.

Mr. GORDON. I beg my friend's pardon. It is not out of order, I suppose, to say that this provision comes to us from the House as a portion of this bill, adjudicated by that body and adjudged as belonging to the bill properly. It cannot, therefore, be ruled out on the point of order, I take it, made by the Senator from Wisconsin. If I understood him, he made a point of order upon this clause in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No point of order is pending.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The provision is in the text of the bill as it came to us from the House, and I move to strike it out.

Mr. GORDON. My answer to the Senator from Vermont is simply this: I should agree with him fully if this were a settled and closed claim, but that is not the fact. Georgia comes here claiming no reopening of an account that is already settled. She comes here with the evidence furnished by a Department of this Government that this claim has never been paid, and she asks Congress, as a matter of justice, to mete out to her the same treatment that has been given to other States of this Union. This money has never been paid her. The very closing sentence of this report is in the words, "which the United States Government has never paid."

The Senator from Vermont talks about the length of time that has transpired. I should like to inquire of the Senator how long was it after the war of 1812 before Massachusetts was settled with? Only in 1870. Fifty-eight years, more than half a century, having elapsed, Massachusetts came here and Congress allowed her what was due her. Here is a report with a bill coming to us from the House. We are asked now, on the plea that Georgia has delayed all this time to call for her money, to strip from the bill this honest demand.

Sir, I will not take the time of the Senate, for I am quite certain that the sense of justice of this body will agree with me that this money is due to Georgia.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, in my period of service in this body I have never known a claim that has lain twenty or thirty or forty years to be reopened unless there was something in it originally that would not bear opening. With regard to the Massachusetts claim, I cannot answer how that passed. I know that twenty-one years ago a proposition was made to reopen the accounts of all the States and settle them upon the basis of the Maryland settlement, which was upon the basis of mercantile usage, to cast interest from one payment up to another and then deduct the amount paid. At that time, twenty-one years ago, the amount of compound interest thus claimed by certain States for the war of 1812 was $17,800,000. With interest from that time to this I suppose it would amount now to about $35,000,000. Congress then decided that it would not reopen any more cases, although one had already been adjusted, to wit, that of Maryland, and to Maryland I think $374,000, compound interest, was paid.

Here is another case, if not precisely similar, almost precisely similar. By the computation which I hold in my hand I see that same old thing brought into the Georgia case that has been resisted in connection with the claims of the war of 1812. In the first place, Georgia has no claim against this Government. Neither had those States any claim against the Government, but because those States advanced money with a patriotic intent, therefore the Government said it would refund the principal to the States. There were no bonds issued, but an account was opened with these States upon the ledger of the Treasury of the United States with Massachusetts, Maine, Maryland, and each one of the old States that had advanced money. They were credited with the amount advanced, and as a sum was paid from time to time, when the Government had the means to pay, it was divided pro rata among the States. When a State was paid the principal, the account was closed and it was a final settlement. But in process of time they thought they could get interest; so a law was passed to give interest. They took the account, cast interest on the original amount at 6 per cent. down to the date of final payment. Then they took the items as they were paid, and the dates at which they were paid, and cast interest at 6 per cent. down to the date of final payment. There was another settlement, final settlement number 2. Then they reopened them again awhile ago to settle them upon the principle of mercantile usage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. Is there objection to the Senator from Michigan proceeding? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to violate any rule. This, as I understand, is substantially the same thing. You notice as the account was read from the Secretary's desk that it was computed in this same old way. I hope that we shall not again adopt a precedent so dangerous and so unjust as to pay compound interest to Georgia or any other State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin to strike out.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. SARGENT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—23.
Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Matthews,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Spencer,
Booth,	Ferry,	Morrill,	Teller,
Burnside,	Hoar,	Oglesby,	Wadleigh,
Cameron of Wis.,	Kirkwood,	Rollins,	Windom.
Chandler,	McMillan,	Sargent,
NAYS—37.
Bailey,	Dorsey,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Eaton,	Lamar,	Shields,
Beck,	Garland,	McDonald,	Thurman,
Blaine,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Grover,	Macey,	Wallace,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Merrimon,	Whyte,
Coke,	Harris,	Morgan,	Withers.
Conover,	Hereford,	Patterson,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Plumb,
Dennis,	Ingalls,	Ransom,

Bruce,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Paddock,
Chaffee,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Randolph,
Cockrell,	Howe,	Kellogg,	Sharon.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I offer this amendment, to be inserted on page 45, after line 1091:

To continue work on the iron-clad double-turreted monitors Terror, Amphitrite, Monadnock, and Puritan, and preserve them from deterioration, $100,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask my friend from California if that is recommended by a standing committee?

Mr. SARGENT. It is recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs. They recommended a much larger sum. This amount will prevent this valuable property absolutely going to destruction. It is the smallest sum that will do. It is in the direction of economy, both in the judgment of the Navy Department and the Naval Committee of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment, to which I hope there will be no objection; it simply provides for payment of a stenographer. On page 75, after line 1780, I move to insert:

The Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers of the chairman of the Senate Railroad Committee, a sum not exceeding $229.50, for reporting the testimony and arguments before said committee, under resolution of the Senate of date January 23, 1879.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think if that is paid out of the contingent fund, it ought not to go on the bill. This bill provides for payments out of the Treasury generally.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not care where it is paid from, but it will be impossible to get through a separate resolution. For that reason I propose to pay it here. There are some other matters of the same kind on the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My judgment is that there is nothing to be paid out of the contingent fund which goes on this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to strike out "contingent fund."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment and I wish to make one remark in regard to the matter before any objection is made; insert after line 1766, on page 72:

To pay D. H. McCormick the sum of $555.56 in full of all claim by said McCormick for salary as special messenger and watchman to the special committee on the investigation of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company during the Forty-fourth Congress, from the 16th day of August, 1876, to the 4th day of March, 1877, inclusive.

I desire to make one remark in regard to the matter before any question is made about it. This amendment is in the language of a bill that has passed the House and has been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims. It simply provides for the payment of a messenger of the House. There are several matters of the same kind in the bill, and I hope this will be allowed to go on. I admit that it is obnoxious to a question of order if it is raised, but I hope it will not be raised.

Mr. WINDOM. I would not raise the point of order against this if there were not ten thousand others like it.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is not one just like it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Several of the bills on the Calendar might just as well be put on.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. DORSEY. I shall not be quite as swift as I have been to report amendments from the Committee on Appropriations, and I have been a little careful this time to get all the names down so that I can read them myself. I move, on page 40, line 955, that the word "four" be stricken out and "eight" inserted; and, on the same page, line 960, I move to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty-five," and then to strike out "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the rebuilding of eight sets of officers' quarters at Madison Barracks, Sackett's Harbor, New York, destroyed by fire on November 6, 1876, according to plans and specifications in the office of the Quartermaster-General of the United States, $25,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator say that comes from the committee?

Mr. DORSEY. No, I did not say so. I took great precaution to say at the outset that the committee had not all subscribed themselves to the amendment; but I think a majority of the committee have recommended it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I did not understand the Senator. What is his answer?

Mr. DORSEY. I said a majority of the committee had recommended this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then it does not come from the committee, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it does. The Senator from Arkansas says that a majority of the Committee on Appropriations recommend it.

Mr. WITHERS. A majority of the members of the committee recommend it; not a majority of the committee.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be adopted in the interest of economy. The officers' quarters at Sackett's Harbor, an important military post on the frontier between Lake Champlain and Buffalo, were burned up. The Department expect to rebuild them and have commenced rebuilding, but the bill only appropriates enough to build four sets; that is, half the number of quarters instead of the whole. I understand that General Hancock and several others of the officers are of opinion that it is best to appropriate money to build them all at once. They will have the use of them sooner in that way, and it will be more economical. They need them. It is an important post, a post where a great many of the soldiers are sent who are out of health from being at the South. There are always from five hundred to two thousand soldiers there.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand that it is recommended by the Department?

Mr. KERNAN. I stated that General Hancock, who is in command of that department, and others recommend that the quarters be all built at once. It is cheaper than to delay the work.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from New York is so much better posted than I am as to the economy of it that I shall not oppose the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. It is in the estimates.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not raise any point of order. The only objection I have is that we are going over this bill and increasing latterly at every opportunity we get every time an addition is asked. A moment ago the Senator from California put in an amendment which increased the appropriation $100,000, and nothing was said. It appears to me the Senate ought to take notice of how much money we are appropriating.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY. I offer an amendment to come in at page 33, after line 780:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to remove the remains of the late William E. English, first lieutenant Seventh United States Infantry, who died at Deer Lodge, Montana, from wounds received at the battle of Big Hole Pass, Bitter Root, Montana, on December 18, 1877, to his former home in Jacksonville, Illinois, for final burial; $400 is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY. I submit another amendment. I move on page 50, after the word "dollars" in line 1212, to insert:

Twenty-five thousand dollars, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adjust and settle the claims of the several States under the swamp-land grant of September 28, 1850, and acts supplemental thereof.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that that is not recommended by a standing committee. I want to appeal to Senators to let us get through the bill to-night, if possible.

Mr. OGLESBY. This is recommended—

Mr. WINDOM. I know by past experience there is no end to this kind of amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. This is recommended by the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Was the amendment introduced and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. OGLESBY. Oh, yes; formally presented and sent to that committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. And rejected.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have the amendment read again.

Mr. OGLESBY. It is an amendment that is very much desired by the Secretary of the Interior, and has been for years. It has nothing to do with the question of swamp lands further than to enable the Secretary to direct the Commissioner of the General Land Office, through agents to be sent into the States, to ascertain the true character of these lands—not through the agents of the States, not by the States themselves, but by the Secretary of the Interior under the law of 1850, with the plats and field-notes before them, to arrange with the different States their claims that have been in the Department unsettled for years. The Secretary of the Interior desires this; the Commissioner of the General Land Office under his direction desires it; and the Committee on Public Lands have recommended it by a majority. All of the committee did not recommend it. It is simply to send out agents to examine, for the satisfaction of the Department here, the character of these lands, and to verify them with the field-notes.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise an additional point of order that this is legislation, and therefore out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The last point of order is clearly well taken.

Mr. CONOVER. I offer an amendment, and hope the Senator from Minnesota will not raise the point of order upon it.

Mr. OGLESBY. I have no objection to the decision of the Chair or to the objection raised by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but there is not a particle of legislation in my amendment. It is an appropriation of $25,000. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CONOVER.]

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to purchase a site for a public building at Jacksonville, Florida, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $35,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order on that, that it has not been recommended by any standing committee; and I did not agree that I would not raise the point of order.

Mr. CONOVER. Mr. President—

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will my colleague yield to me? I think it important that the rules of the Senate in regard to amendments to appropriation bills shall be pretty clearly understood. They ought to be. I wish to say a word on that subject.

The rule is very clear that there are three contingencies, and only three, in which an amendment can be offered to an appropriation bill: first, to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty; second, in pursuance of the recommendation of a standing committee of this body; and thirdly, when moved by a Senator here in pursuance of an estimate made by a head of one of the Departments. Now why is this? It is to guard against hasty legislation. The reason of the rule is that when the head of a Department says that an amendment is reasonable, it is sufficient; when a leading committee of the Senate says it is reasonable, it is sufficient to guard against hasty and inconsiderate action; or when it is made in pursuance of an existing law or treaty, that is sufficient to take it out of the objection that it may be hasty and inconsiderate legislation. Whenever an amendment is proposed that is sustained; first, by an existing law or treaty; or, secondly, by a standing committee; or, thirdly, by the head of a Department, I claim that the amendment is in order if it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day previous to the proposition being made in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Florida please inform the Chair, referring to the amendment which he offered awhile ago, whether an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy was ever sent to the Senate on the subject-matter?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There is nothing in the law that I am aware of to require that to be done. An estimate may be made by the head of a Department specially or generally. The rule does not say that it shall be special or general; but when he gives his sanction to an increase of an appropriation bill, to a recommendation proposed here by a Senator, it is sufficient to guard against the only danger which this rule was intended to prevent, namely, hasty and inconsiderate action. It is perfectly within the reason of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that a communication which any head of a Department may send to an individual Senator is not an estimate within the meaning of this rule. If the estimate is sent to the Senate, the Senate always refers it to the appropriate committee; but the Chair does not think that a private communication written by any Secretary or any head of a Department to a Senator is an estimate within the meaning of this rule. He thinks that the Senate should be informed of the estimate in the ordinary way, and not as advised by the presentation of a letter addressed to a Senator.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is a very important question, and I think the practice of the Senate has been different. I have known of amendments introduced here on the recommendations of a Department addressed to Senators, time and again; and if the question is an open one, I should be very glad to appeal from the decision of the Chair on that point and have it settled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Report the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask that the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. CONOVER. I had the floor and yielded to my colleague. The amendment I just offered has been ruled out of order. I will detain the Senate but a moment. When this bill is reported to the Senate, if I am permitted to do so, I shall submit a few remarks on the subject to which my colleague has spoken. I now offer the following amendment, and I do so in obedience to the resolution of the Legislature of Florida, that I will ask the Secretary to read and the Senate may make such disposition as they think proper.

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allow the use of the barracks of the United States military reservations at Saint Augustine and Tampa, Florida, to the State authorities for the purposes of a lunatic asylum and an asylum for the deaf, dumb, and blind, under such rules and restrictions as he may prescribe not inconsistent with the public interest.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point that that is general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CONOVER. I ask that the joint resolution of the Legislature of Florida in obedience to which I offered the amendment be read; it is very short, indeed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I object to the reading. I think it is trifling with the time of the Senate to introduce measures that Senators know are not in order and ought to be objected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is ruled out as general legislation, and is not before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate this morning refused to adopt the amendment contained in lines 1127 to 1129, to pay Mrs. C. Adile Fassett $10,000 for the purchase of the painting of the electoral commission.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the Committee of the Whole refused to insert the following amendment:

To Mrs. C. Adile Fassett, for the purchase of the painting of the electoral commission, $10,000.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that I opposed that amendment very earnestly this morning on the ground which I stated, that I thought that a painting commemorating a recent political transaction ought not to be placed in the Capitol when it might be offensive and unpleasant to those persons who were of one way of thinking in regard to the political transaction which it commemorates. Since that discussion I have been satisfied in regard to the origin of the purpose to purchase this painting, which is a very faithful and meritorious commemoration of the act, and I have been thoroughly satisfied that a very large number of gentlemen of both parties, very earnestly differing about the transaction, especially in another branch of the Government, have desired that this should be secured at this time; and it was in consequence of their earnest wish expressed to the Committee on Appropriations that the committee of the Senate made that recommendation. Therefore, I wish to withdraw my opposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the vote be reconsidered?

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to say a word. If the motion to reconsider shall be carried I shall, instead of the matter reported, propose an amendment that the picture be finished to the satisfaction of the Joint Committee on the Library and that the sum named shall be in full for the picture. I shall propose that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 22.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment. Mr. SARGENT. I move the following substitute—

Mr. KERNAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the reconsideration. I know of no reason why we should have changed our minds since this morning. This picture is not done. Whenever the Committee on the Library report to us that they have agreed on a price and recommended it, it will be time enough. I hope we shall not buy it now unfinished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On the question of reconsideration the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think it is a little too late. The motion to reconsider was put and carried and then the Chair stated the question distinctly on adopting it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator from New York was in time.

Mr. FERRY. And more than that, I remind the Chair that he had recognized the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] on his amendment to the proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair in the haste of putting the question will not be strict. The Chair had proceeded to no other business. He has entertained the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KERNAN. I make the demand for this reason: if we now on all the subjects in this bill reconsider the votes of this morning, we shall never get through. I think we had better stand on the votes we have given.

Mr. FERRY. I remind the Senator from New York that as we grow older we grow wiser.

Mr. HEREFORD. I must express my surprise at this change of front. This proposition was defeated this forenoon by a large vote. I am greatly surprised at the Senator from Massachusetts, and the only reason I can give to my own mind why he has changed his vote is that he has gone and looked at that picture again and has there seen his own countenance and is better pleased with it than he thought he was. [Laughter.]

What are we doing? Here in the closing hours of the session, when there are two or three, certainly two, appropriation bills after this to be acted upon, and which if they are not acted upon will stop the wheels of the Government, the time of this body is taken up for the purpose of appropriating money for the purchase of a picture of certain very estimable gentlemen. There is my friend from Massachusetts who was against it this morning and is for it to-night; and his picture is there. I should like very well to have it hung up in the Hall of this body. I have served many years with the Senator in both halls of Congress, and his picture will be pleasant to look at. The likeness of my friend from Ohio who sits behind me [Mr. THURMAN] is there; the faces of several members of the Supreme Court are there; several Senators are there that are upon this floor. But why should the American Congress appropriate money to buy the picture of its own members and place them around the halls? Why is this? We were told but the other day by the Secretary of the Treasury that there is to be a deficiency in the Treasury of the United States, and a proposition was made here to increase the interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States for the purpose of supplying this deficiency. I suppose it might be in order perhaps to offer an amendment that for the purpose of defraying the expense of obtaining this picture we shall issue interest-bearing bonds.

Again, this picture, as I am told, is unfinished. We do not know who is to be there, we do not know who is to keep company with this commission, with these members of the Supreme Court, with these our brother Senators who were part of it, and with the members of the other House who were on it. I am told that any gentleman can have his picture placed there who will give $500, or perhaps $1,000, and that the pictures of many gentlemen are there who were not members of that electoral commission at all—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HEREFORD. I here to-night, Mr. President, enter my protest against this waste of the public funds.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 30, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allison,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Conover,	Jones of Nevada,	Sargent,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote is reconsidered, and the question recurs on the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I now move the amendment I indicated as a substitute:

To Mrs. C. Adile Fassett, for the purchase of the painting of the Electoral Commission, when the picture shall be finished to the satisfaction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $10,000, this sum to be accepted as in full for the said picture.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have just had the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to add, if it is in order:

And $10,000 for every other picture that is offered to the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. Has that been referred to any standing committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is not in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.]

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, only a word. Ordinarily governments employ artists for the purpose of executing a painting that will be honorable to their country. Ordinarily it has been the habit of other peoples, when they desire to ornament either the palaces of their kings or the houses in which they transact their public business, to look to something that is honorable. But it is left to the Senate of the United States to ignore the history of the past and appropriate a certain sum of money to purchase what is, and always will be, the greatest dishonor the American name has ever suffered.

I do not speak of the portraits of my honorable friends here, or my honorable friends there, that may be found on that canvas. That is not it. It is not that the lineaments of the countenance of my friend from Ohio, or my friend from Vermont, may be carried down to the latest posterity that this thing is painted if it is painted at all; but it is that there is some great, overpowering, overshadowing honor attached to this matter that makes it necessary that the Congress of the United States should purchase this picture. Sir, I am opposed to it because it writes on the frontal of our whole country the greatest dishonor that was ever placed there.

I desire the Senate to remember what the case is: a Constitution violated; the rights of the people trampled under foot; three hundred thousand majority of the voters of this great country trodden down to the earth; and we are to buy a picture and give $10,000 to carry this thing down to posterity! Sir, I desire to enter my protest against any outrage of this kind!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MERRIMON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAMLIN. Does the Senator from North Carolina want the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California? I suppose he wants them on adopting the main amendment.

Mr. MERRIMON. Only on the main question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. MERRIMON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONKLING, (when his name was called.) I have been paired for an hour or two with the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] I do not see him here, nor do I know how he would vote, and I shall not vote under the circumstances.

Mr. GARLAND, (when the name of Mr. VOORHEES was called.) The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] was compelled to leave the Chamber on account of sickness. If here, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 30, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allison,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Patterson,
Anthony,	Conover,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Dawes,	Kellogg,	Sargent,
Booth,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Teller,
Bruce,	Ferry,	Matthews,	Wadleigh,
Burnside,	Hamlin,	Mitchell,	Windom,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Oglesby,
Cameron of Wis.,	Howe,	Paddock,

NAYS—31.

Bailey,	Eustis,	Kirkwood,	Saulsbury,
Barnum,	Garland,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Beek,	Grover,	McDonald,	Shields,
Butler,	Harris,	McPherson,	Spencer,
Coke,	Hereford,	Maxey,	Thurman,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Merrimon,	Wallace,

ABSENT—15.

Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	McCreery,	Sharon,
Chaffee,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Gordon,	Randolph,	Withers,
Conkling,	Johnston,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WYTHE. On page 32, line 769, there is a provision for the sale of Pikeville arsenal, with a proviso that it may be donated to the State of Maryland, if that State accept it prior to the 1st of January, 1880.

There can be no legislative acceptance of it by that date as there will be no meeting of the Legislature until the first Wednesday in January, 1880. I therefore move to strike out "January" and insert "March."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To this the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear what that is.

Mr. WINDOM. We could not hear the Senator from Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In line 769, on page 32, the Senator from Maryland moves to strike out the word "January" and insert "March."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Simply to give the Legislature an opportunity to act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why is it given to the State at all? It ought to be given to her with interest if it is given at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland? The Chair hears no objection, and it is agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to offer an amendment which I cannot offer under the rules of the Senate if any one Senator objects. I will state it and in a word the reason for it. I think the committee will not object and I am inclined to think nobody will object.

In the estimates upon which the committee has acted stand two items looking to the ventilation of the New York post-office. I learn from the chairman of the committee that in the necessary haste of doing the great many things that the committee has been called upon to do this matter was overlooked, and this morning it was brought to my attention by the Post-Office Department. Appended to the estimates is this note:

For explanation of these estimates, see appendix marked G.

In "appendix marked G" will be found what I will not ask to have read, because they are voluminous, letters from all the appropriate officers of the Government, showing the urgent need of this appropriation. The recommendation and the estimate is:

Alterations required to be made to remedy the defective ventilation of the basement and first story, including the mezzanine floor.

This is a matter of importance to the court-room and in short to every part of the building. It must be done at some time; it is right to be done, and all the estimates required have been made. If I can have unanimous consent I shall offer an amendment in the language of the estimate from the Treasury Department. If any Senator objects of course I cannot do it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be received.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I move to insert, unless the chairman of the committee will correct me by pointing out a better place, at the end of line 525, on page 22, these words:

Alterations required to be made to remedy the defective ventilation of the basement and first story, including the mezzanine floor of the New York post-office, $30,000.

Extension of the mezzanine gallery, $12,464.28

Total, $42,464.28.

I regret that the item is so large, but here it stands, with full explanations.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask the Senator from what document he reads?

Mr. CONKLING. I read from "letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting estimates of appropriations required by the various Departments to complete the service of the current and prior years."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to offer an amendment on page 76, at the end of line 1846, in the clause in relation to the Marine Hospital Service, by adding these words:

To be immediately available.

Mr. WINDOM. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. Let me say that it is now nearly eleven o'clock, and that if we are to complete the appropriation bills the Senate must remain in session until we pass another bill covering one hundred pages after we complete this. That is the condition we are in; and therefore it is important that we should come to a conclusion.

Mr. EATON. I reserved three points yesterday, as the chairman of the committee very well knows. On page 12, lines 260 and 261, is this clause:

For establishing a first-class fog-signal at Execution Rocks, Long Island Sound $15,000.

This item was stricken out by the committee, perhaps because they had not sufficient knowledge with regard to the necessity of the appropriation. If I can make myself understood by the Senate three minutes will determine this matter.

Execution Rocks are a body of rocks in the midway of the channel of the sound, about twenty miles above New York, opposite Sand's Point. At that point I have myself seen many a time five hundred sail of vessels in a fog. All the officers of the many steamboats that pass there every day are petitioners for this fog-signal; the Light-House Board have recommended it; the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended it; and I undertake to say here myself that there is no point upon the coast of the United States anywhere where there is a greater necessity for a fog-signal than there is at that point.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to say that in this case, and in two or three others, the item was stricken out merely for lack of information, the committee not having time to hunt up the recommendations on which the House has acted. The Senator has presented them since, and I hope the amendment of the committee striking out the item will be rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the item.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EATON. I now call the attention of the Senate to page 118, with regard to the fire department of this District. The bill provides for eight foremen at $900 each, six engineers at $900 each, and I desire to offer this amendment after the word "at," on line 390, to strike out "$900" and insert "$1,000;" in line 391 to strike out "$7,200" and insert "$8,000;" and after the word "at," on line 392, to strike out "$900" and insert "$1,000." In other words, I desire to restore these men to their pay at $1,000 each, the eight foremen and six engineers.

Mr. DORSEY. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut that he note his amendments on the bill and send them to the Secretary. What he proposes to do is to restore the salaries of these foremen to what they are now. That was the order of the Committee on the District of Columbia, but in the hurry of printing the bill it was omitted. It ought to be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut will please send his amendments to the Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. While the Senator is preparing his amendments I ask unanimous consent to go back to page 28, lines 661 to 664. There an amendment was made; the committee recommended the striking out of these lines for the reason that they had no information on the subject. Since that time the Secretary of the Treasury has sent a letter addressed to the committee, which I have examined, with the accompanying papers, showing that that item ought to be restored as the House has it. I trust by unanimous consent that the amendment of the committee will be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, line 661 to 664 inclusive, the committee recommended the striking out of the following words:

To reimburse expenses incurred and paid by C. H. Lord, United States deputy at Tucson, Arizona, under Treasury Department instructions, $334.87.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Which is to restore that paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To restore the text of the bill as it came from the House in this particular.

Mr. EATON. Now my amendment. I desire to say that the fire department of the District is one of the best in the country. I have examined it myself with great care, and I assert this without fear of contradiction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 118, after the word "at," in line 398, it is proposed to strike out "$900 each, $7,200," and insert "$1,000 each, $8,000," and after the word "at," in line 392, to strike out "$900 each, $5,400," and insert "$1,000 each, $6,000;" so as to read:

Eight foremen at $1,000 each, $8,000; six engineers at $1,000 each, $6,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to these several amendments, and they are agreed to.

Mr. EATON. I now ask the attention of the Senate to one other amendment, and then I have done with this bill. It is on page 65, relating to the expenses of the territorial courts in Utah. I propose an amendment on line 1584, after the word "dollars," to strike out commencing with the word "and" to the end of the paragraph.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And this appropriation may be used, under the direction of the said Department, to defray the judicial expenses of the supreme and district courts of said Territory; and the amount so used shall be reimbursed to said appropriation out of the treasury of said Territory; and until such reimbursement shall be fully made, no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut on the table.

Mr. EATON. I hope not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. EATON called for the yeas and nays; and they were not ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. Before the bill is reported to the Senate I wish to give notice that I have an amendment which I reserve the privilege of moving in the Senate.

Mr. EATON. I give notice that I will offer this in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to give notice that I shall ask separate action upon certain amendments proposed by the committee, on pages 69, 74, 75, 76, 77, and 78, and ask that separate votes may be had on them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the right of every Senator without notice.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the bill is reported to the Senate, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following as a substitute for the amendment I offered some time ago, which is inoperative, as I find on examination:

To pay the stenographer to the Railroad Committee of the Senate for reporting testimony and arguments before that committee, under resolution of the Senate requiring such committee to inquire into the expediency of authorizing railroad companies to do a commercial telegraph business, the sum of $229.50.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is that the same amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the same, except that it is now in a form that will make it operative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment; and it is agreed to. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole. On line 1182, page 49, I move to strike out "forty" and leave the item as it came from the House. As amended it reads:

To meet expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $40,000.

The provision as it came from the House was in these words:

To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $25,000; for depredations on the public timber, provided that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may be authorized to draw—

Mr. HOAR. I raise the question of order. I desire that the motion of the Senator from Florida may be stated from the desk, in order that the Senate may understand what is to be discussed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I would say to the Senator that we acted on this amendment in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Well, I will reserve it for action in the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur with the action of the Committee of the Whole? Separate votes will be considered as demanded on such amendments as Senators may indicate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Upon the amendment on page 69, lines 1678 to 1680, I ask a separate vote. I do not know whether the question of order was raised on that particular amendment or not. I will not ask action on that amendment now, but I will ask action on other amendments first. On page 74, lines 1807 and 1809, there is an amendment reported by the committee, and I raise the point of order that it cannot be considered under Rule 30, and I ask that the rule be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Chair hold that the point of order cannot be made in the Senate the same as it could have been made in Committee of the Whole?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair, that if the point of order was not taken in the Committee of the Whole it was waived. The question now is whether the Senate will concur in the amendments made in Committee of the Whole. If the point of order was not taken in Committee of the Whole it was waived.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not remember what has been decided. I took the trouble of making some inquiry about it, and I found a very great diversity of opinion as to whether it would be in order or not. For my own part, I cannot see that there can be a waiver of it in Committee of the Whole. Still, I submit to the action of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not remember what the practice of the Senate may have been. He would be glad to be prompted by the older Senators.

Mr. CONKLING. All precedents, I believe, are in accordance with the decision of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised by the older Senators that this ruling is in accordance with the practice. Certainly that is the practice of all other legislative bodies with which the Chair has been connected.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to appeal?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, it was only a question of order which I did not make at the time, because I did not suppose that the committee would refuse to place all the remaining Senators on the floor in the same condition in which they have placed themselves. Here they come in and act upon a few private claims and report them to the Senate, and whenever a claim of the very same character precisely, of the same merits and all, is offered by a Senator, it is then excluded. I say it places other Senators in an awkward position. I have half a dozen amendments which I offered to this bill of the very same character which the committee has reported here, and which were before it, but which it did not have time to consider. I am not censuring the committee for it, but it is placing ourselves in an awkward situation to give it special privileges to report private claims.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say in regard to the claim to which attention is called that the House of Representatives felt compelled, owing to the pressing state of the business, as they said, to pass this bill under a suspension of the rules. Some things were omitted that many members of the House thought ought to be in the bill. Our Committee on Appropriations, I understand, have made amendments in regard to two or three matters connected with House affairs, in order to give those gentlemen when the bill went back to the House an opportunity to correct omissions which perhaps under the circumstances they could not properly attend to at the time the bill was under consideration there. That seemed to be the leading idea. It was not intended, as members of the Committee on Appropriations know, to interfere with other Senators, or to do anything they desired to do, but simply to enable the House to do justice to itself, as it passed the bill in quite a hurried way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. FERRY. I wish to ask for a separate vote on an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator indicate it.

Mr. FERRY. I wish a separate vote upon the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, inserting the clause from lines 998 to 1013 inclusive. This is the amendment proposing, at the instance of the War Department, to sell a portion of the military reserve at Fort Gratiot. Not only the city of Port Huron favor it—

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are the lines?

Mr. FERRY. From 998 to 1013 inclusive.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Was not that clause ruled out on a question of order?

Mr. FERRY. The question of order was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was ruled out of order either by the judgment of the Senate or by the Chair, according to my memory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The present occupant was not in the Chair at the time, but the Chair understands that the amendment was ruled out of order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was decided to be out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair decides that if this clause was ruled out on a point of order and no appeal was taken, or if the question of order was submitted to the Senate and it was not admitted, then it is too late to move it now.

Mr. FERRY. The Chair ruled a few minutes ago that if a point of order was not taken in committee it could not be taken in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Was not the point of order sustained upon the amendment which the Senator now seeks to renew?

Mr. FERRY. The point of order was sustained.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the amendment is out of the bill now.

Mr. FERRY. I can move the same amendment in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; not by any means. The Senate has decided that it is out of order.

Mr. FERRY. Upon what rule?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Upon this rule: the Senate is the Senate all the time. It is merely at times sitting as in Committee of the Whole as a matter of convenience. The Senate has decided as a Senate upon the yeas and nays that this amendment is not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And it has no place in the bill.

Mr. FERRY. Before the Chair makes that ruling I desire to remind him that the same amendments can be offered in the Senate as well as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so supposed.

Mr. FERRY. What is the difference, then, between the ruling in the two cases?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This amendment had no place in the bill; it had not originally; it went out on a point of order. The question is now whether the Senate will concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there anything to prevent the Senator from Michigan from offering the amendment now?

Mr. FERRY. I asked the Chair whether I might not offer the same amendment in the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL, (to Mr. FERRY.) Of course you may.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall see about that.

Mr. FERRY. I have that right, I suppose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the Senator cannot do so, simply because the amendment to which he refers has no place in the bill. It was ruled out originally, and not being in the bill it is not in order to move it. If the amendment was not in order then, it is not in order now, and the judgment of the Senate must stand. The Chair does not know what was the disposition of the amendment, whether it was ruled out by the Chair or by the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. It was not ruled by the Chair; it was decided by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate decided that it was not in order, and that judgment will stand as to this identical matter.

Mr. FERRY. Then the judgment of the Senate in Committee of the Whole stands for the Senate itself. If it applies in one case it must apply in the case of all amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As to questions of order, the Chair so holds.

Mr. FERRY. Then that reverses our practice under the rule as to offering the same amendments in the Senate that were offered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to express my view and have a reply from the Chair. I think that is my right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon.

Mr. FERRY. I do not often intrude my remarks on the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon of the Senator; I apologize.

Mr. FERRY. I think under the rule of the Senate an amendment can be offered in Committee of the Whole, and also the same amendment can be offered in the Senate. They are two stages of the same measure; and yet if the ruling now made must apply to an amendment, certainly it must apply to any judgment of the Senate in committee. If it can be repeated in one case it ought to be repeated in the other case. I can see no difference. That has been the practice of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole upon these amendments?

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments in the Senate?

Mr. EATON. I move to strike out, on page 65, from line 1584, after the word "dollars," down to and including line 1592, being to the close of the paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut proposes an amendment, which will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 1584, to the end of the paragraph, in the following words:

And this appropriation may be used, under the direction of the said Department, to defray the judicial expenses of the supreme and district courts of said Territory; and the amount so used shall be reimbursed to said appropriation out of the treasury of said Territory; and until such reimbursement shall be fully made, no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to the Senator from Connecticut a modification of the amendment, so as to only strike out all after line 1586, retaining the words:

And this appropriation may be used, under the direction of the said Department, to defray the judicial expenses of the supreme and district courts of said Territory.

These words seem to be right and should stand, but the rest of the paragraph ought not to stand, which is as follows:

And the amount so used shall be reimbursed to said appropriation out of the treasury of said Territory—

Mr. EATON. Let it all stand down to that point.

Mr. WITHERS. Let that stand.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator, then, modifies his amendment so as only to strike out after the word "Territory," in line 1588, being the following words:

And until such reimbursements shall be fully made, no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

Mr. EATON. I think those words are objectionable.

Mr. SARGENT. The amount so used is to be reimbursed by the Legislatures of the various Territories. That is always done. But in order to coerce them to do that it is provided:

And until such reimbursement shall be fully made, no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

This was enacted in a bill some years ago, and stood for one year. After that it was not re-enacted, and has not been again up to the present time, if my recollection serves me. This clause provides that the officers of the Legislative Assembly there shall not receive any money unless the members vote a certain sum. In other words, these officers are to be a lobby around the Legislature to insist that the members shall vote money out of the territorial treasury in order that they may have their pay. Certainly that would be very unjust. Why should the officers of the Legislature be punished because the members do not see fit to do certain things? There is no propriety in that. Why, furthermore, should a constraint be laid on the members of the Legislature? Why should a bribe be held out to them: "Do a certain thing, take certain money out of your treasury, and you shall receive your pay; if you do not you shall not receive it?"

There is something unjust and coercive in such a provision, and it was so considered by Congress upon reflection, for after it had been adopted one year it was thereafter struck out. There seems to be no reason why it should be revived at the present time. In fact I am informed that it is here in the bill entirely by an inadvertency, by taking a copy of an old bill on the other side, by which this clause got into it, and therefore it has reached us in that form. I know that this originated originally in the Committee on the Judiciary. I see the Senator from Vermont proposes to defend this old abuse; and it amounts simply to this; it was merely that, in the judgment of Congress, when it discontinued this species of terrorism over officers of the Legislature, to say nothing of continuing it over the members.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope, Mr. President, that I shall not often be found defending an abuse, even to gratify my honorable friend from California. The state of the thing in the Territory of Utah when this original passage was put into the law four or five years ago, was this: The laws of the United States organizing that Territory, just as with the other Territories, required that the territorial treasury should bear a certain portion of the judicial expenses of that Territory. The territorial Legislature, although they were officially informed of the necessary appropriations and of the deficit, and all that, as the documents before us showed plainly and beyond dispute, positively refused to appropriate a single cent of money or to allow their treasury to pay a single cent of money to discharge this duty. Why? Because they did not like the action of the Federal courts in respect of crimes committed in that Territory. Therefore, inasmuch as Congress had been in the habit of appropriating money to pay the legislative expenses of this same Legislature that is bound by the organic act to meet these provisions for the purposes of the courts, that I have named, Congress said then, and I think said rightly, "We will not appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States to pay you for refusing to do your duty under the organic act, by providing means to pay your share of the judicial expenses."

The Senator from California says that that is an abuse of the Legislature of the Territory of Utah. I submit, with great respect to his better knowledge of abuses, that it is quite the reverse of an abuse; that it is laying the hand of just legislative action here, in appropriating money out of the Treasury, as we must to carry on the courts there, to say it shall be set off against the money that we would otherwise appropriate for the pay of this Legislature, and let them appropriate to pay themselves as they may and do, when they will not appropriate to pay the courts. Therefore, we do no injustice to the Legislature and only protect the Treasury from a double payment to that Territory, which, by her organic act, she is not entitled to; and as to the officers, the Legislative Assembly can pay them if it wishes to do so. That is all there is about it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether his amendment now is to strike out beginning in line 1588 with the words "and until" down to line 1592.

Mr. EATON. It is. I accepted the suggestion of my friend from California.

Mr. CONKLING. Then the words which the Senator proposes to strike out are these:

And until such reimbursement shall be fully made, no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

I differ with hesitation from any Senator who thinks that such legislation as this is defensible, but still I do differ, and I venture to submit this question to the Senate: Can any case be put of legislation, however righteous, however meritorious, however demanded of the Legislature of a Territory, which would warrant Congress in saying that upon penalty of forfeiting their pay they must adopt a certain act? If it be meritorious, I would not disparage it in that way. If it be not meritorious, perhaps the reasons are still stronger, and perhaps not. In any event it is making the compensation of members of the Legislature the bribe or the penalty of the votes they shall give. If any rule of morals or if any rule of law or discreet theory of administration or legislation can be pleaded for that I do not understand it.

I sympathize entirely with what I understand to be the conviction of the Senator from Vermont as to what this Legislature should do, but that does not enable me at all to enact that upon penalty of forfeiting their pay they shall do as we say. Men are sent to a Legislature to vote at their peril, upon their responsibility, as the representatives of their constituents, and we by some appellate power or prerogative, upon which we insist, say, if you do not vote as we tell you you shall not be paid as legislators.

Mr. President, I can think of nothing more utterly destructive of the theory of representative government, whether in a Territory or anywhere else, than a provision of this sort. I repeat that the merits of the legislation into which we seek to coerce a territorial Legislature does not by any means redeem such a method as this. There may be instances in which it is defensible to do evil that good may come, but I submit it can never be defensible for the Congress of the United States to say to the Legislature of a State, if they had power, by way of fundamental compact, as has been argued, or to the Legislature of a Territory as in this instance, do as we say or you forfeit your pay. I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. SARGENT. I raise a point of order. The Senator from Vermont has already spoken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not understand the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. I raise the point of order that the rule which we have adopted provides that a Senator shall speak but once. Under great temptations I have restrained myself from speaking more than once; and with all deference to my friend I make the point of order against him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move that this bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont moves that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not propose to be cut off just at this stage from doing what I believe to be a duty.

Now, I should like to state again so as, if I can, to disentangle the matter from the very ingenious way in which the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] has put it, just what this is and what it is not. It offers no bribe, it declares no penalty, but it declares what shall not be done with the money of the United States, not with the money of that Territory. It does not prevent the Legislature of the Territory or undertake to do so, to provide for its own pay. The law, take it altogether, provides for two things, and it is the law of Congress because the territorial laws are the laws of Congress passed by a delegated power. The law requires that the judicial expenses of that Territory to a certain extent, not all of them, because we pay a good deal besides, shall be paid by the people out of the treasury of the Territory. The same law provides that we shall pay the salaries of the members of the Legislature, who alone by the organic act of their arrangements can appropriate the money out of the treasury to pay what they are to pay for the expenses of the courts. That is the state of the case.

The members of the territorial Legislature will make an appropriation, I will say, of $10,000 toward the expenses of the courts.

Congress is to make an appropriation of $10,000 to pay the salaries of members of the Legislature. That is what we are to do out of our Treasury. Inasmuch as the courts must go on, the territorial Legislature declining and refusing to supply any money for the courts, the Treasury of the United States has to bear the expense and does bear it and has borne it. Now it takes that money which the territorial treasury should have paid for the courts, it takes the money which the territorial treasury would have been entitled to receive for its salaries, and pays it over to the courts which the territorial Legislature should have paid; and that makes one hand exactly wash the other. The people of the Territory are not taxed any more, the members of the Legislature are not deprived of their salaries, only they pay for their salaries the money they have got in their own treasury, and we pay for their courts the money we have got in ours; whereas technically, if you take both the laws together, we should pay them the money for their salaries and they should pay us the money for their courts. That is the whole of it. I know how very capable my honorable friend from New York is of stating a proposition in a very handsome way, but that is the substance of it so far as I can understand. Now I withdraw the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his motion.

Mr. SARGENT. Not until I say a word on the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont may withdraw the motion. The Senator from California can renew it.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I renew it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California renews the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. SARGENT. It is not true as a matter of fact that the territorial Legislature of Utah have made no appropriation for these expenses. They have made appropriations over and over again from the year that this law was in operation; and the only year it was in operation—for it fell into desuetude—they did appropriate during that year not quite the amount, leaving a small proportion unappropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me, the official evidence before the Judiciary Committee was quite the other way. I do not know where the Senator gets his information.

Mr. SARGENT. The only year this law was in operation the Legislature of Utah appropriated nearly the amount, refusing to appropriate the exact sum because they would not earn their pay by appropriating the full amount, because they would not yield to it, and yet were disposed to obey as good citizens the laws of the United States. That I state upon information which I think there can be no doubt about. If they had appropriated a few hundred dollars more they could have drawn the amount from the Treasury which was appropriated to pay them and to pay their officers, but they declined to do so, acting upon a high sense of duty, I think, and a high sense of self-denial. For whatever may be said against that peculiar people in reprobation of their assumed religious idea in favor of polygamy, it cannot be denied that they are an honest and thrifty people. I wait for a denial of the fact that they are honest in their personal relations, and that they are industrious, and that they are thrifty.

The Congress of the United States took away from the local officers, the Legislature, the power to administer their laws, a power given in every other Territory of the United States, and conferred that power upon United States officers who exercised the power so extravagantly that there have been two marshals removed for the waste which they made of the funds of the United States. It is not strange that the Legislature of the Territory were unwilling to put their funds in the hands of such wasteful agents, so wasteful that the United States Government itself removed them on account of their waste and extravagance, to call their acts by the very mildest terms.

As suggested to me by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] the Legislature under the operation of the law devised by the Judiciary Committee served for nothing. This measure proposes that the sergeant-at-arms and the doorkeeper and the pages, if they have any such, and the engrossing and enrolling clerks, and every officer of that kind also, shall serve for nothing because the members of the Legislature do not see fit to vote to suit us.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not suppose it will be very popular in this body or any other to defend these peculiar people; but I think there is a misapprehension as to the obligations imposed upon them by their organic act. I speak with some knowledge on this subject from having been in the courts of that Territory. In the first place the courts were organized under the organic act. The business of the United States, for which the United States was expected to pay, was to be done within six days or so much more time as might be required. It has been the practice in all the Territories for a great many years for the General Government to pay the expenses of that branch of the courts and the local authorities to pay the expenses of their branch of the courts. That is what we have done, as I understand, in Utah and in all the Territories. The United States, I will venture to say, has been asked to make no appropriations for the local business of Utah; but no such business has arisen under the Constitution and laws of the United States as is included in this part of the statute which provides:

And the first six days of every term of said courts, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be appropriated to the trial of causes arising under the said constitution and laws.

That is the part of the term that the Government pays for and not the other. Subsequently Congress cut off the inferior courts, the probate courts and others, and transferred the whole business of the Territory to the territorial courts, adding very largely to the taxation that was imposed upon these people. The only trouble that ever did arise there was from the fact that they thought there was an unnecessary expense put upon them by this legislation.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado explain this matter a little more? They are at liberty to draw their pay from the moneys of the United States. Are they not at liberty to raise it and pay themselves by territorial authority, by their territorial tax?

Mr. SARGENT. There is a law which prohibits that to be done.

Mr. TELLER. There is a law which prohibits any Territory from voting its members of the Legislature any pay whatever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that law?

Mr. TELLER. It is a law that the honorable Senator I have no doubt helped to make. It is one of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to see it. I never heard of it.

Mr. TELLER. I cannot turn to it now; but I know very well that was the law, because they cut off the pay the Territory of Colorado had allowed for a number of years to its members of the Legislature. So I say that now upon the statute-book there is a law which prohibits the Legislature of Utah from paying its members.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. SARGENT. That will only make two votes necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] upon the table.

Mr. EATON. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. SARGENT. That will only require two votes to be taken instead of one.

Mr. WINDOM. If we can have a vote on the amendment I am willing to withdraw my motion, but if Senators intend to spend the whole night upon this little proposition, when we know it means an extra session, we can as well give it up now as at any other time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. I now offer as an amendment what is contained between lines 998 and 1013 inclusive, being the provision for the sale of a portion of Fort Gratiot military reserve. I do that for the purpose of understanding the ruling of the Chair. Do I understand that I am ruled out from the right of offering this amendment because of the judgment of the Senate in Committee of the Whole that it was not in order, or because of the ruling of the Chair in the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Because the Senate, as the Chair is informed, (the present incumbent was not in the chair at the time,) by its vote decided that it was not in order, and it is not a question to be renewed in the Senate. It is not such an amendment as can come up upon the report from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERRY. Then, as I understand the Chair, I have no right to offer the amendment in the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so rules, that it is not in order, having been rejected by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERRY. Then I understand that if the Committee of the Whole reject an amendment by a negative vote, that amendment can be offered in the Senate; and yet if by the judgment of the Senate in Committee of the Whole that the same proposition is held out of order, it cannot be offered in the Senate. I wish to take the ruling of the Chair or the judgment of the Senate upon this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that he is not called to pass upon that question now, but he expresses the opinion that if the Chair had ruled the amendment out and no appeal had been taken, and so the Senate had approved of the decision, or if the amendment were submitted under the rule and the Senate had refused to receive the amendment, the order must stand and the amendment cannot be renewed in the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President—

Mr. FERRY. I take exception to that ruling.

Mr. BLAINE. What is the distinction between the Committee of the Whole and the Senate?

Mr. PADDOCK. I have the floor, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair believes the parliamentary question to be, when the report comes up from the Committee of the Whole, shall the amendments advised by the Committee of the Whole be concurred in by the Senate?

Mr. PADDOCK. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. PADDOCK. In line 1182, after the word "dollars," I move to insert the following:

Less the amount that shall be received by the Secretary of the Interior in the settlement of claims for depredations on timber lands of the United States, and credited to such appropriation.

What I mean by this amendment is to provide that whatever sums may be received in the settlement of such claims shall be deducted from the gross amount of the appropriation.

Mr. WINDOM. I did not distinctly hear the amendment. I raise the point of order that it is legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposes a limitation upon the appropriation, and is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The amendment was read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. After line 1468, on page 60, I move to insert what I send to the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after line 1468:

For the fulfillment of the legal obligations of the United States to the Osage Nation of Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause an account to be stated of the number of acres of the Osage lands in the State of Kansas that have in any way been alienated by the United States since the creation of the trust for the sale of these lands by the treaty between the United States and the said Osage Nation of Indians, proclaimed January 21, 1867, and of the money received by the United States on account of the sales of such lands, and to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the difference between the sum so received and the sum that would be due said trust at the date of the account herein provided for, had all of said lands so alienated been disposed of as provided for by said treaty, and a sum of money equal to the amount certified by the Secretary of the Interior, in pursuance of the foregoing section, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to place to the credit of the custodian of the said trust funds, and this credit shall be administered as other proceeds of the sales of the Osage lands in Kansas have been administered under existing laws and treaties. And the credit given to the Osages in pursuance of this act when perfected, shall be in full of all claims of said Indians on account of the sales of all lands for which they receive credit under this act.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the question of order upon that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is that it proposes new legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unquestionably.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the point is decided I should be glad to have read Rule 27.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair remembers the rule very well. The Senator refers to the provisions of a treaty, the Chair supposes.

Mr. PLUMB. This is to carry out the provisions of a treaty, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair listened closely to the amendment. It has been once before offered to-day. The theory of every appropriation bill is that it appropriates definite amounts in pursuance of law or treaty stipulations. This amendment appropriates no definite amount; it provides for a settlement, on the face of it, with Indians; it provides for the United States paying a deficiency to Indians; it provides for the Indians paying the expenses of the sale and survey of the land; and then it provides that they shall be reimbursed expenses that they have been subjected to in enforcing this trust. If this be not general legislation, the Chair does not know what general legislation is.

Mr. PLUMB. I will say simply in regard to the specific amount, that that is always regarded as certain which can be made certain. This amendment provides for the carrying out of the treaty to this extent—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the Chair to bear with me one moment. The rule provides:

And no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation.

Wherein does the Chair derive the authority for limiting that to a specific mention of money or a specific sum, if the amendment is to carry out a treaty provision?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sees that the amendment does include a new item of appropriation. Moreover it provides for several other things, for a settlement with the Indians, for stating an account with them.

Mr. BLAINE. The only question is whether it is in pursuance of a treaty. The limitation which the Chair puts, that the sole point covered by any amendment of that sort must be a specific sum of money, is hardly covered by that construction of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The United States certainly never stipulated in a treaty that they should violate it.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know what the stipulation in the treaty is; only I mean this: if there be a provision in the rule that an amendment is in order which carries out a stipulation of a treaty, I do not think the Chair is correct in saying that that is limited simply to the fact that a specific sum of money must be named, because some other mode of carrying out the treaty might be the very way to do it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not put his decision upon that.

Mr. BLAINE. I understood the Chair to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not.

Mr. WINDOM. I insist on the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments?

Mr. WITHERS. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after line 581, the following:

That the proper accounting officers be authorized and instructed to examine the accounts between the United States and the several States, growing out of moneys expended by such States for military purposes in the war of 1812 with Great Britain, and apply in each examination the provisions and principles of the twelfth section of the act of March 3, 1837, "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1858," and that there be paid to such States any sums that shall be found to be due them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WINDOM. I make the point of order that this amendment has been once ruled out, and hence is not now in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WITHERS. When this amendment was voted down as being out of order while the Senate was acting as in Committee of the Whole, I took the pains to ascertain by consulting with the Senator then occupying the chair what would be the proper procedure to bring this subject up again before the Senate when the bill should be reported from the Committee of the Whole. I was instructed by him that I had a right in the Senate to move this amendment upon notice given. Acting upon that suggestion, I have made the motion which I do make, and I propose to speak very briefly to the point, to the merits of the question, with the permission of the Chair.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that under the very provisions of the law which I have quoted here the accounts of more than one State have been adjusted and sums paid out in accordance with the provisions of the law of 1857; that the State of Virginia and other States have claims upon the General Government for moneys advanced during the war of 1812, a final settlement of which has never been had, and, contrary to the statements made this evening on the floor of the Senate, not one particle of compounding of interest has entered into the calculation at any one period. I have before me evidence to show that this principle has been recognized by the Government; that these claims have been audited under the authority of an act of Congress instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine these claims and report to Congress the amount due the several States respectively; that has been done, and the computation has been made. The Third Auditor of the Treasury has reported the amounts due at the time this examination was made; and, therefore, in every particular, as I conceive, the amendment has complied with the requirements of the existing law.

Mr. President, in 1858, as I asserted, the State of Maryland made an application in precisely similar terms.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will state his point of order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. My point of order is that there is no question pending before the Senate on which the Senator from Virginia is speaking.

Mr. WITHERS. There is an amendment offered in the Senate to the pending bill, and upon that I am addressing the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I understood the Chair to rule that the point of order made upon the amendment renewed by the Senator from Virginia was well taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did so rule, that this paragraph which the Senator now offers, upon a yeas and nays vote, was declared by the Committee of the Whole to be out of order.

Mr. WITHERS. I shall take an appeal pro forma or in reality from the ruling of the Chair, in order that I may complete the remarks that I desire to submit. I suppose that will be in order.

Now, sir, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that with the precedents established in 1858 in the case of Maryland, a reinvestigation and readjustment of accounts were made, and that the amount was paid them—

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I rise to another question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin raises a point of order, which he will state.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator from Virginia has taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair, he cannot discuss the merits of his amendment upon that appeal.

Mr. WITHERS. Then I move to indefinitely postpone the whole bill, and upon that I propose to address the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That motion is in order. The Senator from Virginia is in order on the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. WITHERS. I propose to show that in 1858, as I say, this matter was adjudicated, so far as regards the State of Maryland, upon precisely the same basis we now ask for Virginia; that at a subsequent period, in 1870, precisely the same principle was recognized, and the claims of the State of Massachusetts were adjudicated upon it, and the sum ascertained to be due that State has been paid to and received by that State. Yet here we find Virginia and other States—it is for Virginia, my own State, however, especially that I speak—who advanced far greater sums to the General Government. In a time when the Government was pressed by the foe from without, Virginia came forward and advanced her money to enable the Government to sustain the war which was being waged. Because she has done this and comes forward to ask that the same rule precisely be applied to her that was applied to Maryland and Massachusetts, we are met by a point of order and ruled out of the Senate on the ground that it is general legislation. This bill is bristling full of general legislation. There are a dozen paragraphs in it where the same objection would apply. There has never been an appropriation bill passed since I have been a member of this body in which more or less general legislation was not embodied. If those gentlemen who feel so much hesitation in accepting such a provision and express a desire to prune all legislation from appropriation bills had exercised their talents at an earlier day this Government would have been saved the appropriation of almost countless sums in this way.

Virginia has been to this Government more liberal than any other State, as is well known. The amount of the donations she made, according to Mr. Webster's estimates, was $300,000,000. That was at a time when she was prosperous, when she was wealthy, and this was a matter of insignificant consequence to her. Such is not her condition now. She is prostrated, and paralyzed, and poverty-stricken. She is standing now in the very throes of repudiation, and we come to ask for this sum, not asking at your hands as a donation, but claiming it as justly and of right due to the State of Virginia. I hope that this Senate will be sufficiently magnanimous and sufficiently just to give us the boon we ask at your hands.

The Senator who has interposed objections and who has endeavored to take me off my feet this evening is now living himself on the very bounty of Virginia, on the territory which she gave; and the son of that soil which ought to have come up here to the help of its mother is now turning its hands against her and attempting to crush out the voice of her representative on this floor when he raises it in solicitation of justice at the hands of this Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall this bill be read a third time?

Mr. WITHERS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask for a yeas and nays vote on the appeal.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? Upon this question the yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. INGALLS. What became of the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill?

Mr. WITHERS. I meant to withdraw that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second? [A pause.] The Chair hears no one seconding the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WITHERS. I merely wish to exhaust every parliamentary expedient.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair if it is in order to take the decision of the Chair on a question of order, and after it is announced to interpose another motion to indefinitely postpone?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks strictly not, but he hopes no objection of that kind will be interposed.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I wish—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.]

Mr. WITHERS. To relieve my friends from any embarrassment, I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. No embarrassment is felt here at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The appeal is withdrawn.

Mr. GORDON. I wish to renew an amendment which was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] as coming from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but before any action was taken upon it it was withdrawn by that Senator on an apprehension of an opposition which I think did not really exist to it. If that opposition did exist, I am satisfied when the matter is understood it will not be persisted in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

For the annual rent of a suitable building and grounds for a post-office for the city of Washington, District of Columbia, $10,000, or so much thereof as shall be agreed on by the Postmaster-General, for a term not exceeding five years; and for altering and fitting up the property to be leased, $5,000; and the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of State, and the postmaster of said city, or a majority of them are hereby authorized to select the property to be leased.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama, in behalf of the Committee on Commerce, moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, the Senate well knows that I am exceedingly tender usually on the river and harbor bill, but under these circumstances I must antagonize to it a bill which, if not passed, will render a special session necessary. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill may be taken up and acted on, and there will be ample time if we can get through it to-night to act upon the river and harbor bill hereafter. The river and harbor bill is not nearly so long, and will not require, I understand, nearly so much time to pass as will the legislative, &c., bill. I hope the Senator will take up the legislative bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPENCER. I merely want to say that the river and harbor bill was reported two days before the legislative, executive, and judicial bill was reported, and it has the precedence. We can pass it in two hours—by two o'clock, and then can take a recess until some time to-morrow, and then pass the legislative bill. I am satisfied if we do not now pass the river and harbor bill it may not pass at all.

Mr. RANSOM. I simply wish to say that I hope the friends of the river and harbor bill will stand by it and take it up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama.

The question being put, the yeas were 16.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. HOWE. I had forgotten until this moment that I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. MCCREERY,] who is absent. I believe I have been voting all the evening. I never thought of it until this moment. The Senate will excuse my voting on that account.

Mr. CONKLING, (after having voted in the negative.) The colleague [Mr. McDONALD] of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VORHEES] tells me his colleague has left the Senate ill, and he thinks his understanding may be that he was paired with me touching this motion. To be sure about it I should like to withdraw my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's vote is withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Barnum,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hereford,	Ransom,
Bruce,	Dennis,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Butler,	Eustis,	McDonald,	Shields,

So the motion was not agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BECK. Is that to be applied to the first section of the bill only, or to all of it?

Mr. WINDOM. I apply it to all, but the Senator may move to restrict the motion.

Mr. BECK. There are some clauses at the close to which I doubt very much whether it would be proper to apply the five-minute rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be not unanimous consent the question is, shall the five-minute rule be applied to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. McDONALD. Let it be the understanding—

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. I am willing that the five-minute rule shall apply to the first section of the bill or as far as page 94, but when we reach that I think we ought to have a larger debate.

Several SENATORS. Let it apply to all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, to apply the five-minute rule to the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I now ask that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be acted on as the reading of the bill proceeds.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To this the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WINDOM. Now, Mr. President, I think I can facilitate the passage of the bill somewhat by stating in two minutes the principle upon which the committee have made their amendments.

Knowing that there would be no time to consider the various changes proposed by the House of Representatives to the present civil service and the compensation of the officers and employés, the Senate Committee on Appropriations unanimously decided to recommend that the law for the current year with relation to all of these questions be followed in this bill with very few exceptions, and those not important; and I believe in all the exceptions which are made, perhaps not half or a dozen in all, the committee have been unanimous. I think I do not mistake on that point; so that there is absolutely nothing in the bill, as amended, except to re-enact the legislative, executive, and judicial bill of last year which was agreed to by both Houses, except some minor matters which I can explain as the reading proceeds, if any Senator desires.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The chairman of the committee refers to the first section, not to the political part of this bill.

Mr. WINDOM. As a matter of course I am referring to the appropriation part of the bill, not to the political legislation that it contains.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Still it is a part of this bill, and so far as we are concerned the Senate cannot change it. The chairman of the committee is right in his assertion that the committee was practically unanimous upon all of the first section, but when it comes to the latter part of the bill there was considerable difference.

Mr. WINDOM. I was speaking of the first section. I am obliged to the Senator from West Virginia for being a little more accurate than I was in my statement. I had in my mind only the appropriation part of it. Now, I ask that the reading may proceed.

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he would object to a very brief executive session. There are some messages, I believe, on the table, and there are some reports to be made and a few cases on the Calendar which ought to be acted on that will occupy probably not over ten minutes.

Mr. WINDOM. I think that is important, and perhaps it ought to take place now.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope time will not be consumed in executive session. Let us go to work while we are in the humor.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the chairman assent to that?

Mr. WINDOM. I understand it will not occupy more than five or ten minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know; but before asking for the yeas and nays I put to the chairman the inquiry whether he consents to the motion?

Mr. WINDOM. Upon the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin that it is important that some reports on executive business should be made, and that the executive session will only occupy five or ten minutes, I think we shall facilitate the business of the session by agreeing to the motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is all I wanted to know. I shall not ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

Mr. TELLER. While the doors are being closed I want to submit an order for the withdrawal of papers.

Ordered, That W. H. Nessler have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate by leaving copies thereof.

The order was agreed to.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to state that I was absent from the Chamber when the vote was taken on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill. If present, I should have voted to take up that bill.

RAILROAD TELEGRAPHY.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the doors are closed, I desire to report back from the Railroad Committee the testimony and arguments taken before that committee relative to the expediency of authorizing railroad companies operating interstate railroads to construct and operate lines of telegraph for commercial purposes, and of authorizing the construction of lines of different companies, with a view to encouraging competition in the telegraphic business of the country.

I move that they be printed, together with the report heretofore made on that subject.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess for ten hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate now take a recess for ten hours.

Mr. WINDOM. Which means that the bill will be lost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was not agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on in the order in which they are reached in the reading.

The Secretary proceeded with the reading of the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 15, after the word "Senate," to strike out "$41,780" and insert "$185,982;" so as to read:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate, $185,982, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest by unanimous consent that the Secretary omit reading the parts stricken out when they are of any length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the Secretary omit reading the parts proposed to be stricken out of this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BECK. Unless specially called for by some Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless specially called for, as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky. Is there objection to that proposition? The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "thousand," in line 19, to strike out:

Five hundred dollars; and for hire of horses and wagons for the Secretary's office, $600; chief clerk, $2,500; principal clerk, principal executive clerk, and minute and journal clerk, $2,500 each; financial clerk and three clerks, at $2,250 each; librarian and five clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at $2,000 each; one clerk, at $1,800.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Eight hundred and ninety-six dollars; and for hire of horses and wagons for the Secretary's office, $1,200; chief clerk, $3,000; principal clerk, principal executive clerk, and minute and journal clerk, financial clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $2,592 each; librarian, and six clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at $2,230 each; five clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, at $2,100 each.

So as to read:

For Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer, $4,896; and for hire of horses and wagons, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "stationery," in line 39, to strike out:

One thousand eight hundred dollars; assistant keeper of stationery, $1,400; one messenger, $1,200; four laborers in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $600 each; one special policeman, $1,200.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Two thousand one hundred and two dollars and forty cents; assistant keeper of stationery, $1,800; one messenger, $1,296; four laborers in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $720 each; one special policeman, $1,296.

So as to read:

For keeper of the stationery, $2,102.40, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 52, to increase the appropriation "for compensation to the secretary to the Vice-President" from $1,800 to $2,102.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 56, to insert:

For assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 59, after the word "appropriations," to insert "to be appointed by the committee;" so as to make the clause read:

For messenger to the Committee on Appropriations, to be appointed by the committee, $1,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 62, to increase the appropriation for compensation to the clerk of printing records from $2,000 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 66, after the word "commerce," to strike out "and," and in the same line, after the word "judiciary," to strike out "at $2,000 each" and insert:

Clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims, clerk to the Committee on Pensions, and clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, at $2,220 each.

So as to make the clause read:

For clerk to the Committee on Finance, clerk to the Committee on Claims, clerk to the Committee on Commerce, clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, clerk to the Committee on Private Land Claims, clerk to the Committee on Pensions, and Clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, at $2,220 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to add at the end of the word "each," in line 70, the words "for the present as well as the ensuing fiscal year."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The usual custom of the Senate is to proceed with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPENCER. But it is so much quicker to do it now. The only object of the amendment is to make this language operative from now until the 1st of July. Otherwise the amendment will be inoperative as to several of these committee clerks between the adjournment and the end of the fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to entertaining the amendment of the Senator from Alabama at this time?

Mr. BECK. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "thousand," in line 72, to strike out:

Dollars; assistant doorkeeper, $2,000; acting assistant doorkeeper, $1,800; three messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, $1,200.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Three hundred and twenty dollars; clerk to the Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,000; assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; acting assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; three messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, $1,800 each.

So as to make the clause read:

For Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, $4,320, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 83, to increase the appropriation "for compensation to assistant postmaster and mail-carrier" of the Senate from $2,000 to $2,088.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 87, to increase the appropriation for compensation to the superintendent of the document-room from $2,000 to $2,160.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that we first go through with the bill in this way, any Senator reserving any amendment to which he objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Edmunds in the chair.) Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know why we should not just as well take the question on this amendment now. I do not propose to debate it, because the question has been already debated in another bill, but I simply object to concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. There are several amendments further along that will be agreed to without objection. Let them be acted upon first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be finished and such amendments as are not objected to be agreed to, and that any amendment about which there is a question be reserved.

Mr. THURMAN. I thought the chairman of the committee desired that the vote should be taken on the amendments as they were reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly he did.

Mr. WINDOM. I am entirely willing to pass over the controverted amendment and finish the remainder of the bill, if Senators would like to do so.

Mr. BLAINE. That is not material, because if there is not any dispute upon an amendment there will be no trouble about it at any time.

Mr. THURMAN. Is the question on agreeing to the insertion of the words on page 89?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the insertion in lines 2161 to 2169.

Mr. THURMAN. I think we had just as well take the vote at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks unanimous consent that this amendment be passed over for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. CONKLING. I think we had better take the question on each amendment as we go along.

Mr. THURMAN. I think so.

Mr. CONKLING. The only effect will be to postpone it until we get into the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. WITHERS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. It is no part of the amendment to strike out the lines at present in the original bill, just below the words which have been inserted by the committee, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not a part of the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment, I understand, is the insertion of the words printed in italics that we are to vote on now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WITHERS, (when Mr. JOHNSTON's name was called.) On this subject my colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] If present, my colleague would vote "nay" and the Senator from California would vote "yea."

Mr. BAYARD, (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Nevada, was called.) On this subject the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM,] is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] If the Senator from North Carolina were here, he would vote "nay" and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CONKLING, (after having voted "yea.") I voted affirmatively, but I learn that the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES,] is ill and absent, and deems himself paired with me. Therefore I ask to withdraw my vote. He would vote "nay" and I should vote as I have done if he were here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote is withdrawn.

Mr. BUTLER, (after having voted "nay.") I voted under a misapprehension. On this subject I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. PATTERSON.] I ask to recall my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON,] who is absent. If the Senator from Nevada were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] was compelled to leave the Chamber to-night on account of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.]

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Allison,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Spencer,
Blaine,	Edmunds,	Matthews,	Teller,
Booth,	Ferry,	Mitchell,	Wadleigh,

Conover,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Sargent,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I suppose the next amendment is to strike out the proviso on line 2170 and ending in line 2203.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out from line 2170 to 2203, in the following words:

Provided, That the per diem pay of each juror, grand or petit, in any court of the United States, shall be $2, and that the last clause of section 800 of the Revised Statutes United States, which refers to the State of Pennsylvania, and sections 801, 820, and 821 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, are hereby repealed: and that all such jurors, grand and petit, shall be publicly drawn from a box containing the names of not less than three hundred persons, possessing the qualifications prescribed in section 800 of the Revised Statutes, which names shall have been placed therein by the clerk of such court, and a commissioner to be appointed by the judge thereof, which commissioner shall be a citizen residing in the district in which such court is held, of good standing and a well-known member of the principal political party opposing that to which the clerk may belong, the clerk and said commissioner each to place one name in said box alternately until the whole number required shall be placed therein. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any judge in a district in which such is now the practice from ordering the names of jurors to be drawn from the boxes used by the State authorities in selecting jurors in the highest courts of the State. All general and special laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed. That the several sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, from and including section 2011 to and including section 2031, and all other provisions of law authorizing the appointment of, or the performance of and duty by, any chief or other supervisor of elections, or any special deputy marshal, or other deputy marshal of elections, or the payment of any money to any such supervisor or deputy marshal of elections for any services performed as such, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. The Committee on Appropriations report to strike out the clause which the Secretary has just read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations striking out the clause.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask for a division of the amendment, and that the question may first be taken on striking out, beginning at line 2170 and ending with the word "repealed," in line 2194. Up to that word the provision moved to be stricken out relates wholly to juries. The subsequent part of the proviso proposed to be stricken out relates to a wholly different subject—to supervisors of elections and marshals. They are wholly distinct subjects, and I ask that the vote may be first taken on the jury proposition, beginning with line 2170 and ending with the word "repealed," on line 2194.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the question is subject to a division, and will put the question on agreeing to the first branch of the divided proposition. The question, therefore, is on agreeing to strike out from line 2170 to and including the word "repealed," in line 2194. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. THURMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the question upon striking out or upon agreeing to the report of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report of the committee is to strike out, and the Chair therefore, for the more perfect understanding of the Senate, stated it as a motion to strike out, which is the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, one word. I do not propose to debate this question, although I have a very ardent desire to do so, I confess; but I wish to retain the text just as it came from the House, and therefore I am opposed to striking out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment which has been stated, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. PATTERSON.] If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CONKLING, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the absent Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] Were he here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. RANSOM.] Were the Senator from Nevada here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] If the Senator from North Carolina were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I voted mistakenly. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were here, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. WITHERS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. JOHNSTON] is paired with the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" and the Senator from California would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Allison,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Spencer,
Blaine,	Edmunds,	Matthews,	Teller,
Booth,	Ferry,	Mitchell,	Wadleigh,
Burnside,	Hamlin,	Morrill,	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Oglesby,
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Paddock,
Chandler,	Kellogg,	Rollins,

NAYS—27.

Bailey,	Dennis,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,
Barium,	Eaton,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Eastis,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Beck,	Garland,	McDonald,	Wallace,
Cockrell,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Whyte,
Coke,	Hereford,	Maxey,	Withers,
Davis of W. Va.,	Hill,	Merrimon,

ABSENT—20.

Bruce,	Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Butler,	Grover,	McCreery,	Sargent,
Chaffee,	Harris,	Patterson,	Sharon,
Conkling,	Howe,	Plumb,	Shields,
Conover,	Johnston,	Randolph,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words stated are stricken from the bill. The question now is upon agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the remaining words of the clause that was read by the Secretary, namely, beginning with the word "that" on line 2194 and going to and including the word "repealed" in line 2203. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. PATTERSON.] If he were here he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CONKLING, (when his name was called.) I mention my pair with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.]

Mr. EUSTIS, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is absent on account of sickness, but he is paired, as I understand, with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.]

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Allison,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Saunders,
Anthony,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Spencer,
Blaine,	Edmunds,	Matthews,	Teller,

Conkling,	Howe,	Randolph,
Conover,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Sargent,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words are stricken from the bill. The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "southern claims commission," to strike out from line 2205 to line 2225, in the following words:

For pay of three commissioners to the 1st day of January, 1880, at $2,500 each; for salary of one clerk to the commission for same time, $1,250; salary of messenger for same time, $600; compensation of three investigating agents for same time, at $700 dollars each, for summoning witnesses, mileage of Government witnesses, fees to commissioners for taking testimony, fees for examining and copying public records relating to claims and claimants, and for payment for testimony not taken by commissioners, $3,000; compensation to two additional clerks for same time, at $600 each; actual expense of office rent, fuel, furniture, stationery, postage, expressage, printing, and small repairs, $2,000; reporting and transcribing rebutting testimony taken between July 1, 1879, and January 1, 1880, in cases exceeding $10,000 in amount required by law to be taken before the commissioners, $200; in all, $17,850.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For pay of three commissioners to the 10th day of March, 1880, at the rate of $5,000 per annum each; one clerk, at the rate of $2,500; one stenographer, at the rate of $2,500; one messenger, at the rate of $1,200; three additional clerks, at the rate of $1,200 each; in all, $17,222.21.

For compensation of three investigating agents, at $6 per day when actually employed; also traveling expenses of agents, fees and mileage to Government witnesses, costs of summoning witnesses, fees to commissioners for taking testimony, fees for abstracts and exemplifications of public records relating to claims and claimants, $6,000.

For contingent expenses, namely: Office rent, furniture, fuel, stationery, printing and binding, postage and expressage, labor, and assistance to short-hand reporter when needed, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2248, after the word "Solicitor-

General," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" in the same line, before the word "Assistant," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" in line 2249, after the word "Attorneys-General," to strike out "one of whom shall be for the Post-Office Department, at a salary each of $4,500," and insert "at $5,000 each; one Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, at $4,000;" in line 2258, after the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" in line 2260, after the word "clerk," to insert "and clerk in charge of pardons, each;" and in line 2265, after the words "in all," to strike out seventy-two thousand one hundred and insert "seventy-three thousand four hundred and eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of the Attorney-General:

For compensation of the Attorney-General, $8,000; Solicitor-General, $7,000; three Assistant Attorneys-General, at $5,000 each; one Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, at $4,000; Solicitor of the Internal Revenue, $4,500; examiner of claims, $3,500; law clerk and examiner of titles, $2,700; chief clerk, $2,200; stenographic clerk, $1,800; one law clerk, $2,000; five clerks of class 4; additional for disbursing clerk, and clerk in charge of pardons, each $200; one clerk of class 2; two clerks of class 1; five copyists, at $900 each; one telegraph operator, at $1,000; two assistant messengers; for two laborers, and two watchmen; in all, $73,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. For the salary of the Superintendent of the Coast and Interior Survey, $6,000: Provided, That the present Coast and Geodetic Survey, with supervisory and appellate powers over the same authorized by law, is hereby transferred from the Treasury Department to the Department of the Interior, and shall hereafter be known as the Coast and Interior Survey, and shall have charge of all surveys relating to questions of position and mensuration of the coast and interior, except the public land surveys, the special surveys intrusted to and to be made under the direction of the United States geological survey, the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes now under the direction of the War Department, and local surveys required for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and surveys necessary for military purposes immediately connected with the operations of the Army, in accordance with the plan reported to Congress by the National Academy of Sciences, under the act of June 20, 1878, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes."

For the salary of the director of the geological survey, which office is hereby established, who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $6,000: Provided, That this officer shall have the direction of the geological survey, and the classification of the public lands and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, in accordance with the plan reported to Congress by the National Academy of Sciences under the act of June 20, 1878, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes;" and that the director and the members of the geological survey shall have no personal or private interests in the lands or mineral wealth of the region under survey, and shall execute no surveys or examinations for private parties or corporations; and the geological and geographical survey of the Territories, and the geographical and geological survey of the Rocky Mountain region, under the Department of the Interior, and the geographical surveys west of the one hundredth meridian, under the War Department, are hereby discontinued, to take effect on the 30th day of June, 1879. And all collections of rocks, minerals, soils, fossils, and objects of natural history, archaeology, and ethnology, made by the Coast and Interior Survey, the geological survey, or by any other parties for the Government of the United States, when no longer needed for investigations in progress, shall be deposited in the National Museum.

That all laws, parts of laws, and all departmental regulations relating or having reference to the Coast and Geodetic Survey now in force and effect are hereby continued in force and effect, and made applicable to the Coast and Interior Survey until changed by competent authority.

For the expense of a commission on the codification of existing laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain, and for other purposes, $20,000: Provided, That the commission shall consist of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Superintendent of the Coast and Interior Survey, the director of the United States geological survey, and three civilians to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a per diem compensation of $10 for each day while actually engaged, and their traveling expenses; and neither the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Superintendent of the Coast and Interior Survey, nor the director of the United States geological survey shall receive other compensation for their services upon said commission than their salaries, respectively, except their traveling expenses, while engaged on said duties; and it shall be the duty of this commission to report to Congress within one year from the time of its organization—first, a codification of the present laws relating to the survey and disposition of the public domain; second, a system and standard of classification of public lands as arable, irrigable, timber, pasturage, swamp, coal, mineral lands, and such other classes as may be deemed proper, having due regard to humidity of climate, supply of water for irrigation, and other physical characteristics; third, a system of land-parceling surveys adapted to the economic uses of the several classes of lands; and, fourth, such recommendations as they may deem wise in relation to the best method of disposing of the public lands of the western portion of the United States to actual settlers.

The publications of the Coast and Interior Survey shall consist of the annual report of operations, such geographic and topographic maps and geodetic and coast charts, and such discussions and treatises connected therewith, as the superintendent shall deem of value. The publications of the geological survey shall consist of the annual report of operations, geological and economic maps illustrating the resources and classification of the lands, and reports upon general and economic geology and paleontology and related sciences. The annual report of operations of the Coast and Interior Survey and of the geological survey shall accompany the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior. All special memoirs and reports of both surveys shall be issued in uniform quarto series if deemed necessary by the superintendent or director, but otherwise in ordinary octavos. The style and scale of the cartographic publications shall be determined by the head of each organization, so as to express the scientific results in the most effective manner. Three thousand copies of each shall be published for scientific exchanges by the heads of the surveys and for sale at the price of publication; and all literary and cartographic materials received by the heads of the surveys in exchange shall be the property of the United States, and form a part of the libraries of the two organizations; and the money resulting from the sale of such publications shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 6 of section [4] 3, after the word "each," to strike out:

And the words "during the session," as used in the first section of this act, shall be held to mean seven months.

So that the section will read:

SEC. [4] 3. That the pay of assistant messengers, firemen, watchmen, and laborers, appropriated for in this act, unless otherwise specially stated, shall be as follows: For assistant messengers, firemen and watchmen, $720 per annum each; for laborers, $600 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 5, in the following words:

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st of July, 1879, the salaries herein provided for shall be the salaries for the within-named officers and employés, respectively; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. There was an amendment passed over by general consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state it. There was reserved on page 82 for consideration, and which has not been acted upon, the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out in lines 1996 to 2000 these words:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to continue for not more than one year the contract for the publication of the United States Official Postal Guide with Messrs. Houghton, Osgood & Co., of Boston, Massachusetts.

The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee to strike these words out.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that since the committee recommended the striking of those words out of the bill they have been informed that the Postmaster-General desires to continue this provision in the bill, and the reason is that in order to make this contract with the Government it requires the collection of a very large number of data from different parts of the United States in regard to local post-offices, and that firm, or anybody who is to make the contract with the Government, ought to have a considerable time in advance. Therefore it is desirable that this firm should know if they are to have the contract—a provisional contract—from this time. The chairman of the committee will state whether he desires to insist on the amendment reported from the committee.

Mr. WINDOM. I will state the ground upon which the committee acted in striking it out, and then I shall have nothing further to say about it. The Senate will observe in reading the clause that it continues for one year a publication to a firm named. The committee thought it was not expedient to name the firm and limit the contract to one person or company. I will state, as the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested, that since the committee reported the bill a messenger from the Post-Office Department has said that the Department desires to have the clause remain as it came from the House.

Now the whole facts are given to the Senate, and I care not whether the clause is voted in or voted out. I shall vote, however, to strike out the provision as the committee recommended, because I do not believe in making contracts with a single individual named in a law.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope those words will not be stricken out. That is a very useful publication and I hope the words will be left in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the objection of the committee was to the naming of individuals. I agreed with the committee fully. I think that we ought not to name any one man. If we want the work done the Department ought not to be limited, and we ought not to force the Department to contract with a particular individual anywhere.

Mr. DAWES. While that is true in general, in the case of a peculiar kind of book such as this, and such as the Tribune Almanac and the almanac that Mr. Spofford gets up, which are continuous from year to year, there would be but one firm in the country that would undertake the publication.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If that be so, the Department would have it done by that firm.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. The answer to the Senator from West Virginia is that there is not a word in the text of the bill that restricts the Postmaster-General to this firm. It is simply an authority of the Postmaster-General; that is all.

Mr. ANTHONY. It might do to say that the contract may be made with Messrs. Houghton, Osgood & Co., or others at his discretion. The Postmaster-General will undoubtedly make the contract at his discretion.

Mr. MATTHEWS. It only authorizes him to make the contract; it does not require him.

Mr. ANTHONY. And then it would authorize him to make a contract with anybody else.

Mr. CONKLING. Might I be allowed to ask a question? Suppose from lines 1999 and 2000 were stricken these words, "with Messrs. Houghton, Osgood & Co., of Boston, Massachusetts," then would not the Postmaster-General have all the authority he wants, and under the information from the Post-Office Department would he not contract with these same persons? If so, I venture to suggest that the better way is to strike out those words, and then he will continue it with these very parties, and yet if it is thought invidious to name them they will not be named in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Chair understand the Senator from New York to make that motion?

Mr. CONKLING. I will move to strike out, after the word "Guide," in line 1999, the names of these parties, so as to merely give the Postmaster-General authority to continue the publication.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York proposes to perfect the part to be stricken out, thus: by striking out in lines 1999 and 2000 these words:

With Messrs. Houghton, Osgood & Co., of Boston, Massachusetts.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask if the publication of Messrs. Houghton, Osgood & Co. is not known as the United States Official Postal Guide? If so, striking out the name of Messrs. Houghton, Osgood & Co. would leave the amendment, I submit, virtually as it is, as an instruction, or direction, or recommendation, rather, to the Postmaster-General to continue the publication made under the direction of the Department.

Mr. DAWES. There is but one book of that kind in the United States, and it does not strike me that the suggestion of the Senator from New York will at all interfere with the ordinary current of business.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not mean my suggestion to interfere with this publication, but simply to preserve what the committee thought it was well to preserve and what I think too it is well enough to preserve, not to state in the bill the names of these parties. If my amendment prevails, I shall move also to strike out the words "contract for the" so that the Postmaster-General will be merely authorized to continue this publication, and doubtless he will continue it with these same parties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I move also to strike out the words in line 1998 "contract for the;" so as to read:

Continue for not more than one year the publication of the United States Official Postal Guide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. DAWES. That would require the Postmaster-General to go to the expense of the publication.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all. The Senator from Massachusetts will see that although the names be stricken out, if we leave in that he is to continue the contract, the contract being with them, would leave it just as it is now, whereas if you strike out the words "contract for the" he has already signified to us in his estimation the true way is to continue this contract with these parties, and the provision on its face would not be invidious.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he now desires to press the recommendation of the committee, whether the amendment which has been made to the clause does not meet his views.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no desire to press it. I do not know how the other members of the committee may feel; I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. DAWES. If we vote "no," the clause will be left just as the Senator from New York has amended it.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no trouble about that at all.

The amendment to strike out the clause as amended was rejected.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the reading of the bill has been concluded and this disposes of all the amendments that are proposed in it by the Committee on Appropriations. According to the usual course, if the Committee on Appropriations have any further amendments the Chair will first receive them, with the permission of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well.

Mr. WINDOM. I have three or four amendments. On page 10, line 229, I move to strike out the word "four" and insert "two;" so as to read "$1,200" instead of "$1,400."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 229, strike out "four" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Messenger to the Speaker, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On page 68, after line 1659, after the word "laborers," I move to insert "in all $27,070." It is a mere change of footing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. On page 93, after the word "thousand" in line 2265, I move in the footing to change "$400" to "$680;" so as to read "$73,600."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent, this amendment having been once agreed to, to change the statement of the aggregate on page 93, line 2266, which now reads "$73,480" so that it will read "$73,600." Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the change is made.

Mr. WINDOM. In the items for the office of the Third Assistant

Postmaster-General, page 80, line 1944, after the word "fifty," I move to strike out "four" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Fifty-six female clerks, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move on the same page to strike out the words "seventy-five," on line 1947, and insert "seventy-six;" and in the same line to strike out the word "one" and insert "nine;" so as to read: "$176,900."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. One other amendment to conform to the present law. On page 14, line 328, after the word "thousand," I move to insert "two hundred;" so as to read:

For packing boxes, $2,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to offer an amendment on page 86, line 2107, after the word "dollars," to insert the words "which shall be immediately available;" so as to read:

To pay salaries and traveling and other necessary expenses, &c., $50,000, which shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. Also on line 2092, after the word "agriculture," I move to strike out "under whose direction the investigation shall be made." The bill as it is leaves an employé of the Department of Agriculture full control of that appropriation instead of leaving it to the Department itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. McPHERSON.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand the Senator to desire to take from the Agricultural Department?

Mr. McPHERSON. Not at all. I desire that the Department of Agriculture shall have the $5,000 instead of giving it to an employé of the Department. The entomologist of that Department will have control of the $5,000 under the language as it is. I want the investigation to be under the direction of the Department itself.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the Senator is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move another amendment. On page 86, in line 2088, after the words "cotton-plant," I move to insert "and other insects injurious to agriculture," to give a little toward the cotton-worm so that the money can be expended in any way upon any insects injurious to agriculture.

Mr. MORGAN. The appropriation for the prevention of the cotton-worm is very moderate. There is no object, I think, in putting in any addition to this clause, because the sum appropriated is a small sum for the investigation of this serious trouble to the agricultural interest of the country. The appropriation asked is only $5,000. What has been done during the past season has been of very great value, and we think that the continuance of the investigation may be of great use, and I respectfully ask that when we have lost so many millions of dollars in the last ten or twelve years by the ravages of these insects we should be permitted to have this $5,000 in addition to the $5,000 appropriated last year, for the completion of the inquiries of scientists into the ravages of this insect.

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw the amendment if I may be permitted to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment: In line 2057, page 84, strike out "sixty-five" and insert "one hundred;" and after the word "dollars," in line 2058, insert:

Provided, That not more than $25,000 of this amount shall be used by the Commissioner in the putting up and distribution of said seeds and plants.

I desire to state that this amendment meets the approbation of the Committee on Agriculture, whom I have consulted in reference to it. Hitherto the Commissioner has had $75,000 for his Department. This bill allows him $65,000. No amount is set apart for the distribution of seed. This amendment provides for $100,000, of which $25,000 is for the putting up and distribution of seed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does it read "not exceeding $25,000?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. Strike out in line 2057 the word "sixty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" and in line 2058, after "dollars," insert:

Provided, That not more than $25,000 of this amount shall be used by the Commissioner in the putting up and distribution of said seeds and plants.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not been able to understand where it is.

The SECRETARY. In line 2057, page 84.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order on that, if the amount is to be raised each year.

Mr. BUTLER. I will simply say, in reply to the point of order, that this amendment has the approbation of the Committee on Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has it been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is obliged, then, to rule it out of order.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been informally reported by the Committee on Agriculture. I have consulted each member of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule requires that an amendment increasing an appropriation shall not only be reported from a standing committee, but also referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It does not appear to the Chair to come within the rule, although the Chair will submit the question to the Senate if desired.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is clearly out of order, because it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and if the chairman raises the point of order of course it must fall; but I appeal to the chairman if in his opinion the great agricultural interests of this country ought not to have rather more recognition than it has in this bill. We all know that it is the foundation of all our wealth.

Mr. WINDOM. I am quite willing to give the great agricultural interests of the country all that it really needs, but I want to give it something; and unless we pass this bill it will get nothing. I think I prefer to give it what there is rather than to risk the loss of the entire sum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order; and there is no question now before the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. On page 4, line 79, after the word "each," I move to amend by adding "for the present as well as the ensuing fiscal year." I do this in order that the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs—I do not know about the other clerks—shall have his salary from the end of this session of Congress until the first of July; otherwise he will not get his salary from the end of the session. This bill provides that a few committee clerks, specifically designated, shall have an annual salary from the 1st of July. I want to provide that they shall have a salary from the end of this session of Congress until July.

Mr. BECK. We have no deficiency in this bill and have avoided that all through.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know that it makes any difference about deficiencies.

Mr. CONKLING. I think if the Senate understands this amendment fully, there will not be objection to it. The paragraph names several committees, of which the Military Committee is not one, in respect of which this provision has been made heretofore. Now the Committee on Appropriations have introduced the Military Committee among those the clerk of which is to be a salaried officer, and without some such provision as the Senator from Alabama proposes the effect will be to leave the clerk of the Military Committee in a hiatus before this act takes effect, although he is made a salaried officer. The chairman of the committee says that the purpose being to make him a salaried officer he should be treated just like the others who are salaried officers, and who now, under existing law, do get their regular annual salary, whereas this particular clerk, having for the first time been made by this bill a salaried officer will not receive anything until the next fiscal year begins, unless this amendment is introduced. That is the idea.

Mr. SPENCER. Exactly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is well known that no salary provided for in the bill begins till the next fiscal year.

Mr. CONKLING. The point is that these other clerks who are salaried clerks are provided for by existing law, and that unless there is a special provision made in this case, while we declare this clerk a salaried officer, he will get nothing from now until the next fiscal year begins.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. He will get his regular per diem.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under the head of "assay offices," page 48, I send an amendment to the Chair, and I ask that a letter be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will first report the amendment.

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

In line 1161, strike out the words "thirty-four hundred" and insert in lieu "ten thousand five hundred;" so as to read: "for wages of workmen, $10,500."

Mr. MITCHELL. I can only say that this is recommended by the acting Director of the Mint and by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WINDOM. I am aware that that proposition is out of order, but I am also aware that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Director of the Mint are very anxious for it. Therefore, if the Senate give unanimous consent, I have no objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Do I understand the Senator to say that there is a letter from the Secretary recommending this? It will be borne in mind that that is about three times the amount appropriated in our bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is true, and he gives the reasons for it in the letter, and I hope the point of order will not be made.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not made any point of order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state in a word what is said in the letter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is a very large increase.

Mr. MITCHELL. The letter states that at the time the estimates were sent in provision had not been made to carry out the provisions of section 3545 of the Revised Statutes, which reads:

For the purpose of enabling the mints and the assay office in New York to make returns to depositors with as little delay as possible, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to keep in such mints and assay office, when the state of the Treasury will admit thereof, such an amount of public money or bullion procured for the purpose as he shall judge convenient and necessary, out of which those who bring bullion to the said mints and assay office may be paid the value thereof in coin or bars, as soon as practicable after the value has been ascertained. On payment thereof being made the bullion so deposited shall become the property of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury may, however, at any time withdraw the fund or any portion thereof.

The letter states that at the time the estimates were sent in, which are included in the House bill, provision had not been made by the Secretary to carry out this section of the Revised Statutes. Now such provision has been made by the Department, and it is necessary to increase the force and the operations at this assay office. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that the letter recommending the increased appropriation be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. We do not want to hear the letter. We have heard the statement.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would have had it read before, but supposed it better to save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter. The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1879.

SIR: The bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, under the head of United States assay office at Helena, Montana, appropriates for wages of workmen $3,400, and for fuel, crucibles, chemicals, light, and other incidental expenses, $5,515; and for the assay office at Boise, Idaho, for wages of workmen, fuel, crucibles, chemicals, repairs, and other incidental expenses, $2,000.

At the time of submitting the estimates of appropriations required for the support of the mints and assay offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, arrangements had not been made by the Department to carry into effect the provisions of section 3545 of the Revised Statutes of the United States at the several mints and assay offices of the United States as provided by the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and approved June 19, 1878.

Since submitting these estimates, arrangements have been made to carry into effect the provisions of law above cited, which will result in a largely increased business at the assay office at Helena, Montana, and Boise City, Idaho.

It will, therefore, be necessary to have increased appropriations in order to meet the public demand. I have, therefore, to respectfully request that you will procure an increase in the appropriations for wages of workmen at the assay office at Helena, Montana, from $5,000 to $12,000, and for contingent expenses from $5,515 to $15,000.

I have also to request that an appropriation for wages of workmen and contingent expenses at the assay office at Boise City, Idaho, be increased from $2,000 to $6,000.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

R. E. PRESTON,
Acting Director.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That letter is not from the head of the Department.

Mr. MITCHELL. I said when I was up before that this letter was from the acting Director of the Mint and that it was indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury. I have not that indorsement here. I have a dispatch, however, from the Department stating that they would try to get the indorsement and send it here. Through mistake it is not here at this time, but I can assure the Senator from West Virginia that it is indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and furthermore, the amendments are less by several thousand dollars than the recommendations made in the letter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I notice the letter recommends $6,000 and the amendment is for $10,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator is mistaken. He did not pay attention to the letter. The amendment is less than the amount the letter recommends.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If I am not greatly mistaken the letter wound up by saying $6,000. I think that is correct. The Senator moved to amend, on line 1161, as I understood him, "for workmen $10,000." I certainly should be opposed to going above the recommendation of the director.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, Mr. President, I can assure the Senator that the amendment is less than the recommendation of the letter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator please read the latter part of the letter referring to the workmen?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will:

It will therefore be necessary to have increased appropriations in order to meet the public demand. I have therefore to respectfully request that you will procure an increase in the appropriations for wages of workmen at the assay office at Helena, Montana, from $5,000 to $12,000.

My amendment is $10,000—the recommendation $12,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Read on.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will:

And for contingent expenses from $5,515 to $15,000.

My amendment is $12,000—$3,000 less.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Read on.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all there is with reference to Montana. Now, we come to Idaho:

I have also to request that an appropriation for wages of workmen and contingent expenses at the assay office at Boise City, Idaho, be increased from $2,000 to $6,000.

My amendment corresponds precisely to the recommendation in that case.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I was mistaken in the place. The increase is too great in regard to workmen, and I cannot consent to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will make this one remark: so far as the assay office at Helena, Montana, is concerned, it was established only about a year ago, and to-day it does twice the amount of business of all the other assay offices in the country put together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oregon has expired.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now in relation to the Idaho office, for the same reasons I move to amend on page 48, line 1164, by striking out "$5,515" and inserting "$12,000" and adding "$4,000 of which shall be immediately available;" so as to read:

For fuel, crucibles, chemicals, light, and other incidental expenses, $12,000, of which $4,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rise to a point of order. These increases are made without any recommendation from any head of Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, on page 33, beginning at line 785, is this paragraph:

For dies, paper, and stamps, $375,000; said engraving and printing to be done in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of the Treasury Department, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, The cost does not exceed the price paid under existing contracts.

I understand the purpose there to be to guard against excessive cost in the doing of this work, and I am told by responsible persons, citizens of the State of New York, that they are prepared to do it for a price less than that specified in existing contracts, wherefore I offer this amendment; and in line 790, I move to strike out the word "paid" and insert the word "proposed," and to insert "the," so that it will read:

Provided, The cost does not exceed the price proposed under the contracts—

Striking out "existing"— which shall be offered by competent and responsible persons.

If it be an error to suppose that the persons to whom I refer and others are ready to fulfill these requirements at a less price than we now pay, the amendment will be of non-effect except that it would seem to be fair. If it turns out that there are persons ready to do this more cheaply, it will be advantageous to the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to strike out the word "paid," in line 790, and insert the word "proposed;" to strike out in the same line the word "existing," and in line 791, after the word "contract," to strike out "which shall be offered by competent and responsible persons."

Mr. BECK. That is the old contest, I believe, to break up the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by people offering low rates for one year, and after our own bureau is broken up then doubling and quadrupling the price when we are at the mercy of outside bidders. It is a fight that has been before Congress over and over again. That will be the effect of it. Bidders might work cheap for a year, but the moment Government competition is removed and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is destroyed, we are at their mercy and we have to pay what they may ask.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator, for what length of time are the existing contracts?

Mr. BECK. I really do not know.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator does or does not know, I venture to ask him this question: Why does he think that "existing contracts" being taken as the measure of the price are any more or any less likely to break up the Printing Bureau than other contracts for the same length of time offered at a lower price? I do not see that if the contracts are now for a single year and they are taken as a gauge, I do not see why if fresh parties, equally competent, offer to do the same thing for 10, 15, or 20 per cent. less, that should not be taken as the gauge. And how can the Senator say that a higher contract made for a year is a fairer thing to measure by than a lower contract?

But, again, if I am not exceeding my time, how can it be that the Printing Bureau will be broken up? The appropriation is "for dies, paper, and stamps" so much money, "said engraving and printing to be done in the Bureau of Engraving." Suppose it should turn out that for only a single year parties were ready to do this much cheaper, so much money is saved; the year afterward they are not ready, the Senator supposes, to do it at so low a price. Then work would be resumed under the same provision in next year's bill by the Printing Bureau. Why? Because the contractors having in the mean time asked for more the Printing Bureau could do it equally as cheap, as now. So I submit in either event we run no risk such as he supposes.

I do not know that this is an old controversy on this point; far from it. On the contrary I supposed that it was the settled intention all the time to say that we should not pay a premium extravagantly for the sake of having this work done in one place or another, but wherever and however it could be properly, satisfactorily done for the smallest cost, thus and there we intended to have it done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. INGALLS. If there be any Senators who propose that the Union veterans shall not receive their arrears of pension to which they are entitled under existing laws unless Jefferson Davis and four or five thousand ex-confederate soldiers can also be placed upon the pension-rolls, I intend that the responsibility shall rest with them and not with me. I therefore offer as an amendment to this bill the following as an additional section:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, namely: For the arrears of pensions due on claims in which the pensions were allowed prior to January 25, 1879, $25,000,000; the amounts paid out respectively for Army and Navy pensions to be accounted for separately to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department. For pensions for Army and Navy invalids, widows, minors, and dependent relatives, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, $1,800,000, in addition to the amounts heretofore appropriated for those purposes; the amounts paid out on account of Army and Navy pensions respectively to be accounted for separately to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department. For temporary clerks in the Pension Office, and for furniture, rent of additional rooms, and other contingencies, $52,200, in addition to the appropriations which have been or shall be made under other acts; the same to be available until June 30, 1880: Provided, That no more than $3,500 shall be used for furniture, contingencies, and rent.

That the rate at which the arrears of invalid pensions shall be allowed and computed in the cases which have been, or shall hereafter be, allowed, shall be graded according to the degree of the pensioner's disability from time to time, and the provisions of the pension laws in force over the period for which the arrears shall be computed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rise to a question of order. The same amendment was offered on the sundry civil bill to-night and it was subject to two or three objections, among them that of legislation, and it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I make the point again.

Mr. INGALLS. Why did not the Senator make his point of order on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL?]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is a question for the Senator himself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia raises the point of order that this amendment contains general legislation upon a general appropriation bill, and also that it has not been reported from a standing or select committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate. Is the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas in order notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. INGALLS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That is a fact conclusive, I believe, of itself. As to legislation, that is another point. I submit to the Chair the fact that it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations nor come from a standing committee. It may come from the Committee on Pensions for aught I know, but it certainly has not been referred as an amendment to this bill, and I ask the Chair to rule upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair submits under the rule, as he has authority to do in grave cases, to the Senate a difficult question of order. Upon that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. As this is a grave question upon which we are called to vote, would it be in order to inquire the opinion of the Chair on the question, to assist us in our deliberations?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order to inquire.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Chair would consider that inquiry made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will so consider it. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. COKE, (at three o'clock and twenty-six minutes a. m.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the question of order submitted to the Senate. As many as are of opinion that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas is in order notwithstanding the point made against it by the Senator from West Virginia, will vote "yea;" those of the contrary opinion will vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The single point I make is that it does not come from a committee. The other point as to legislation may come afterward.

Mr. INGALLS. I beg to state, if I do not interrupt the Chair, that the amendment does come from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. But it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and reported by that committee on the 24th of February.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The rule requires that every amendment shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations at least one day before it is acted on.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to know—and I speak seriously now—of any Senator who can tell me, has this amendment been reported by the Committee on Appropriations as an amendment to this bill?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.

Mr. BECK. It never was submitted to that committee.

Mr. CONKLING. I was misled by a remark some Senator made.

Mr. BECK. This proposition never has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and no Senator will rise in his place and say that it has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question? The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONKLING. (when his name was called.) I am paired, I have once or twice said, with the absent Senator from Indiana, [Mr. Voorhees.] I do not know how he would vote on this subject, and as it is submitted without recommendation by the Chair, I am a little at a loss myself how to vote; but I think the more prudent way is to abstain from voting, as the Senator from Indiana is not here.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Hill.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB. (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. Randolph.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague [Mr. Harris] is sick, and paired on political questions with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Bruce.] This is not a political question, and I do not know how either of them would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Allison,	Dorsey,	McMillan,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Ferry,	Matthews,	Saunders,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Mitchell,	Spencer,
Chandler,	Ingalls,	Paddock,	Teller.

NAYS—36.

Anthony,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	Saunders,
Barnum,	Dawes,	Kernan,	Shields,
Bayard,	Eaton,	Lamar,	Thurman,
Beck,	Eustis,	McDonald,	Wadleigh,
Booth,	Garland,	McPherson,	Wallace,
Burnside,	Gordon,	Maxey,	Whyte,
Butler,	Hereford,	Merrimon,	Windom,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Withers.

ABSENT—24.

Bruce,	Dennis,	Johnston,	Plumb,
Cameron of Wis.,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Randolph,
Chaffee,	Grover,	Kirkwood,	Ransom,
Conkling,	Harris,	McCreery,	Sargent,
Conover,	Hill,	Oglesby,	Sharon,
Davis of Illinois,	Howe,	Patterson,	Voorhees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. PADDOCK. By direction of the Committee on Agriculture and by informal consent of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the following amendment: On page 87, after line 2109, insert:

For experimental cultivation and analysis of the different varieties of sorghum and other sugar-producing plants, $5,000, of which sum there shall be paid to the chemist of the Department of Agriculture as additional compensation $1,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think, with great respect, it is trifling with the Senate to introduce amendments that Senators know to be out of order.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not know it to be out of order. It is introduced by direction of a standing committee, and assented to by a majority of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ANTHONY. But it must be reported from the Committee on Appropriations in order to be in order.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is a very important matter, and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. This chemist is one of the most competent men in his specialty in this country, and has served a very great purpose in his particular line. There is no service that has been rendered to science in this country that is more valuable than that he has rendered in his line, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the amendment may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that his amendment be received for consideration.

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and it is not received.

Mr. FERRY. I move to insert after line 98:

For messenger in charge of the Official Reporter's room, $1,200.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is that in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does it come from a committee? Has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no information that it does, and assumes that it does not until that appears. If the point of order is made the Chair will sustain it unless the amendment comes within the rule on the statement of some Senator. Does the Senator from Rhode Island make the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. WINDOM. I give notice that from now on I will make a point of order on each amendment moved where I can discover one applicable.

Mr. FERRY. I have one more amendment. It is to strike out in line 81 the word "one," and insert "five," so as to give the Postmaster of the Senate the same that the Postmaster of the House receives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan proposes in line 81, page 4, to strike out "one" and insert "five;" so as to read "Postmaster to the Senate, $2,500" instead of "$2,100."

Mr. WINDOM. I make the point of order that it has not been recommended by a standing committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the fact be so, and the Chair assumes it is, unless the Senator from Michigan states otherwise, the Chair must sustain the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KERNAN. I offer the following amendment: On page 88, lines 2144 and 2145, strike out "$189,500" and insert in lieu thereof:

One hundred and ninety-one thousand dollars; and the salary of the district judge of the southern district of New York, from and after the 30th of June next, be $5,500 per annum.

Mr. WINDOM. I make the same point on that as on the last amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. I withdraw it if the Senator makes the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. KERNAN. I am sorry the point is made in that case.

Mr. WINDOM. And I am sorry to have to make it.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to make an inquiry. May not a Senator move to amend the text of the bill by striking out and inserting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that he may; but it depends entirely upon what proposition is proposed to be inserted whether it is in order.

Mr. McDONALD. Either to reduce or increase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will intimate an opinion that a Senator may move to reduce; and he will reserve his opinion on the question of an increase until he can see what it is that is proposed.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to amend on line 1929, page 79, by striking out "$200 additional" and inserting "$2,000;" so as to read:

One of whom shall have $2,000 as superintendent of railway adjustments.

In place of "$200 additional," as it stands in the bill now. It makes simply a difference of $200.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that it has not been recommended by a standing committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order if that be the fact. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McDONALD. The committee had no opportunity to recommend it.

Mr. MATTHEWS. (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes a. m. Sunday, March 2.) I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to strike out "four" and insert "five" in place thereof, in line 1786, page 74; so as to read:

Trade-mark examiner, $2,500.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the same point of order on that, that it has not been recommended by a standing committee, and yet I think it is just precisely in the bill as the Senator proposes to have it. I think his amendment would make no change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It stands in the bill $2,400.

Mr. WINDOM. I make the point of order, then, that it has not been recommended.

Mr. WADLEIGH. His pay was $2,520 before the war, and always was so before that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. MITCHELL. The chairman of the committee gave notice a few minutes ago that he would object to all amendments. Before that notice was given, however, I had submitted an amendment in regard to the assay office at Helena. Objection was made at the time by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, a member of the Committee on Appropriations. Since then he has looked into the matter, and is of the opinion that there should be an increase; and I have concluded to modify my amendment by reducing it, and I hope the chairman will not make any point.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not see how I can take back my pledge.

Mr. MITCHELL. For the reason that my amendment was offered before the chairman gave the notice.

Mr. WINDOM. As I have already said, I believe in that proposition which the Senator desires; and if the Senator asks unanimous consent and nobody objects I shall not interpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will reduce the amount. In the appropriations for the assay office for Helena, Montana, in line 1164, page 48, I move to strike out the words "five thousand five hundred and fifteen" and insert the words "eight thousand."

Mr. MATTHEWS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon, on page

48, line 1164, moves to strike out "five thousand five hundred and fifteen" and insert "eight thousand;" so as to read:

For fuel, crucibles, lights, and other incidental expenses, $8,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that this amendment be received for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. MATTHEWS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio objects. The amendment is not received.

Mr. MITCHELL. I now ask, in line 1171, that the words "two thousand" be stricken out and "five thousand" inserted in the bill, and I appeal to my friend from Ohio not to object to this. It is for the assay office at Boise City, Idaho Territory.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I object to everything except an adjournment at this hour on Sunday morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent to receive for consideration an amendment in line 1171, to strike out "two thousand" and insert "five thousand."

Mr. MATTHEWS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio objects. The amendment is not received.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have done my duty.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. KERNAN. I will offer one amendment, and I simply ask that it be not objected to. It raises the salary of the district judge in the city of New York $1,500. We cannot have a good judge there on the low salary now allowed. I move, in line 2145, page 88, to strike out the words "one hundred and eighty-nine thousand five hundred dollars," and insert in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and ninety-one thousand dollars; and the salary of the district judge for the southern district of New York shall, from and after the 30th day of June next, be $5,500 per annum."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that this amendment be received for consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. McMILLAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The amendment is not received.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will yield to me.

Mr. WINDOM. For what purpose?

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to move to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to the Senator trying it.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriation for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and other purposes.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I hope before that bill is taken up the Senate will take a vote, that I do not suppose there is any necessity for any debate upon, on the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to reconsider the vote by which the bill relative to arrears of pensions was passed.

Mr. WINDOM. I should be very glad indeed to have a vote on the question at this moment.

Mr. THURMAN. That is what I want—a vote on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator from Alabama will yield to me tomorrow morning or when the Senate meets to make that motion to reconsider, I will not press it now.

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield at some future time.

Mr. WINDOM. After the bill is taken up?

Mr. SPENCER. I want to pass the river and harbor bill now.

Mr. THURMAN. I desire to try the consideration of that motion to reconsider, and if the Senator from Alabama will withhold his motion to take up the river and harbor bill for ten minutes—

Mr. SPENCER. No, I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I move that we proceed to the consideration of the motion made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to reconsider the vote by which the bill, which is familiarly known as the bill appropriating for arrears of pensions, was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not in order at this time, there being one pending motion before the Senate.

Mr. EATON. The motion of the Senator from Alabama is before the Senate. It may be voted down, I suppose.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Alabama made his motion first, and of course I cannot make mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

Mr. WINDOM. I now move that the Senate take a recess for six hours and five minutes. ["Oh, no!"]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate now take a recess for six hours and five minutes.

Mr. GORDON. Is not the motion amendable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not amendable.

Mr. WINDOM. I will compromise with my friends about me by saying seven hours and five minutes.

Mr. BLAINE. Why is not the motion amendable?

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Chair is it not in order so far to amend the motion as to propose a different time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will suspend a moment. The Chair will put no question until the Senate shall be in order.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish merely to learn from the Chair whether it is not in order to suggest a different hour by way of amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks, with great diffidence, that under the rules of the Senate it is not amendable any more than a motion to adjourn is.

Mr. CONKLING. Then if I make one offer—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But a negating of this motion would of course enable Senators to make another.

Mr. CONKLING. No doubt that is true; but I may be allowed to say that if we take a recess with a view to giving any rest, I hope it will be long enough to enable us to go to sleep and get our breakfasts and get back here. A recess for only five or six hours I submit will be of no use for that purpose.

Mr. FERRY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to remind the Chair that on the occasion when we sat up so late last week, on a motion amending the motion that was pending by the Senator from Connecticut we fixed the hour of meeting at one o'clock, showing that a motion to adjourn to a certain time is amendable.

Mr. GORDON. If the Senator will make a motion to take a recess until one o'clock to-morrow, I think it will be satisfactory.

Mr. WINDOM. I will state the reason for moving a recess to the hour named. It is very important that the conferees having charge of these bills should be able to meet as early as possible. If we take a recess until one o'clock they will have very little time. The House meets at nine, and it seems to me we can get here without much difficulty at eleven.

Mr. CONKLING. The river and harbor bill is the only one left. The conferees can take the other bill.

Mr. WINDOM. The conferees have not been appointed.

Mr. CONKLING. They can be appointed in five minutes.

Mr. WINDOM. They have not yet been asked for. The House has to announce the disagreeing votes on these two bills, and will be in session at nine o'clock. I think eleven o'clock is a fair compromise under all the circumstances.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is it in order to move that the Senate now adjourn to meet at ten o'clock to-day?

Mr. FERRY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn; that will carry us to eleven o'clock.

Several SENATORS. To Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine has the floor.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate do now adjourn to meet at eleven o'clock to-day, which motion takes precedence, under the rules, of a motion for a recess.

Mr. GORDON. Now is not that motion amendable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it is not. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion that the Senate do now adjourn to eleven o'clock, the 2d of March I suppose the Senator means?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Such a thing as adjourning to that hour on Sunday was never heard of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 24, noes 32.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion for a recess.

Several SENATORS. To what hour?

Mr. WINDOM. Eleven o'clock was the motion.

Mr. GORDON. I move now that we adjourn until twelve o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia, pending this motion—

Mr. GORDON. I have no objection to saying a recess until twelve o'clock. I move, then, that we take a recess until twelve o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending motion then is, the motion to adjourn being withdrawn, that of the Senator from Minnesota, that the Senate take a recess until eleven o'clock, which precedes the motion of the Senator from Georgia. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota?

CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent to make a suggestion which I think will facilitate business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is perfectly competent for us to appoint conferees when we send a bill over to the House.

Mr. BLAINE. It has been done.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no difficulty about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. If we do that we can have the committees of conference get to work immediately.

Mr. GORDON. Make a motion to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending motion is the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, that the Senate now take a recess until eleven o'clock.

Mr. WINDOM. I withdraw that for the purpose of testing the motion made by the Senator from Rhode Island, which seems to be a very novel one; but I have so much confidence in his parliamentary knowledge that I yield to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the motion for a recess withdrawn?

Mr. WINDOM. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia withdraw his motion?

Mr. GORDON. For the present.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the conferees be appointed by the Chair upon the two bills passed to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The river and harbor bill is before the Senate. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent to move, without displacing the river and harbor bill I suppose he intends—

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the amendments proposed by the Senate to the legislative bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to ask if any Senator knows of a single precedent of that kind?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion is in order. Of course it is very unusual, but the Chair believes it to be consistent with the rules of parliamentary law. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BAILEY. What is the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the amendments proposed by the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Is the Senate ready for that question?

Mr. THURMAN. Is there any precedent for this?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there are precedents, although I do not remember any?

Mr. THURMAN. Let us hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is stated on the subject of conferences in the Constitution, Manual, and Digest used by the Senate: "a conference may be asked, before the House asking it has come to a resolution of disagreement, insisting or adhering," and so on. That is a more extreme case than the one in hand, because the Senate has disagreed to the House bill as it stands and proposed to change it. The Chair has no doubt, therefore, in respect of the parliamentary propriety of the motion, and rules it to be in order.

Mr. BLAINE. It has been done within the last fifteen years three or four times between the Senate and House of Representatives, I think.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, if a conference be appointed, the conferees can deal with anything but the existing condition of things as the bill is sent from the Senate? If the House afterward were to insist on their amendments, the conference will then fall to the ground if it is appointed in this way.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very sorry I could not hear one word the Senator from Massachusetts said. I want, however, to ask one question of those who are better versed in the rules than I am—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to repeat what I said? I should like to have him hear it before we determine this question. My point is that although it is undoubtedly competent to ask a conference and appoint a conference at any stage of a bill, yet the conference, if accepted, must be a conference upon the bill in that stage; and if the House insists on its amendments the conference which we have asked for falls to the ground.

Mr. EATON. Oh, no.

Mr. THURMAN. The trouble with me is what good is to come by appointing conferees now?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because the House meets at nine or nine and a half o'clock, and they can appoint conferees at once, and the committees can get together and be at work. It enables us to adjourn to meet at a later hour.

Mr. THURMAN. Is it the opinion of the Senator from Rhode Island that if the House should appoint conferees and they should meet and recommend one thing or the other thing, upon the adoption of the conference report, that would pass the bill without the House ever having acted upon the amendments made by the Senate?

Mr. ANTHONY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BLAINE. These amendments go to the House with the request that there be a conference. If the House should recede and agree to all the Senate has done, then the conferees would have nothing to meet about; but whatever is left then goes to the conference if the House joins in it; and then both bodies will be in position to receive the result of that conference.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not quite see it yet. It may be for want of knowledge on this subject, but I do not quite see the point. Here is a proposition for a conference, and I can very well conceive a case in which it would be proper to appoint conferees before the other House had considered our amendments. But we appoint conferees. Suppose the House appoints managers on its part. Managers of what? Of disagreeing votes? No; there are no disagreeing votes yet, for we do not know whether the House will agree to our amendments or not. They appoint managers then to consider what? A set of managers to consider the amendments made by the Senate to the House bill.

Mr. GORDON. I want to make a suggestion to my friend from Ohio. The House of course will not appoint its conferees until it has acted upon this bill. If it disagrees with the amendments it will then appoint its conferees, and will find the Senate conferees ready to meet them. That is all there is in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island that it request of the House of Representatives a conference on the amendments proposed by the Senate to the bill of the House entitled the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill?

Mr. THURMAN. I think we had better take the regular course. I for one shall vote against that proposition.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. Now I move a like conference on the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How shall the committee be appointed? ["By the Chair."] Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

The Chair will name as the committee on the legislative bill the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] and the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

On the sundry civil bill, so-called, the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY,] and the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS.]

RECESS.

Mr. WINDOM. Now I move that the Senate take a recess until two o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate now take a recess until two o'clock of the 2d of March.

Mr. THURMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator, although the motion is not debatable.

Mr. THURMAN. This is the first day of March. How, then, can we take a recess until a certain hour on the second day of March?

Mr. GORDON. It is the same day; say three o'clock to-day.

Mr. THURMAN. But the Chair was putting it to take a recess to such an hour on the second day of March. We are in the session of the first day of March yet.

Mr. GORDON. The motion is, I understand, to take a recess until two o'clock to-day.

Mr. WINDOM. I understood the motion to be made for a recess to two o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair put it at two o'clock of the 2d of March. He has not found out yet which two is meant. The Chair will state it "the next two."

Mr. BLAINE. "The next two" will do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question in this way, that the Senate take a recess until two o'clock, whatever two o'clock next happens.

Mr. WINDOM. Two o'clock on the second day of March.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to that.

Mr. FERRY. Two o'clock to day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is to take a recess until the two o'clock next occurring.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and eleven minutes a. m., Sunday, March 2) the Senate took a recess until two o'clock p. m.

SUNDAY'S SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at two o'clock p. m., (Sunday, March 2, 1879,) and the Vice-President called the Senate to order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I ask leave to present the petition of Isaac Lindsley and the Pawtucket Hair-Cloth Company, praying that letters-patent granted to said Lindsley September 26, 1871, for an improvement in looms for weaving hair-cloth, may be declared a valid patent for seventeen years from its date, notwithstanding that letters-patent were previously procured from Great Britain by him for the same invention. I move its reference to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a quorum present, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope no business will be done until there is a quorum. It is bad enough to do business on Sunday even with a quorum.

Mr. SPENCER. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is to secure a quorum.

Mr. SPENCER. I think there is a quorum present here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the Chair to have the roll called.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll of the Senate will be called.

The Secretary called the roll.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a quorum present, forty-one Senators having answered to their names.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. BUTLER presented the credentials of Wade Hampton, chosen by the Legislature of South Carolina a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1879; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, in favor of the passage of House joint resolution No. 234, providing for a treaty with the republic of Mexico, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of the Legislature of Florida, praying an appropriation to pay the unpaid balance awarded to citizens under the provisions of the acts of Congress passed in furtherance of article 9 of the treaty between Spain and the United States, of February 22, 1819, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2200) for the relief of William J. Piper of Frankfort, New York, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 471) granting a pension to Martha J. Robinson, widow of James H. Robinson, reported it without amendment.

PRINTING OF ELECTION TESTIMONY.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution to print the report of the select committee to inquire into the alleged frauds in the late elections, with the accompanying testimony, which was submitted yesterday.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by Mr. TELLER:

Resolved, That 200 copies of the report of the select committee to inquire into the alleged frauds in the late elections, with the accompanying testimony, be printed for the use of said committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report an amendment. I move to insert at the end of the resolution:

And that 200 extra copies of the said report and testimony be printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution to print 2,000 additional copies of the report of the select committee to inquire into alleged frauds in the late elections, with the accompanying testimony, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and to recommend its passage.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 2,000 additional copies of the report of the select committee to inquire into alleged frauds in the late elections, with the accompanying testimony, of which 800 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,200 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DISCREPANCIES COMMITTEE.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I offer a resolution as morning business; I believe that is first in order. I do not ask action upon it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no morning business to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no morning hour. Is there objection to receiving the resolution? The resolution will be received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read, subject to objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the select committee appointed under the resolution of November 19, 1877, to investigate the finance reports, books, and accounts of the Treasury Department, be continued as now organized until the further order of the Senate, with authority to sit during the recess, and with all the powers conferred by the said resolution of November 19, 1877.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let it be printed and lie on the table. I have no particular wish to have it considered now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that I have any objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. INGALLS. I was going to make a statement upon the resolution offered by the Senator from West Virginia, and that is, that three members of that committee are re-elected but will not be sworn in until there is another session of Congress. Whether it be competent for them to act on that committee during the recess I leave to the Senate to decide.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That can be decided when the resolution is called up for action.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest that the resolution was intended to cover that. As now organized we have full power to sit until we make a report, and I suppose that will cover the cases referred to by the Senator.

RICHARD STEVENSON'S HEIRS.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the present consideration of House bill No. 5271. It will not lead to any debate, I know. It is identical with the Senate bill No. 1415; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and reported back unanimously with a recommendation that it pass. This is a House bill in lieu of that, which I ask the present consideration of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is it?

Mr. McDONALD. Senate bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Richard Stevenson, late assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and his bondsmen.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5271) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Richard Stevenson, late assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and his bondsmen. It releases the heirs and legal representatives of Richard Stevenson, late an assistant quartermaster of volunteers, and his official sureties or bondsmen, from any liability to the United States on account of any moneys or property received or disbursed by him as such quartermaster, and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to close all his accounts as such quartermaster, in accordance with the intent of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to move the indefinite postponement of the bill of the Senate No. 1415, which is identical with this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

LANDS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. FERRY. I ask the Senate to consider House joint resolution No. 191, which was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments. I think there will be no objection to it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] had it in charge. It releases the reversionary claim and interest of the United States in and to certain lands in Michigan.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the Senator from Michigan got this started, I shall not object to its being taken up. It may be considered subject to objection through every stage. That joint resolution which has been read is not the one that the Judiciary Committee agreed upon at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to inquire whether this joint resolution was reported to-day, and if not, when was it reported to the Senate? If it was reported to-day I must object to its present consideration.

Mr. FERRY. It was reported from the Judiciary Committee several days since and is on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. After this is disposed of I shall call for the regular order.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 191) releasing the reversionary interest and claim of the United States in and to certain lands in the State of Michigan.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary will be reported.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "in," the Committee on the Judiciary propose to insert the words "such of;" in line 8, after the word "act," to insert the words "as were granted to aid the construction of the road from Grand Haven to Flint, and thence to Port Huron;" and in line 12, to strike out the words "under the operation of the laws of the State of Michigan, or of the officers thereof;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the United States hereby releases to the State of Michigan any and all reversionary interest which may remain in the United States in such of the lands granted to and acquired by the said State of Michigan by act of Congress of June 3, 1856, and certified to the said State in accordance with the said act, as were granted to aid the construction of the road from Grand Haven to Flint, and thence to Port Huron. This release shall not in any manner affect the legal or equitable rights in said lands which have been acquired, but all such rights shall be and remain unimpaired.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move in line 11, to strike out the word "the" before "legal," and insert the word "any;" so as to read, "any legal or equitable rights," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN S. S. BLACKFORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, being the unfinished business, and the Senate resumes consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to appeal to the Senate to allow the census bill to be taken up in order that the amendments of the House may be concurred in.

Mr. SPENCER. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. MORRILL. The select Committee on the Census have instructed me to propose that all the amendments of the House of Representatives shall be concurred in. It will take but a few minutes.

Mr. EATON. I understand that the request of the Senator from Vermont was objected to. I wish to state that the other morning on my motion a resolution was laid on the table to pay one of the officers of the Senate, the captain of the Capitol police, a certain sum, $500 I think. I am satisfied myself that the information upon which I acted was incorrect. Therefore, I should like to call up that resolution and let it be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution being taken from the table and considered?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us know what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be reported.

The Secretary read the following resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, February 21:

Whereas S. S. Blackford, in the proper discharge of his duties as captain of the Capitol police, while making an arrest in the Capitol on the 26th day of December, 1878, was seriously injured, having the top bone of his right and only arm fractured and his arm otherwise disabled, so as to render him almost entirely helpless for a period of more than six weeks, and from the results of which injuries he may never recover: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the said S. S. Blackford, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, the sum of $500, to enable him to pay for medical and other expenses incurred and which may hereafter be incurred on account of said injuries.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection at all to paying the actual expenses incurred, let them be what they may; but I understand the person whom it is intended to relieve has been regularly on duty, has received his regular salary, and will continue to get it, for he is now on duty. It is true his arm was probably seriously hurt. I should have no objection whatever to paying his expenditures for physicians' fees, or any expenses incident to that accident. Those expenses the Senate should pay, but I think it wrong to appropriate so large an amount when perhaps one-fifth of it would pay all the expenses he incurred. That is all I have to say upon the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6471) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. A. S. HEWITT of New York, and Mr. EUGENE HALE of Maine managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. M. J. DURHAM of Kentucky, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio, managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. No. 1108) to protect Holmead Cemetery, in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 1651) to validate and confirm certain acknowledgments of deeds and other instruments of writing under seal made in a foreign country for lands lying in the District of Columbia and the records thereof; and

A bill (H. R. No. 5065) to give circuit courts supervisory jurisdiction in certain criminal cases.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 5065) to give circuit courts supervisory jurisdiction in certain criminal cases.

NOTICES OF BUSINESS.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HOWE. What is the regular order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HOWE. Then I have the floor on the regular order. Touching the river and harbor bill, whatever may be its merits, there are two other bills on the Calendar which have been there a long while; which have passed the House of Representatives; which, if the Senate would be good enough to concur in, would make two families comfortable, and which, if the Senate refuse to concur in before the termination of the session, will not only reduce two families to destitution, and utter destitution, but will send me to private life not any poorer or richer, but much more unhappy than I need be. I have not asked the Senate to disturb the Calendar, or anything else up to this moment, to consider either of those bills. I am not going to press them now against this demand for the regular order, but I shall take my seat in the hope that between this time and twelve o'clock on Tuesday noon, the Senate will allow these two little matters to be considered. They will make me very much richer, not in pocket; they will not make the Treasury any poorer.

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield to the Senator from Wisconsin, but I will not yield to anybody else. If there is any debate on the bill he wishes to call up I shall insist on the regular order.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Alabama cannot do that. I call for the regular order. We are all equally interested in matters and have not had an opportunity of calling them up. When we get through with the river and harbor bill, we can call these matters up and consider them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill, and the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill I wish to give notice that I shall at the close of the consideration of the river and harbor bill ask the Senate to take up the amendments of the House to the census bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask unanimous consent to state that the bill touching the printing of books for the blind was to come before the Senate by unanimous consent some three mornings since and was set aside against what I think was a fair understanding. I now give notice that at the earliest moment I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill and pass it in the form in which it passed the House.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPENCER. Before we proceed with the consideration of this bill, I move that the five-minute rule be applied to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama moves that the five-minute rule be applied to debate on this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Commerce be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be observed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask the Senator who has charge of the bill to give way a moment to allow a bill to be taken from the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has objected and several Senators have objected to any business interfering with the regular order.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is simply to concur in a House amendment to a Senate bill and it will not take two minutes to consider it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to take up a bill at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. SPENCER. It is objected to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so stated.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is simply to concur in a House amendment to a Senate bill. It will not take two minutes.

Mr. SPENCER. There will be plenty of opportunities to transact legislative business after the river and harbor bill is passed. When this bill is passed all the appropriation bills will be in committees of conference, and we shall then have at least thirty-six hours for legislative business, and ample opportunities will be afforded Senators to get their bills through.

Mr. PADDOCK. If my friend had kept his seat the amendment of the House would have been concurred in before this time.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 8, to increase the appropriation for improving Penobscot River, Maine, from $2,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 29, section 1, to increase the appropriation for improving Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, from $30,000 to $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 38 of section 1, to increase the appropriation for improving Thames River, Connecticut, to secure a fourteen-foot channel, from $7,500 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 40 and 41, as follows: For improving Housatonic River, Connecticut, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 42, to increase the appropriation for improving harbor at Bridgeport, Connecticut, from $6,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 44, after the word "Connecticut," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" and after the word "dollars," in line 45, to strike out:

Of which sum not exceeding $1,500 shall be expended on the bar below the bridge.

So as to read:

For improving harbor at Norwalk, Connecticut, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 51, to increase the appropriation for improving harbor at New Haven, Connecticut, from $7,500 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 64, after the word "harbor," to insert "Minnesota;" and after "twenty" to insert "five;" so as to read:

For improving Duluth Harbor, Minnesota, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 87, to insert:

For the improvement of the navigation of the Allegheny River from the mouth of French Creek to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 94, to increase the appropriation "for improving the harbor at Baltimore, Maryland," from $100,000 to $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 97, to increase the appropriation "for improving James River, Virginia," from $60,000 to $75,000.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "$75,000" and inserting "$100,000." This improvement of James River is one of the greatest importance, not only to the State of Virginia, but to the whole country. The appropriations that have been made, as the estimates of the engineers will show, are merely sufficient now to operate upon the upper end of the channel near Richmond. By increasing the appropriation to $100,000 the engineers will be enabled to remove the bar at another point below. The estimates of the engineers show that this whole amount can be expended in securing an average of eighteen feet of water from the Chesapeake to the city of Richmond; which will give sea-going vessels of large tonnage the opportunity of coming up to the city of Richmond. The increase I propose is in the interest of economy to this extent, that a large part of it, a good portion at any rate of the appropriations made in small sums is lost by reason of the failure to complete the work at the point at which the operations are going on.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator from Virginia will wait until we can get through with the amendments of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now is just the time. It is the only time the Senator can make the motion in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WITHERS. If I let it pass now it will go beyond my control. I only wished to make the statement I have made. I do not propose to discuss the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, increasing the appropriation for the improvement of the James River from $75,000 to $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the Senate decided the other day, incidentally, on the arrears of pension bill that this river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill. I believe that has been held hitherto in respect of amendments to it; but I think there is a rule that applies to this particular bill, as to amendments being made to increase the appropriations. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia whether this amendment which he now proposes was, according to Rule 28, referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. WITHERS. This particular amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce with the evidence to sustain the application for an increased appropriation. I asked for a hundred thousand dollars, and presented the report of the engineers and several accompanying papers. I wish to call attention to the fact that the city of Richmond has herself expended nearly as much as the General Government has done on this improvement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it right, in making an apology to the Senator from Virginia for asking him the question, to say that on looking at the rule I do not think it would apply to this motion. The rule is as to amendments proposing "to add new items of appropriation." This is merely increasing an item in the bill; so that I do not think the rule will apply to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WITHERS. I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that in every river and harbor bill we have ever passed that principle has been recognized as to amendments, and the amounts have been increased at the pleasure of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say I see that the rule only provides for certain amendments that propose new items, instead of those that increase the old ones. It seems to be in conformity with the spirit of all these river and harbor bills, that every facility shall be given to increasing the appropriation; and, therefore I think, the rule has been very carefully prepared with that view. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia what was the amount appropriated for this object in the last river and harbor bill?

Mr. WITHERS. It was $75,000, according to my recollection.

Mr. RANSOM. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like in this same connection (because it is perhaps as well now as at any time) to be informed as to the amount of the total of the appropriations in the bill as it came from the House. Perhaps the Senator in charge of the bill can tell us.

Mr. SPENCER. The total amount of the appropriations in the bill as it came from the House and as it was referred to the committee was $5,800,000. The Senate Committee on Commerce have increased it by amendments $1,198,000; so that the total amount appropriated by the bill as it now stands is $6,998,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a very gratifying increase, Mr. President; but still, I am bound to say in respect of this amendment of the Senator from Virginia, that I think his river, which really amounts to a river and has commerce, is one to which we can be liberal, if we may be to any, because it is really a commercial river of the United States; and I have only called attention to these questions in order to see upon what principles the bill is proceeding. I dare say the Senator is right; I do not know.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia what is the estimate by the War Department for this year for this improvement?

Mr. WITHERS. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars, I think.

Mr. SPENCER. The estimate is $150,000 for the pending year.

Mr. WITHERS. I was giving the amount from mere recollection.

It is $150,000, as the chairman of the committee informs us.

Mr. MITCHELL. How much does the Senator ask?

Mr. WITHERS. I ask for $100,000.

Mr. SPENCER. The committee agreed to appropriate $75,000.

Mr. WITHERS. The committee very generously increased the appropriation, because they knew that $60,000, as fixed in the bill by the House, would be insufficient to produce any practical result; but $100,000 would go very far toward placing the work on a permanent basis, so that nothing subsequently would be required.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Virginia will not be adopted. The committee recommended an increase of $15,000 for the James River. They have also doubled the appropriation for the Appomattox River, making it $20,000 instead of $10,000 as it came from the House.

Mr. WITHERS. We can consider the Appomattox appropriation when we come to it.

Mr. SPENCER. I am stating what the committee has done for the State of Virginia as a reason why the amendment to the amendment of the committee should not be adopted. The committee have also increased the appropriation for Norfolk from $50,000 to $75,000. I think we have been as liberal to Virginia as we could be; and I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. WITHERS. I am not complaining of the illiberality of the committee, but, on the contrary, I am very much obliged to them for their liberality. I only wanted to call the attention of the committee and the Senate to the importance of especially two points in this bill as regards my State, the improvement of the harbor of Norfolk and the improvement of James River, where I think the appropriations made by this bill are nothing like as large in proportion as they are for places of similar importance in other localities. I ask simply that the appropriations for these two points shall be increased to such an extent as to make permanent improvements, for which money will not be required to be subsequently spent in such large amounts. The other appropriations in the bill for Virginia I am not complaining of. The Appomattox appropriation referred to by the acting chairman of the committee is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. SPENCER. The allowances by the Committee on Commerce for these works are larger in proportion to the recommendation of the Department than for any other places named in the bill that I know of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to say one word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Debate is not in order when there is no quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no quorum voting, and nothing is in order save a call of the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the yeas and nays on my amendment. That is the way to decide the question and develop a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. If debate is not in order when a quorum is not present, is it in order to transact business by ordering the yeas and nays on the same question and calling the roll?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. My question was whether, when debate is not in order because a quorum is ascertained not to be present, it is in order to proceed with business by ordering the yeas and nays on any question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is one of the means of ascertaining whether a quorum is actually present.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand that the Chair was doing it for that purpose, but for passing on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia. But the effect is that this ruling of the Chair cuts off debate.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not understand the point made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the point raised by the Senator from Massachusetts to be that the yeas and nays cannot be demanded on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia when no quorum is present.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the only method of demonstrating the existence or the lack of a quorum.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama, representing the committee, rose to make an explanation of the bill, which I for one was desirous of listening to. He was ruled out of order because a quorum was ascertained not to be present; and then when he sat down the Senate proceeded to the business of ordering the yeas and nays and calling the roll on the question. My point of order is that we cannot go on with that business and thereby take the Senator off the floor and decide the question without debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order taken is correct. The Chair has no doubt about it. The Chair thought he would save the time of the Senate and develop the presence of a quorum in that way.

Mr. HOAR. I want to hear the speech of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator cannot hear it without a quorum.

Mr. SPENCER. Let the roll be called.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move a call of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The roll will be called.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the Chair by counting the Senate can ascertain whether a quorum is present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a quorum present; there is no doubt about it.

Mr. HAMLIN. And the Chair can determine it by his own personal count, from which, of course, an appeal can be had if anybody wants to take it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is satisfied that a quorum is present.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear all Senators upon this important question. Does the Senator from Vermont desire to be heard?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not desire to be heard; I only wish to proceed in order. If the Chair is satisfied that a quorum is present, then I shall be delighted to hear the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not claim the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will proceed with the call.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when Mr. ROLLINS's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. ROLLINS] is unable to be present on account of sickness.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—20.
Bailey,	Grover,	McCreery,	Teller,
Bruce,	Harris,	McPherson,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hereford,	Maxey,	Wadleigh,
Edmunds,	Jones of Florida,	Merrimon,	Wallace,
Garland,	Lamar,	Mitchell,	Withers.
NAYS—24.
Anthony,	Chandler,	Ingalls,	Patterson,
Barnum,	Dawes,	Kernan,	Plumb,
Blaine,	Dorsey,	McDonald,	Ransom,
Burnside,	Gordon,	Matthews,	Sargent,
Butler,	Hamlin,	Merrill,	Saunders,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hoar,	Paddock,	Spencer.
ABSENT—32.
Allison,	Conover,	Howe,	Randolph,
Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	Johnston,	Rollins,
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Booth,	Dennis,	Kellogg,	Sharon,
Cameron of Pa.,	Eaton,	Kirkwood,	Shields,
Chadwick,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Thurman,
Cockrell,	Ferry,	Morgan,	Whyte,
Cooking,	Hill,	Oglesby,	Windom.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 99, to increase the appropriation "for improving Appomattox River, Virginia," from $10,000 to $20,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator from Alabama tell us why the appropriation for this river is doubled and where it is?

Mr. SPENCER. It is at Petersburg, in Virginia. It is a navigable stream. The largest kind of ships go up that river to Petersburg. The appropriation is for the improvement of the river from its mouth to Petersburg. The amount recommended for this year as absolutely needed for that work was $30,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then if it was absolutely needed, why did not the committee give us $30,000 instead of wasting this money by giving only two-thirds of it?

Mr. SPENCER. It will not waste the money. We did not feel that we could give the entire amount recommended this year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 104, to increase the appropriation "for improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina," from $25,000 to $100,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have the Senator in charge of the bill tell us how much the last year's appropriation was for this river, and why the committee have quadrupled the sum proposed by the House of Representatives?

Mr. RANSOM. I take pleasure in stating to the Senator from Vermont that the appropriation for last year was $160,000, and this year the engineer in charge of the Atlantic coast from above Baltimore to Georgia came before the committee and recommended this appropriation, and recommended it in the most earnest terms, saying that this sum would complete the improvement of the river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my honorable friend from North Carolina if he concurs in the opinion of the engineer?

Mr. RANSOM. I hope so. I have been in the habit of concurring in the opinion of the engineer. I have no reason to question it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am delighted to hear that. This is the first instance I ever knew where any sum of money was to complete the improvement of a river. If this river happens to be completed by this appropriation it will be more famous than any river the Scripture has ever told us of.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the river will not be completed; I hope the work will be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am afraid not.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 112, to increase the appropriation "for improving harbor at Norfolk, Virginia, and its approaches" from $50,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 124, to increase the appropriation "for improving Neuse River, North Carolina," from $15,000 to $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 136 and 137 of section 1, as follows:

For improving Roanoke River, North Carolina, $1,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to make a point of order that it is not in order to strike an appropriation out of this bill. I think it is contrary to all precedents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The amendment was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Chair overrule the point of order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He does.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sorry for that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. He has known it to be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I never did before. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the words which have been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 139, to increase the appropriation "for improving harbor at Charleston, South Carolina," from $100,000 to $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 144, to increase the appropriation "for improving inside passage between Fernandina and Saint John's, Florida," from $3,000 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 137 and 138, as follows:

For improving Choctawhatchee River, Florida and Alabama, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 165, 166, and 167, in the following words:

For improving New River, from Lead Mines, in Wythe County, Virginia, to mouth of Greenbrier, $12,000.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the Senate non-concur in the recommendation of the committee striking out this clause.

Mr. HEREFORD. It will be seen that the Committee on Commerce of this body has stricken out the whole of the appropriation for New River. The amount recommended by the Secretary of War is $35,000. The amount placed in the bill by the House on the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce of that body was $12,000. Now it is stricken out by the committee of this body, and I hope the request made by the Senator from Virginia will be complied with to non-concur in the recommendation of the committee of this body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the question whether there is not an error in the clause proposed to be stricken out. It now reads:

For improving New River, from Lead Mines, in Wythe County, Virginia, to mouth of Greenbrier, $12,000.

The question I wish to have answered is whether it ought not to read "For improving the lead mines in Wythe County, Virginia?" [Laughter.]

Mr. HEREFORD. Do I understand the Senator to propound that question to me?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I propound it generally, to anybody who can answer it.

Mr. WITHERS. I can give the information to the Senator from Vermont, as I am perfectly familiar with the whole locality. The object is to secure transportation for the products of the lead and iron mines in that vicinity down to the railroads, and of course to throw it in communication with the river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. HEREFORD. This river runs through two States, and benefits a section of country two hundred miles in extent.

Mr. WITHERS. More than that.

Mr. SPENCER. The reason why the committee struck out this appropriation is because it will take a great many millions of dollars to make this river navigable to its mouth.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it lack water?

Mr. WITHERS. The statement of the Senator from Alabama is no doubt true, it would cost millions. We do not expect to make the river navigable to its mouth at this session, but we want to utilize a certain portion of it at this session so as to make it available for commercial purposes.

Mr. SPENCER. It is not a very large stream, and the committee thought they could consistently recommend the striking out of the clause.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to inquire of the Senator whether that is a trout stream or not?

Mr. SPENCER. We did not obtain any information on that subject.

Mr. HEREFORD. My friend from Maine has so many trout streams in his State that I can see why he should ask the question.

Mr. WITHERS. The river is larger than any in Maine except the Kennebec.

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Alabama who represents on this bill the Committee on Commerce as to his statement that it will take several millions to complete this work, that he is entirely in error. I hold in my hand the report of the Chief of Engineers made to this body through the Secretary of War, in which he uses the following language:

Amount estimated, required for completion of the existing project, $70,000.

That is all.

Mr. SPENCER. But my friend from West Virginia does not profess to say that the existing project is to make that river navigable to its mouth?

Mr. HEREFORD. No, sir; we do not propose to make it navigable to its mouth. But for the completion of the project that is now on hand, all that is estimated for is $70,000; $35,000 was proposed by the Chief of Engineers for this year, and the House appropriated $12,000, about one third of that amount. That appropriation has been stricken out by the Senate committee, and we ask that it may be reinstated. It is a very small sum.

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to ask my friend from West Virginia how a steamboat could get into this river?

Mr. HEREFORD. There is a steamboat already in it and running on it regularly.

Mr. SPENCER. How did it get in there?

Mr. HEREFORD. Like a steamboat gets into any other river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask whether the steamboat is as new as the river seems to be?

Mr. HEREFORD. The steamboat is a good deal newer than the river. The river is somewhat older than the Senator from Vermont, and the river is a great deal longer than all the rivers in the Senator's State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I supposed that this New River was one that was constructed when the State of West Virginia came in. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the clause.

Mr. HEREFORD called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. My rule of voting upon this bill, upon which of course I have very little information, is to follow the committee. If we vote down the committee and load the bill with millions upon millions, it will be lost. It is for the interest of every Senator who is desirous of having any appropriations made that this bill should pass as reported by the committee. If we repudiate the committee, we shall defeat the bill.

Mr. HEREFORD. I propose to stand by the House committee and the House in this bill, which gave just one-third of what is asked by the Department for this improvement.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that there is in this bill but one single appropriation left for the State of Delaware, $3,500, to improve Wilmington Harbor. There are other appropriations for the improvement of the Delaware River that are not designed and do not inure to the benefit of the State. There was another appropriation, for improving Mispillion Creek, Delaware. The House appropriated $3,000 to improve that stream, upon which there are three yards for building vessels. Vessels are built there of a thousand tons burden. And yet the committee have stricken that off, leaving the only appropriation for the State—$3,500—for Wilmington Harbor.

With such evidence I shall not feel the same obligation the Senator from Rhode Island does to follow the committee. I do not think the action of the committee has been just toward the different sections of the country, and I shall therefore not follow the committee.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to state in answer to the Senator from Delaware that the reason why we struck out the item to which he refers, for the improvement of Mispillion Creek, was because we could not find any recommendation from the engineers.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know what the Senator could find. There has been an estimate and a survey made of it. There was an appropriation made by the House less than was recommended, as I am informed by my colleague in the other House, and that was stricken out by the committee.

Mr. SPENCER. We failed to find it this year, and that is the reason why we struck the clause out. We should be glad to have it shown us now.

Mr. WITHERS. Here is an appropriation of $5,500 for the harbor at New Castle.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Virginia speaks of New Castle Harbor. The ice-harbor at New Castle is for the benefit of commerce going to Philadelphia, where it may take refuge behind those ice piers, and that is not for the interest of the State of Delaware.

Mr. WITHERS. Is it for the interest of commerce generally?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to know whether the improvement of the rivers of Virginia is for the interest of commerce generally.

Mr. WITHERS. Most assuredly it is, and for that purpose only.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think so.

Mr. WITHERS. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SPENCER. Let us have another division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the yeas and nays have been ordered. This is too important to let it pass in that way.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—26.
Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Kirkwood,	Plumb,
Barnum,	Dennis,	McCreery,	Ransom,
Booth,	Eaton,	McDonald,	Sargent,
Butler,	Hamlin,	Matthews,	Spencer,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 167, to insert:

For improving Pensacola Harbor, Florida, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill to line 178.

Mr. COKE. I move to amend the bill in line 177, after the word "Texas," by inserting:

To deepen the channel at the mouth of the Sabine River.

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest to the Senator that he wait until the committee's amendments are through with, and then will be the proper time to offer amendments to the bill.

Mr. COKE. Very well.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 214, to increase the appropriation "for improving the Mississippi River at and near Vicksburg, and protection of harbor at Vicksburg, Mississippi," from $27,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 238, to strike out the words "Sioux City, Iowa, twenty-five" and insert "Fort Benton, Montana, thirty;" so as to read:

For survey of Missouri River from its mouth to Fort Benton, Montana, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 242, to increase the appropriation "for Missouri River at or near Fort Leavenworth" from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 242, to insert "for improvement of Arkansas River between Fort Smith, Arkansas, and Wichita, Kansas, $20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 254, to increase the appropriation "for improving the Missouri River at Eastport, Iowa, and at Nebraska City, Nebraska," from $25,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 257, to increase the appropriation "for improving the Missouri River at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and at Omaha, Nebraska," from $40,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 259, to increase the appropriation "for improving the Missouri River above the mouth of the Yellowstone River" from $25,000 to $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 273, after "White River," to strike out "Buffalo Shoals," and in line 274, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "ten," and after "thousand" to strike out "five hundred;" so as to make the item read:

For improving White River, Arkansas, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 280, to increase the appropriation "for removing bar in the Mississippi River opposite Dubuque, Iowa," from $4,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 289, after the word "river," to strike out "Wisconsin, six" and insert "below Taylor's Falls, eight;" so as to read:

For improving Saint Croix River below Taylor's Falls, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "Minnesota," in line 291, to insert "and Dakota;" and in line 292, after the word "twenty," to insert "five;" so as to read:

For improving Red River of the North, Minnesota and Dakota, exclusively for dredging, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 296, to insert:

For improving Fourche Le Fevre River, Arkansas, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 302, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "six;" and in line 303, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving Cumberland River above Nashville, Tennessee, $39,000; of which sum $18,000 shall be expended from Nashville to the Kentucky line, $6,000 from the Kentucky line to Smith's shoals, and $15,000 at Smith's Shoals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 324, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

And provided, That in either case the entire cost of such lands to the United States shall not exceed $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out from lines 325 to 339, inclusive; as follows:

In consideration of the proposition of the Buffalo Bayou Ship-Channel Company to turn over their work at Morgan's Point, and to surrender their charter granted by the Legislature of Texas, and the rights accruing thereunder, to the United States, which proposition is now on file in the War Department, and is hereby accepted, the Government hereby adopts the line surveyed from the cut in Red Fish Bar to the cut in Morgan's Point, and the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated for the improvement of that line: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until said Buffalo Bayou Ship-Channel Company shall file with the Secretary of War, in manner and form to be by him approved, their acceptance of this provision of this act.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to say, in behalf of the Committee on Commerce, in reference to this amendment that the committee recede from the amendment. The reason that they struck out that clause was that at the time they could not find the recommendation of the Engineer department. It has been furnished to us since, and we are all convinced that the appropriation should be made.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to say in this connection that this is one of the most important improvements in the whole South, and I am very glad the committee desire to correct their misapprehension. I hope the lines will not be stricken out, but remain where they are in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear a report from the War Department upon this important proposition read. It apparently involves a contract or trade between the United States and a corporation of the State of Texas, which may involve the United States in liabilities to a very great extent; I do not know. Therefore I should be glad to hear the official communication upon the subject read.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator from Texas has it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be sent to the desk, and we shall hear what it is.

Mr. SPENCER. We struck it out in the committee because we had not sufficient information on the subject then, but we have obtained it since.

Mr. MAXEY. The War Department says, by telegram on the 25th of February, 1879:

There is on file in this office a resolution of the board of directors of the Buffalo Bayou Ship-Channel Company, approved at an annual meeting of the stockholders, looking to the transfer to the United States of the channel constructed by said company, at the cost thereof or at a valuation by a commission of United States engineers—

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are entirely unable to hear the Senator from Texas. Will he be kind enough to send his official communication to the Clerk's desk and let it be read there. I could not hear a single word the Senator from Texas was reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read from the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From War Department.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 25, 1879.

To Hon. GEORGE E. SPENCER, United States Senate:

There is on file in this office a resolution of the board of directors of the Buffalo Bayou Ship-Channel Company, approved at an annual meeting of the stockholders, looking to the transfer to the United States of the channel constructed by said company at the cost thereof or at a valuation by a commission of United States engineers, the transfer to be made upon the completion by the United States of a channel for vessels of twelve feet draught connecting therewith. No recommendation has ever been made by this office in the matter. The value of the work of the company as estimated by Captain Howell in November, 1877, was $179,658.

H. G. WRIGHT,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that this telegram from the War Department be read in the same connection.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From War Department.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 28, 1879.

To Hon. S. B. MAXEY, United States Senate:

River and harbor act of 1876 appropriated $72,000 for ship-channel between Red Fish Bar and Morgan's Point. Act of 1878 makes this appropriation available between Red Fish Bar and Bolivar Channel. Appropriation for next year was asked for continuation of latter. Nothing asked for former, thus leaving channel through Upper Bay to be provided for and its location determined by Congress. Statement in dispatch of 25th that no recommendation had ever been made by this office in the matter had reference solely to the transfer by the company to the United States.

H. G. WRIGHT,
Acting Chief of Engineers.

Mr. MAXEY. If I can get the attention of the Senate for a few moments, I will try to explain this to the entire satisfaction of the Senator from Vermont, as well as of everybody else.

The ship-channel company was organized under a charter from the Legislature of Texas, the object of which was to secure a twelve-foot channel from Houston, Texas, down Buffalo Bayou and through Galveston Bay to the outer sea. In the course of that work, it was found to be advantageous to cut a canal across a narrow point or tongue of land known as Morgan's Point, running out between Buffalo Bayou and Galveston Bay. This cut-off or canal was dug across Morgan's Point, nearly opposite the mouth of San Jacinto River, which empties into Buffalo Bayou. They were enabled by this cut-off or canal to save the distance as well as a short turn going around the point, and thus secure a much better way to enter the bay through that canal.

This company did make the canal, and I think the work was well done, and the place for it well selected, so as to get the benefit of the current of San Jacinto River, which aids in pressing the water of Buffalo Bayou through this canal into Galveston Bay. That was under a charter of the State of Texas. I, as well as the other members of the Texas delegation, were seeking to have the appropriation made by the General Government for the improvement of trade, and we were unwilling to subject the commerce of the State to the levy of a toll by a private company. Therefore, we thought it best that the company should file a surrender of the charter and an acquittance of all claim thereto or rights thereunder in the event that the Government of the United States should accept the work which they have done, to be used as a part of the work which the Government is having done in securing this ship-channel; and you will bear in mind, Mr. President, that the Government has been making appropriations, and has been improving this work on the ship-channel so as to secure a twelve-foot channel to the open sea. Now, in running the channel from Red Fish Bar up into Buffalo Bayou, the best way is directly through this canal. That was a clear proposition; otherwise we should have had to run around Morgan's Point at largely greater expense, and over a longer and more difficult route.

Hence the friends of this improvement, which is one of the most important in the State, demanded that before the Government money should be put down there a surrender of the charter should be filed with the War Department, provided the Government would pay for the work which had been done by this company a price fixed by the United States engineer in the event that they believed that that work would be profitable and beneficial, and that that should be filed before any money should be expended in further improvement.

That has been done; and then, as a further guard, the Senate will find that this appropriation as it passed the House specifically provides on page 15, after making the appropriation of $80,000, that "no part of said sum shall be expended until the Buffalo Bayou Ship-Channel Company shall file with the Secretary of War, in manner and in form to be by him approved, the acceptance of this act." That is the wording of it. The whole purpose and design is to secure an absolute surrender of charter and quitance by the ship-channel company under their State charter to the Government of the United States, so that the commerce of the State of Texas passing through that twelve-foot channel should be free of toll to any company or individual, and that the Government should exercise absolute control of it the same as over other national waters. That is the purpose and design of it.

I will further state that in addition to the $72,500 appropriated for this work in 1876, and a further sum of $75,000 in the last bill, it is recommended by the Engineer department that the sum of $250,000 can be profitably expended in opening up this great commerce line to free and unrestricted, untaxed navigation. I trust this brief explanation, which I have made as clear as I could without maps, may be satisfactory; and it is proper that I should add that the commerce over this route is now great and constantly increasing, and the effect of this improvement will be to materially cheapen freights and thus benefit the people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a five-minute rule on this bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I greatly regret that the Senator from Texas should insist and that the Senator from Alabama should agree that this proposition should stand in this bill, which is an appropriation bill of whatever character you may call it. Here is a proposition which requires that the executive department shall accept a surrender of a State charter to the United States by which, if it could be done at all, which I am by no means prepared to admit, the United States have the responsibility to perform the duty that that charter imposed upon the corporation from whom it is to take this transfer. It seems in the bill that it is stated that a proposition is now on file in the War Department for that transfer of the charter of this private corporation to the United States for pay, and this bill declares that that proposition is hereby accepted. We have had no such proposition laid before us. We do not know what the proposition is. We do not know how much it involves of responsibility—I am not speaking of mere money at the present moment, that on a bill of this kind is of no account of course, but I am speaking of the ultimate responsibility of the United States not only in respect of treasure but in respect of specific duties that that charter undoubtedly requires this State corporation to perform; and yet the Senate of the United States is asked in the absence of any recommendation from the Executive or the Department or of the Chief of Engineers, and in the absence of the proposition itself, to shut up its eyes and accept that proposition, be it what it may.

Now, Mr. President, that is a species of legislation that, however meritorious it might turn out to be in the end, I must be excused from committing myself to, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAXEY. As a matter of course the Senator from Vermont, who is in this as in all things else, to say the least, exceedingly plausible, may succeed in killing one of the most important of all the commercial measures embodied in this bill.

I speak from personal knowledge in regard to that, having walked along that canal its entire length and having traveled all along that line. It is a very important work, and I assume that when the House put this clause in the bill and recited the nature and the character of this contract and surrender of charter, the presumption of law is that they had ample evidence to support the recitals; and I am not aware that there is any law which required them to bring forward the evidence which was before them and submit that evidence to the Senate rather than the conclusion drawn from that evidence, and which was properly examined by their committee.

The bill provides distinctly and emphatically that not one dollar of this money shall be paid until the entire control of the canal is transferred by the ship-channel company to the Government of the United States with complete surrender of charter rights, and the very object and design of that clause was that the commerce of the country should go through that channel free, and not be subject to tolls on the part of that company or any other company or any person whomsoever. If the purpose is to obstruct the commerce and to let this great work which has been going on by the Government of the United States for several years past, so be it. In the last two bills before this $147,500 have been appropriated for this work. If the object now is to drop all this, and let it go, and to assume that what was stated in this bill here is not true, and that the evidence does not support it, I have nothing more to say, only that it would be an exceedingly unwise and improper thing to do.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas what is the relation which the United States sustains when a charter issued by a State is, to use the phrase in this bill, surrendered by the corporation or persons chartered to the United States; are the United States liable to quo warranto in the State courts; are they liable to the laws regulating corporations?

Mr. MAXEY. Not in the slightest degree, in my judgment; not only so, but I do not believe that any charter granted by any State can interfere with national water-lanes. Besides, this company is entirely solvent, and as I understand free from debt, and therefore the United States could not possibly suffer.

Mr. HOAR. But is there any precedent?

Mr. MAXEY. The point made by the Senator from Vermont has, in my judgment, no force in it as a question of law. I cannot from memory recite a precedent; but the well-settled principles of law, and well-settled control by the National Government of national waters, would soon, if there was necessity, make a precedent in favor of eminent domain in the United States Government.

Mr. HOAR. I only know about this matter what the bill contains. I have not been able to follow entirely the explanation which the Senator from Texas has made with so much warmth; but what the bill seems on its face to provide for is the United States becoming a State corporation, or the assignee of a charter granted by a State to a State company. Now, if that be the case, is there any precedent for such legislation, or any defense for it? It may be that it does not mean that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, we do not know how much this State public work cost built under the charter of this State corporation, and we do not know how much it is proposed that we shall pay for it. We do not know whether or not it is to be turned over to the United States because it is a failing speculation for the corporators, like the Dismal Swamp Canal between North Carolina and Virginia, which has been so often pressed on us, or that it is to be bought in view, so far as the corporation is concerned, of getting out of an unfortunate speculation and having the United States foot the bill. We do not know anything about it. This proposal which is made to the United States is not laid before us. The Executive Department, bound to recommend public measures that it thinks to be suitable, says in this communication to us through one of its subordinate officers, but not from the Chief Magistrate or the Secretary of War, that no recommendation has been made. The honorable Senator from Texas says that if the disposition is to defeat the commerce of Texas, that is one thing. So say I. There is no such disposition. If the Senator from Texas who, through all this session filled up with a knowledge of the necessity of making this contract with this corporation, has not introduced any bill about it that I remember, or brought it to the attention of the Senate, asks us to pass on this snap at the last moment, I think we may ask with some propriety how it happens that we should not have had a bill on the subject, a careful investigation, the official documents, and a report of a committee in writing that would have set forth the whole thing to our view.

There is another thing about this. The honorable Senator says that it is of great interest to the United States to keep up this commerce—so be it—and that the United States has exclusive jurisdiction over navigable waters. So be it. But I never heard before that a canal company authorized by a State to dig a canal, thereby made that canal when dug, or contemplated on a map, a national water of the United States. That may be the law in the part of the Union from which my friend comes, but it is not thought to be the law east of the Alleghenies, I believe.

Mr. President, we have year after year found, the Senator says, and I have no doubt correctly—

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Vermont if the waters of the Mississippi are cut off in a new direction that is not a national work?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I may admit that.

Mr. MAXEY. In like manner if you dig a canal whereby you admit waters through a canal at the expense of the natural channel it comes under the control of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was saying that I might admit, I did not say that I did admit, that a natural cut-off in a navigable river that Providence had built would become a navigable water of the public. I think I may admit that without great danger. But now the Senator says that if a State corporation digs a channel through the earth and takes any part of the navigable waters of the United States to run through that channel, the channel itself becomes public water and open to public control, and of course implying the responsibility of public preservation, care, and improvement. I must express, with great deference to my honorable friend, my dissent from that proposition. I do not think it is sound either in constitutional law or in that general consideration of philosophy and justice and good sense which should characterize the observations of my honorable friend from Texas. [Here the hammer fell.] Is my time is out?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce to strike out the lines read.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish only to say that the committee, on later information, have consented to disagree to the amendment.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word on this amendment. The work it proposes to discontinue has been in progress since 1873, and is, I think, the most important public work on the coast of Texas. Without being able to speak in any other than a conjectural way, I would say that one-third of the commerce of Texas is floated over the channel the appropriation as it came from the House was intended to improve. I have seen an estimate that three hundred thousand bales of cotton annually go over it, and that $1 on each bale, which would be charged by the railroad for conveying it to Galveston, is saved, because it is shipped as cheaply from Clinton or Houston to New York as it would be from Galveston, where it would otherwise reach the sea. This is only one item. The committee which struck out the appropriation for this work could not have been aware of its vast importance. We believe in Texas that for commercial purposes it is an absolute necessity, giving competition, as it does, with the railroad, greatly to the advantage, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, of our trade and commerce. I cannot imagine how the fears of the honorable Senator from Vermont that the United States will be involved in the liabilities of the ship-channel company are to be realized.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Does he know whether this corporation is involved in debt or not?

Mr. COKE. Without knowing personally anything about it, I think it very safe to say that the corporation is not in debt. The late Charles Morgan, of New York, a distinguished millionaire, as I understand it, virtually constituted the corporation in his life-time, and since his death his heirs and legatees occupy the same relation to it. I presume the solvency of Morgan's estate will not be questioned.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The reason of my asking the question is this: If we take the charter and assets of the company and the company shall be found in debt, equity, I apprehend, would require us to pay that debt; and not knowing how that may be, it is rather a step in the dark for us to assume the obligation.

Mr. COKE. While I would probably controvert the Senator's legal proposition as applied to the provision of this bill on this subject if it were necessary, I repeat that the well-known character of Charles Morgan, his ability and success as a financial manager, and the great wealth of his estate, amounting, according to newspaper statements, to eight or ten millions of dollars, while the entire cost of the work proposed to be transferred is estimated not to exceed $180,000, renders this unnecessary. I do not believe that anybody who is informed as to the facts would for one moment entertain the remotest fear of danger from that source.

If the fears of the honorable Senator from Iowa were well grounded, still I would believe that the Government should take the risk and own the property, and relieve the commerce of the country of the burden of paying the tribute which will be exacted while it remains in private hands. It is too important a thoroughfare, too many millions of commerce travel over it to be under other than Government control. I hope the Senate will think well before it concludes to follow its committee in reversing the action of the House and striking a blow, when instead the helping hand should be extended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—12.
Anthony, Blaine, Booth.	Chandler, Edmunds, Kernan.	Kirkwood, Morrill, Rollins.	Sargent, Saulsbury, Wadleigh.
NAYS—37.
Barnum, Burnside, Butler, Cameron of Pa., Cameron of Wis., Coke, Davis of W. Va., Dawes, Dorsey, Eustis.	Ferry, Garland, Gordon, Harris, Hereford, Hill, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kellogg.	McCreery, McDonald, McPherson, Matthews, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morgan, Paddock, Plumb.	Saunders, Spencer, Teller, Thornton, Voorhees, Wallace, Withers.
ABSENT—27.
Allison, Bailey, Bayard, Beck, Bruce, Chaffee, Cockrell.	Conkling, Conover, Davis of Illinois, Dennis, Eaton, Grover, Hamlin.	Hoar, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Lamar, McMillan, Oglesby, Patterson.	Randolph, Ransom, Sharon, Shields, Whyte, Windom.

So the amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out lines 342 and 343, as follows:

For improving Hiawasee River, Tennessee, $3,000.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope that this amendment proposed by the committee will not be concurred in. It is true it is not a very large river, and it is equally true that it is a very small appropriation. My personal knowledge of the matter is not very accurate, but I beg to read a brief statement from my colleague in the House, the immediate representative of that district, whose statement is entitled to all the respect that the Senate could give my own. He says that—

Twenty thousand dollars has been expended on this river in the last two and a half years. The engineer reports that $10,000 will finish it to Broad Shoals, eighty-five miles from its mouth and within fifteen miles of the Ducktown copper mines. It runs through a rich agricultural country. One or more steamboats are constantly running on the river now as far as the mouth of Coosa River. The Ducktown Copper Company, when in full blast, have been compelled to transport by wagons all their ores of copper to Cleveland on the railroad forty-six miles and take back all of their supplies. Their transportation account has averaged more than $40,000 per annum. By completing this work so that boats can run regularly to the Broad Shoals, the Ducktown Copper Company will save annually twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars, and it will open up one of the richest iron regions in the South.

The appropriation is very small; the work, I think, is more than equal in importance to such an appropriation as this which is asked; and I very much hope that the committee as well as the Senate will allow the amendment to be non-concurred in and let the little appropriation of $3,000 stand.

Mr. SPENCER. This is a very small matter indeed. I want to say that the committee recommended the striking out of this item, because this is such a small stream, it is of very little consequence any way. From information derived from the Senator from Tennessee and some other information I am satisfied that if the committee had had it at the time they would have recommended the appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. As to the smallness of the stream, it is small, I grant, as compared with the larger ones; still it runs for one hundred or more miles into a very rich agricultural region and a very rich mineral region. The Ducktown copper mines are equal in richness and production to any copper mines in America, and this is an exceedingly rich iron region in addition, as well as a highly productive agricultural region; and exactly why its commercial facilities and advantages should be ignored when larger rivers are receiving their thousands and their hundreds of thousands of dollars to improve their natural advantages and facilities I cannot see. The river is small, the appropriation asked for is small, and I think there is quite as much justice in this as in any other appropriation in the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Tennessee did not understand me. I said the committee recommended the striking out on account of the smallness of the stream. They did not have the information they now have.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, I did not understand the honorable Senator.

Mr. SPENCER. If they had had the information they would not have recommended the striking out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, after line 349, to insert:

For an ice-harbor at the mouth of Muskingum River, Ohio, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "two hundred," in line 352, to insert "and fifty;" after the word "sum," in line 353, to strike out:

No part shall be expended on the Davis Island dam; and the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as remains unexpended, set apart by the Secretary of War out of the appropriation for the improvement of the Ohio River made by the act of June 18, 1878, for said Davis Island dam, is hereby prohibited from being expended on said Davis Island dam, and the same is made available and directed to be expended in the general improvement and deepening of the channel of said river and the removal of snags and obstructions therein. But of the sum hereby appropriated and made available for the improvement of the Ohio River.

And after "Grand Chain," in line 367, to strike out "and $30,000 between Pittsburgh and mouth of Beaver;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving the Ohio River, $250,000, of which sum $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended in the removal of obstructions at Grand Chain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 389.

Mr. HOWE. I am sorry to appeal from the action of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin to reserve his amendment until after we get through the committee amendments. Then it will be proper for him to offer it.

Mr. HOWE. It is just as convenient now.

Mr. SPENCER. But I have objected to others coming in now.

Mr. HOWE. I only want to add $12,000.

Mr. SPENCER. Wait until we get through the committee amendments.

Mr. HOWE. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 408, after the word "Fox," to strike out "rivers" and insert "Wisconsin Rivers;" and in line 409, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

For improving Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, Wisconsin, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 415, to increase the appropriation "for improving the harbor at Michigan City, Indiana," from $20,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 429, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and after "hundred" to strike out "and fifty;" and in line 431, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving Saint Mary's River and Saint Mary's Falls Canal, $300,000, of which sum $200,000 shall be expended on the canal, and $100,000 shall be expended on the survey and improvement of the river toward obtaining a depth in present channel of sixteen feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 438, to increase the appropriation "for improving the harbor at Saugatuck, Michigan," from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 450, to increase the appropriation "for improving the harbor at Muskegon, Michigan," from $2,500 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 458, to increase the appropriation "for improving the harbor at Toledo, Ohio," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 466, to increase the appropriation "for improving the harbor at Ashtabula, Ohio," from $9,000 to $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I ask the committee to consent to inserting the words "and surveying" in line 462; so as to read:

For improving and surveying harbor at Sandusky City, Ohio, $1,000.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no objection. It has been surveyed, and they want a new survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 487, the item for improving Oakland Harbor, California.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to strike out "July" there and insert "September." The time fixed by the committee is entirely too short. I suppose there is no objection.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think there is any objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. "September" will be inserted in place of "July" in line 486.

The reading of the bill was continued in line 495.

Mr. SPENCER. In making up this copy by the Printer there was a mistake. After line 494 the words "and Feather River" should be stricken out, so as to read, "for improving Sacramento River, California;" and then the "eight" should be stricken out and "twenty" inserted, so as to make the appropriation $20,000 for improving Sacramento River.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. The amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 498.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to inquire of the committee whether it was not the intention of the committee to provide $6,000 for a bar at the mouth of the Columbia River?

Mr. SPENCER. It was the intention of the subcommittee to put in more.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not wish to do anything not recommended by the committee. I offer at this point, so as to conform to the views of the committee, after line 504, to insert:

For continuing the survey and observation of current at the bar at the mouth of the Columbia River, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 504, to increase the appropriation "for constructing canal around the Cascades of Columbia River" from $50,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 509, to increase the appropriation "for examinations and surveys for reservoir at sources of the Mississippi, Saint Croix, Chippewa, and Wisconsin Rivers; completing survey," from $12,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 511, to increase the appropriation "for improving Coos Bay, Oregon," from $40,000 to $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to offer an amendment here, with the consent of the Committee on Commerce, to insert the words "the entrance to" after "improving," in line 511.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not see any objection to that.

Mr. MITCHELL. Also after "Coos Bay" I move to insert the words "and harbor."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Is there objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the clause be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is "for improving the entrance to Coos Bay and Harbor, Oregon, $60,000."

Mr. MITCHELL. I believe that is correct according to the recommendation of the Department.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment was to strike out lines 526 and 527, as follows:

For improving Mispillion Creek, Delaware, $3,000.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

Mr. RANSOM. Will my friend yield to me? The subcommittee who had this matter in hand were under the impression from its not being brought forward in the estimate of this year that there was no estimate for this improvement. We are informed by the Senators from that State that they have looked into it and that there is an estimate, which seems to have been overlooked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 529, to increase the appropriation for "improving the Delaware River at or near Cherry Island Flats" from $75,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 534 and 535, as follows:

For improving Woodbridge Creek, New Jersey, $4,000.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand that the committee were prompted to strike out the appropriation for this improvement from the fact that they had before them no evidence that a survey had been made or that the improvement had been recommended by the proper department of the Government, the Engineer Corps. I have in my hand the report of the survey of Engineer J. H. Holmes, and also the report of Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, giving an estimate of the amount of traffic through this creek for the past ten years, which amounted to an average of about one hundred and thirty thousand tons a year. The estimated amount during the past year has been about three hundred thousand tons. I would ask the committee to consent to have it restored to the body of the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. The committee did recommend striking out this appropriation, because at the time they could not find the estimate.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have in my hand the estimate, which can be read if the Senator desires.

Mr. SPENCER. It is not necessary to take time in that way. That was the reason.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have the estimate, and it can be read.

Mr. SPENCER. The committee have no objection to the item if it is recommended by the Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment. The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 542, to increase the appropriation "for improving Flushing Bay, New York," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 544, after the word "river," to strike out "at Buffalo Rapids, ten," and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the item read:

For improving Yellowstone River, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 558 and 559, in the following words:

For improving Urbana Creek, Virginia, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 566, to change the appropriation "for improving Boston Harbor, to be expended in the improvement of Anchorage Shoals, the channel at the lower, middle, and dredging the upper harbor near the mouth of Mystic River," from $25,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the committee not to confine the $50,000 to that particular point, but to have it so that $25,000 of it may be expended on the harbor under the direction of the engineer.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator send his amendment to the desk? There is no objection to the change of phraseology. We left the phraseology as it came from the House.

Mr. DAWES. Then just leave it "for improving Boston Harbor, $50,000," striking out all after the word "harbor" in line 563 down to and including the word "twenty-five" in line 566; so as to read:

For improving Boston Harbor, $50,000.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be so amended, no objection being interposed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 579, to increase the appropriation "for improving entrance to Wood's Holl Harbor, Massachusetts," from $5,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 583, to increase the appropriation "for improving L'Anquille River, Arkansas," from $3,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 596, to insert:

For the commencement of the work of constructing a harbor of refuge at Scituate, Massachusetts, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 602 and 603, in the following words:

For improving Southport Harbor, Connecticut, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 618 and 619, as follows:

For improving Neuse River, North Carolina, from Smithfield to Goldsborough, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 622 to line 634, in the following words:

For improving Aransas Pass and Bay up to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Texas, $35,000, which sum shall be expended in deepening the channel across the outer bar of Aransas Pass and the protection of the head of Mustang Island: Provided, That if the expenditure of said sum in the manner indicated herein involve the improvement of any channel or way owned or controlled by any corporation or person with the right to levy tolls or otherwise to affect the navigation and commerce thereof, no part of said sum shall be expended until such right, ownership, and control shall have been surrendered and relinquished to the United States, free of cost, in manner and form to be approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator from Texas will yield to me a moment. The committee moved to strike out this appropriation because it could not find the estimate. Since the bill was sent to the Printer the estimates were furnished it, and are here and can be read. I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. There can be no objection to disagreeing to this amendment. The whole committee are in favor of the clause.

Mr. COKE. Then I suppose I need say nothing.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, after line 634, to insert:

For improvement of Missouri River at Vermillion, Dakota, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 637, to increase the appropriation "for improving Brunswick Harbor, Georgia," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 640, to increase the appropriation "for improving Portsmouth Harbor, New Hampshire," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 648, to increase the appropriation "for improving the Osage River, Kansas and Missouri," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 676 and 677, in the following words:

For improving Savannah River above Augusta, Georgia, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 678, after the word "river," to strike out "in front of" and insert "at;" in line 679, after the word "Illinois," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "but no part of this sum shall be expended on the harbor;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving navigation of Mississippi River at Quincy, Illinois, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 682, to increase the appropriation "for improving Harlem River, New York," from $100,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 688, to increase the appropriation "for improving the Delaware River at Schooner Ledge" from $50,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 688, to insert:

That the sum of $150,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended by the Secretary of War in the commencement of the construction of a breakwater at such point on the Pacific Ocean, between the Strait of Fuca and San Francisco, California, as may, in the opinion of a majority of the board of United States engineers for the Pacific coast, be most suitable, the interests of commerce, local and general, being considered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move an amendment on line 693 by inserting, after the word "breakwater," the words "and harbor of refuge."

Mr. SPENCER. I see no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, after line 698, to insert:

For continuing the improvement of Currituck Sound and North River Bar, North Carolina, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. I beg leave now, from the Committee on Commerce, to offer an amendment, to come in after line 701:

For Yackin River, North Carolina, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section 1.

Mr. RANSOM. Before the second section is reached there is a verbal amendment I wish to make on page 16, where lines 369, 370, and 371 now read:

For improving Little Kanawha River, West Virginia, dredging, removing obstructions, and for wing-dams, if required, $18,000.

I move to strike out all after the word "Virginia" and to insert "according to the report of the Secretary of War, $18,000." This does not affect the amount at all. The item will then read:

For improving Little Kanawha River, West Virginia, according to the report of the Secretary of War, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. Before going to the second section, which only provides for surveys, I move to amend on page 10 by striking out the proviso from line 232 to 237, in these words:

Provided, That not exceeding $20,000 thereof shall be used by the War Department in making a practical test of the flume invented by M. J. Adams; said test to be made under the supervision and direction of said Adams, but without compensation to said Adams for his services.

There is an appropriation of $20,000 for an invention. If the Engineer department think fit to use anybody's invention it is very proper for them to do so, but I do not think it is a proper thing to legislate for. I move to strike out the proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment to strike out the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I now move to amend after line 701, on page 20, by inserting:

For dredging the channel in the Potomac River through the flats in front of the landing at Mount Vernon, $4,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any necessity for that according to the report of the engineers?

Mr. SPENCER. It is recommended by the Secretary of War, and there seems to be a very pressing necessity for it. The steamers from Washington to Mount Vernon find it impossible to get over the bar, and an appropriation of $4,000 is asked for.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. Now let the second section of the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be continued.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator having charge of the bill desires that the amendments of the Committee on Commerce shall first be acted upon, which is the ordinary custom.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Then I shall wait.

The Secretary read section 2 to line 64.

Mr. SPENCER. After "Susquehanna River" I move to insert:

Between Nanticoke Dam and the New York State line.

Mr. KERNAN. Where is this dam? How far from the New York line?

Mr. SPENCER. I think it is in Pennsylvania. A great deal of coal goes up and down the river. This item is only for a survey. It makes no appropriation.

Mr. KERNAN. Is it slack-water navigation?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not know what it is for.

Mr. WALLACE. I hope the amendment will not prevail. Let the survey be made as the bill stands; then we can have the engineers apply the money to some portion of the river that can be valuable to the people of the State. Nanticoke Dam is on the northern branch of the river, hundreds of miles from the Maryland State line, at a point where there can be no value in its navigation to the people of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can make it of value by spending money on it.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not believe in spending money up there on the headwaters of the river and allowing a large portion of the stream to go undeveloped. I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SPENCER. The Susquehanna River has been surveyed, and if the Senator will look at the report of the engineer he will find that this was a mistake in the House. The chairman of the House committee gave me this amendment and said it was intended to be put in in the House, but these words were left out by mistake. It was at the request of the chairman of the House committee that I moved this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to be satisfactory, if the House committee wants it!

Mr. SPENCER. It is only a survey.

Mr. WALLACE. The purpose of the amendment will be covered by the bill as it stands, and the discretion where the money shall be applied will be left with the Engineer Corps, where it ought to be left. It therefore seems to me that it is wrong to urge this amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. This does not appropriate any money, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania. It only applies to a survey under the law.

Mr. WALLACE. I imagine that work cannot be had on any part of the Susquehanna River without the expenditure of money, even if it be a simple survey; and it is a direction to the Engineer Corps to survey a part of the river which is away in the northern part of the State from that where an improvement of the navigation is specially desirable.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 76 of section 2.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether "Bayou Courtableau, Louisiana," is so very important as to require it to be surveyed twice. On page 31, line 29, there is a provision for the survey of Bayou Courtableau, Louisiana, and on page 33, line 76, there is another provision for it. Is the bayou so large that it must be surveyed twice?

Mr. SPENCER. In answer to the Senator I will say that is evidently a mistake. I move to strike out the last one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can you do with one?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama to strike out line 76 of section 2? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 82 of section 2.

Mr. RANSOM. I move to strike out "Danville," in line 81, and insert "Clarksville."

Mr. EDMUNDS. How far above Danville is Clarksville?

Mr. RANSOM. Clarksville is below Danville.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the survey from the source to the mouth?

Mr. RANSOM. In that direction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 99 of section 2.

The next amendment was, after line 99 of section 2, to insert:

Cheyenne River, Dakota;

Continuing survey of the Yellowstone River.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. In line 103 of section 2 I move to strike out "for removal of Bell's Rock, in;" so as to read:

Survey and estimate, York River, Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that explained.

Mr. SPENCER. The object is to limit the survey to a particular purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You are going to leave the rock?

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 105 of section 2, to insert:

Bayfield Harbor, Wisconsin;

Ashland Harbor, Wisconsin;

Manistique River, Michigan;

Saint Mary's Falls ship-canal, for a sixteen-foot channel;

Kankakee River, Indiana and Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I offer the following amendment simply to correct a mistake in the last river and harbor bill, to come in at line 94, page 34, section 2. It does not add any appropriation:

For an accurate examination and survey of Alsea Harbor, Oregon, and bar in front of it;

Umpqua River, Oregon, between Scottsburg and its mouth;

The Cowlitz River, Washington Territory, for purpose of ascertaining the cost of removing snags and other obstructions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I move, on page 32, after line 61 of section 2, to insert:

Sacramento River, California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. In line 58, page 32, there is a verbal error. It should be changed. I move to strike out "Coney" and insert "Caney;" so as to read, "Caney Fork, Cumberland River, Tennessee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the end of line 111, section 2, I desire to insert:

Gasconade River from its mouth to Vienna, in Maries County, Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. After the last amendment, at line 111 of section 2, I move to insert:

For the resurvey of the outlet to Wolf Lake, in Lake County, Indiana.

For resurvey of Oconoke River, North Carolina.

For resurvey of Catawba River, North Carolina.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained. The outlet of Wolf Creek, if that be the name, has been surveyed once, and I am told that it has dried up since.

Mr. McDONALD. It has not dried up, but the water has deepened there, and it is quite evident that a resurvey of it will disclose the fact that with a little dredging there can be a very excellent harbor made at that point—an important one for lumber and staves and heavy freights from the upper part of the lake.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. On page 32, after line 43 of section 2, I move to insert:

Illinois River.

The Illinois River is one of the most important streams in the western country and needs a survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move, at the end of the second section, to add an amendment for a survey:

For survey of Broad Creek, a prong of the Nanticoke River, from its mouth to Laurel, Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed. The Secretary read section 3.

Mr. DENNIS. On page 31, line 21, section 2, after "Easton," I move to strike out "creek."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment of the Committee on Commerce not yet reported which will now be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to insert as additional sections the following:

SEC. 4. It shall be lawful for the Arkansas River Transfer Railway Company, a corporation having authority under the laws of the State of Arkansas, to build a railway from some suitable point in the city of Little Rock across the Arkansas River to some suitable point in the town of Argenta, all being in the county of Pulaski, in said State, to build a railway transit and wagon-bridge across said river, and that when constructed all trains of all railways terminating at the Arkansas River, at or near the location of said bridge, and all foot-passengers, animals, and vehicles shall be allowed to cross said bridge for a reasonable compensation, to be paid to the owners thereof; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, the cause may be tried before the district court of the United States in and for the eastern district of the State of Arkansas.

SEC. 5. That any bridge built under the provisions of this act may, at the option of the company building the same, be built as a draw-bridge, with a pivot, or with unbroken or continuous spans: Provided, That if said bridge shall be made with unbroken or continuous spans, it shall not be in any case of a less elevation than fifty feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, to the bottom chord of the bridge, nor shall the span over the main channel of the river be less than two hundred and fifty feet, nor shall there be a greater number of spans than four crossing the remaining width of said river, and the piers of said bridge shall all be parallel with the current of said river: And provided also, That if any bridge shall be constructed under this act as a draw-bridge, the same shall be a pivot-draw over the main channel, with spans of not less than one hundred and sixty feet in the clear on each side of the center or pivot pier of said bridge, and that there shall not be a greater number of fixed spans than four crossing the remaining width of said river, and said bridge shall not be less than ten feet above high-water mark, as understood at the location of said bridge, measuring to the bottom chord of said bridge, and all the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of said river: And provided also, That said draw shall be opened promptly, upon reasonable signal, for the passage of boats whose construction shall not be such as to admit of their passage under said bridge, except when a railroad train is passing over the same; but in no case shall any unnecessary delay occur in opening the draw after the passage of said train.

SEC. 6. That any bridge constructed under this act and according to its provisions shall be a lawful structure, and shall be recognized and known as a post route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate paid for their transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge; and the United States shall have the right of way for postal-telegraph purposes across said bridge.

SEC. 7. That said bridge shall not be built or commenced until the railway company aforesaid shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his approval, a plan with the necessary drawings of their bridge, conforming to the above requirements, nor until he shall approve the plan and location of said bridge, and notify the company of the same in writing. And should any change be made in the plan of the bridge during the progress of the work thereon, such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War; and the said structure shall be at all times so kept and managed as to offer reasonable and proper means for the passage of vessels through or under said structure; and said structure shall be changed, at the cost and expense of the owners thereof, from time to time, as Congress may direct, so as preserve the free and convenient navigation of said river; and the authority to erect and continue said bridge shall be subject to revocation or modification by law, whenever the public good shall, in the judgment of Congress, so require, without any expense or charge to the United States.

SEC. 8. That the right to alter or amend this act, so as to prevent or remove all material obstructions to the navigation of said river by the construction of said bridge, without expense to the United States, is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Chair whether this amendment is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make a point of order on the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; I confess that I expect it will be overruled because by the decision of the Senate on the arrears of pension bill it was held that that was not a general appropriation bill, and as far as I can understand it it is exactly like this, but still I should like to have the ruling of the Chair upon the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels reluctant to decide any points of order that have been decided by the Vice-President and by previous occupants of the chair, and would prefer that the matter be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to say in reference to this amendment that it was regularly referred to the Committee on Commerce and was adopted. The provision passed the Senate nearly a year ago as a separate bill, but has not yet passed the other House and is in committee there. It is not proper to state the condition of the business of the House, but the bill passed the Senate nearly a year ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate: Is the point of order raised by the Senator from Vermont well taken?

Mr. GARLAND. I did not distinctly hear the point of order submitted by the Senator from Vermont. I should like to know what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont please state the point of order again?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I asked the Chair to rule first whether this is a general appropriation bill, and second, whether this is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the first point the Chair would hold this is a general appropriation bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see that it is any more so than the arrears of pension bill which was held not to be by the Senate. I only make the point of order to see if these two propositions stand on the same ground. I am not objecting to the merits of this proposition, but I should merely like to have the Senate determine with a view to the future, as I believe it has hitherto, that you may do anything on a river and harbor bill that you like, but still to guard against accidents I should like to have the Senate decide the question.

Mr. GARLAND. On the question of order I do not concur with the Senator from Vermont. I am willing the Senate shall dispose of that as it seems proper without any observations from me; but upon the proposition itself—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not now debatable.

Mr. GARLAND. I want merely to suggest that it has received the sanction of the Senate heretofore by a separate bill in so many words to effect the same object.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask unanimous consent to say a word, as the question is not debatable—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair thinks that the merits of the question are not debatable on the point of order.

Mr. DORSEY. I am not familiar enough with the points of order that may be raised against this proposition to decide them, but I should like to say a single word in regard to the merits of the provision itself. This measure has passed the Senate now three times, the last time more than a year ago, but for some reason it lodges in a very close place in the House and never gets out. It is an amendment permitting the citizens of Little Rock to build a bridge across the river at that place from the center of the town, that I think every citizen of the town desires to have constructed. Under the laws of the United States it cannot be constructed until permission is obtained from Congress. The provision has been prepared by the War Department and the Chief of Engineers, and is entirely consistent with the system laid down in reference to their bridges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate: Shall this amendment be received?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall it be received under the point of order submitted by the Senator from Vermont?

The question being put, was decided in the affirmative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend section 5, in line 4, by inserting after the word "States" the words "and also to repeal this act."

Mr. SPENCER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. On page 17, line 391, I move the only amendment I shall move upon this bill, to strike out "eighteen" and insert "thirty:" so as to read:

For harbor of refuge at entrance to Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. I offer the following amendment, and I ask that a short letter from the Secretary of War be read in connection with it. On page 3, line 49, I move to insert:

For completing sea-wall already commenced on the west side of Governor's Island, New York, and constructing sea-wall on the southeast portion of said island, $39,000.

The Secretary read as follows:

February 25, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the estimate of $39,000 for completing sea-wall already commenced on west side of Governor's Island, New York, and constructing sea-wall on its southeast portion (page 129, Book of Estimates) and to appendix N of the Book of Estimates, (page 206,) and page 11 of the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for 1878, in explanation of said estimate, and beg to say that it is very desirable that an appropriation be made in accordance therewith during the present session of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. W. MCCRARY,
Secretary of War.

Hon. WM. WINDOM,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think there can be any objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I offer the following amendment:

Page 16, after line 367, insert:

For the improvement of the harbors of Pittsburgh and Allegheny City, by continuing the construction of Davis Island Dam, $200,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state his point of order.

Mr. SPENCER. The point of order is that it is not recommended by any Department or by any committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama insist on the point of order?

Mr. SPENCER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Senators who believe the amendment ought to be received will vote "ay," those opposed "no." [Putting the question.] The yeas have it. The amendment is not accepted.

Mr. FERRY. I move on page 29, after line 457, to insert:

For improving harbor and river at Au Sable, Michigan, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of the second section, page 34, insert:

The Pedee River, South Carolina.
The Santee River, South Carolina.
The Wateree River, South Carolina.
The Broad River, South Carolina.
The Catawba River, South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. After line 77, on page 4, I move to insert:

For removal of obstructions from the harbor at the Delaware breakwater, $25,000; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to give notice for a period of thirty days, in some newspaper published in the city of Philadelphia, to the owners, underwriters, and all other persons claiming title to or interest in the several vessels sunk in the harbor of Delaware breakwater, or the entrance thereto, to remove the same within thirty days from the date of said notice, and at the expiration of said time if such obstructions be not removed it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, and he hereby is authorized and directed, to cause such obstructions to be removed from said harbor.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to raise a point of order on that. It is not recommended by any committee or Department.

Mr. BAYARD. This amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce four days ago. It is recommended by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War. I would further say that this is a matter touching the entire commerce of the Atlantic coast. The breakwater is a shelter for hundreds of vessels at a time, and these wrecks put every vessel which seeks refuge there in great danger. It is essential to the preservation of the harbor, and I trust that every one will see the propriety of it.

Mr. RANSOM. The committee withdraw the point of order in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer the following amendment: page 24, lines 574 and 575, strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to increase the appropriation for improving Bayou la Fourche, Louisiana, to $25,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall have to raise the point of order on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the point of order.

Mr. SPENCER. That it is not recommended by any standing committee of the Senate nor by the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rule does not require a standing committee to recommend it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the amendment been referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. SPENCER. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If not referred the Chair would hold that under Rule 28 it is not admissible.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suppose the Chair will hear me controvert the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is not debatable except on an appeal.

Mr. KELLOGG. I must appeal to the Senate, for this is reported from a committee of the Senate and accompanied by an estimate from the head of the proper Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the Senator from Louisiana have leave to speak?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to this point of order if the Chair will please to have the rule read—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the rule.

The Secretary read as follows:

In like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call your attention, Mr. President, to the language of that rule. It is that an amendment that proposes a new item of appropriation must be referred. This amendment is not of that character, it does not make any new item at all but merely increases an item that exists in the bill. That very point was suggested on the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] some time ago, and by universal consent that distinction was observed, and I submit with great confidence to the Chair that he will see the propriety of the distinction.

Mr. KELLOGG. I cannot understand why this point of order should be now made after three or four amendments have been proposed where there was no estimate from the head of the Department, as I understand. If I am mistaken of course I shall be glad to be set right; but take the amendment moved by the Senator from Michigan—

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator alludes to the amendment I offered, I will say that there has been an estimate, and the amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce, so that in that instance I complied with all the injunctions of the rule.

Mr. KELLOGG. I believe I also have complied with the rules. The point of order, however, I did not see raised in regard to amendments from certain quarters while it is raised as to others without any statement whether they were predicated upon the estimate of the head of a Department or were reported by a committee.

The amendment that I offer proposes to increase the appropriation for deepening the channel of Bayou la Fourche from $10,000, the amount reported by the Committee on Commerce, to $25,000, and I ask the Secretary to read a communication from the Chief of Engineers, accompanied by two telegrams, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to these papers being read? The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report them. The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., February 3, 1879.

SIR: Your letter of the 29th ultimo was duly received—

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to know if the Chair did not rule on my point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was advised subsequently by the statement of Senators that this is not a new item of appropriation, but it proposes to increase an item already in the bill. Therefore it is not open to the point of order. The Secretary will proceed to the reading of the paper.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

I beg leave, in reply, to transmit the inclosed copies of telegrams received at this office from Captain C. W. Howell, Corps of Engineers, in relation to the improvement of Bayou la Fourche, Louisiana, which it is believed will furnish the desired information.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Brigadier-General and Chief of Engineers.

Hon. J. H. ACKLEN,
United States House of Representatives:
[Copy of telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, January 31, 1879.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
United States Army, Washington, D. C.:

Five thousand dollars additional will be required for Bayou la Fourche. The original estimate would have been sufficient but for the unfavorable character of the past season, which of course could not have been foreseen.

HOWELL, Engineers.

[Copy of telegram.]

NEW ORLEANS, February 1, 1879.

CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
United States Army, Washington, D. C.:

For widening and deepening low-water channel of Upper Bayou la Fourche, to temporarily improve flat-boat navigation, $25,000 will be required.

HOWELL, Superintendent.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now I withdraw my appeal, and ask that the Chair submit the question to the Senate if the Chair has any doubt.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point of order has been overruled.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well. I hope the amendment will be concurred in.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the motion will not be adopted. The committee have taken great care in looking over everything and have tried to do justice to all parts of the country. This stream, which is a very inconsiderable one, has a fair appropriation in the bill as it came from the House. If the Senate have paid any attention to the telegrams from the engineer in charge, they will have noticed that this is wanted for flat-boat navigation. We had better in these hard times not make any increased appropriations for that kind of navigation.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have only to say in reply that appropriations of fifteen or twenty thousand dollars have been made by the Committee on Commerce for streams of no greater importance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 20; no quorum voting.

Mr. SPENCER. Several more Senators are ready to vote who have not voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall there be another division? The Chair hears no objection, and the question will be put again.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 21.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senate will not have the yeas and nays at this late day of the session on inconsiderable things like this.

Only five Senators seconded the call for the yeas and nays—not a sufficient number.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLOGG. I give notice that I will renew the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. BARNUM. I move an amendment, on line 34, page 2, by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving Connecticut River below Hartford, Connecticut, including dredging between Hartford and Middletown, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I offer an amendment, which has been referred to the Committee on Commerce and estimated for by the Engineer department. It is on page 11, after line 245, to insert:

For improvement of the Missouri River near Brownville, Nebraska, $10,000; also, for improvement of the Missouri River near Plattsmouth, Nebraska, $10,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I shall have to raise the point of order on that, though I regret to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state his point of order.

Mr. PADDOCK. These amendments were estimated for by the War Department, and a survey has been had.

Mr. SPENCER. They are new appropriations and have not been recommended by any committee.

Mr. PADDOCK. They were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds, under the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, that these items have been estimated for and referred to the Committee on Commerce; they are therefore in order. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 24.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not rise to ask for the appropriation of any money, but on page 32, in the section for surveys, at line 43 I move to add:

Also, Alton Harbor, Illinois, and the Mississippi River opposite the mouth of the Missouri.

Mr. SPENCER. If it is only a survey, there is no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I want to propose two very small amendments. On line 394, page 17, I move to strike out the word "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty;" so as to make the clause read, "for improving harbor at Two Rivers, Wisconsin, $20,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. On line 402, page 17, I move to strike out the word "seven" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

For improving harbor at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, $15,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. I offer the following amendment simply to make the law conform to the report of the engineers: on page 38, line 177, between the words "Texas" and "six," I move to insert:

To deepen the channel at the mouth of Sabine River.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. On line 252, page 11, I move to strike out "nine" and insert "eighteen." This increases the appropriation for improving the Missouri River at Saint Joseph from $9,000 to $18,000, and I will say that that is the amount that is recommended by the Chief of Engineers to complete the improvement at that point, and to expend less than that is simply to throw away the money that is appropriated.

Mr. SPENCER. I object to that amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I will try some of these days when I have been here longer to get into the charmed circle that has control of these things, and to see if appropriations of this kind are to be made the subject of objection after the circle is closed up and has got in the particular favorites of those composing it. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asks me why I do not hold on. I am holding on as well as I can.

The Missouri River opposite Saint Joseph has so encroached upon the Kansas bank of the river as to nearly destroy the railroad bridge at that point. The Government has already appropriated a considerable sum of money there. The Chief of Engineers recommends $18,000 as necessary to complete the work. Now, if $18,000 will complete it, it does not require very much understanding, I think, to arrive at the conclusion that half that amount will simply be thrown away, which is the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether there is danger of this bridge being destroyed before another year, before this money can be spent?

Mr. PLUMB. It has been in a very precarious condition there for the last two years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who is the proprietor of the bridge?

Mr. PLUMB. It is owned by some eastern gentlemen; I do not know how far east they live. The bridge is the property, as all the bridges on the Missouri River are, of a private corporation. The western people do not have enough money to build such enterprises. They are carried on by eastern people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then certainly the Treasury ought to pay the money to take care of the railroad property, clearly!

Mr. PLUMB. It is all private property along the river, if the Senator from Vermont desires that information. There is not an acre of land on the Missouri River, from, I was going to say, its source to its mouth, that is not private property; and if the objection is to be taken that we are not to improve the Missouri River because thereby we improve somebody's private property, that point might as well be taken to all these appropriations.

The fact is that there is a railroad connection with the Union Pacific Railroad just beyond Fort Kearney, coming in from Saint Joe to that point, and that large interests there and the private property of the people living along there have been imperiled for years. The Government inaugurated a few years ago an improvement there that was designed to arrest this destruction of property and arrest the cutting away of the bank, and it has gone on so far that $18,000 is all that is necessary to complete it. I suggest that either this appropriation should be made as called for, or that no appropriation at all should be made; because an appropriation of $9,000 is simply to throw the money away.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the committee will not object to making this increase of appropriation to $18,000 and ending this work. Eighteen thousand dollars will complete it, and it will then be finished, and it is necessary that the whole amount should be appropriated in order to make the work safe and effectual for the end intended. If the $18,000 is not given at once it may take three times that amount in the end to complete the necessary work.

This work is needed in order to protect the landing at Saint Joseph, a large and flourishing city on the east bank of the river, and it is an important place. It is needed, further, for the improvement of the navigation of the Missouri River, which is cutting into and washing away a large space of land on the Kansas side, and it is carrying it down the river and making shoals and bars in other places. By taking $18,000 and putting it here the work will be completed and the channel will be thrown so as to wash out the harbor at Saint Joe, give a good harbor there, and keep up and maintain the navigation of the river.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS. I was detained from the Senate Chamber in the early part of the session this afternoon by severe indisposition. I was not here when the first section was read. I desire to move an amendment which will not increase the appropriation, but merely diverts $6,000 to a very worthy object, an amendment that was offered and agreed to last year, but fell out in a committee of conference. On line 118, page 6, I move to insert, after the word "channel," the words, "six thousand, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended for repairing the dam or causeway connecting Mason's Island, now known as Analostan Island, with the western bank of the Potomac."

Mr. SPENCER. I am opposed to this amendment, for this reason: if the Engineer department think this a worthy work, they have authority to do it. I am opposed to Congress saying where the engineers shall spend money or how they shall spend it. I think the Engineer department is much more competent in every respect to judge of such things than we are. Consequently I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ROLLINS. This is right and does not increase the appropriation at all. It has been recommended by the engineers.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 15, noes 29.

Mr. BAILEY. On page 13, line 296, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "forty," so that the clause, as amended, will read:

For improving Cumberland River below Nashville, Tennessee, $40,000.

I wish to say briefly that Nashville is six hundred miles from the mouth of the Cumberland River; that the Government has begun a great work to improve the navigation of the river, and each year steamers navigate that stream from its mouth to the city of Nashville. By looking at the Book of Estimates it will be found by the engineer's reports that it requires $70,000 to complete this work. Forty-five thousand dollars has been appropriated and has been expended. If $40,000 shall now be expended the work will be finished and we shall have an end of it. I hope the Senate will vote to make the appropriation $40,000 instead of $25,000.

Mr. SPENCER. This amendment has never been referred to the Committee on Commerce. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary under the rules that it should be referred. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee what the estimate of the Department is in reference to this matter?

Mr. BAILEY. The estimate is $70,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. And the amount appropriated, as far as the House is concerned, is $25,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. And the Senator now proposes to increase it to $40,000. I desire to say a word about this. I have been disposed, as far as I am concerned, to stand by the committee, and I have voted to indorse the action of the committee in reference to important rivers in my section of the country when I believed injustice had been done, not intentionally, of course, but where the amount proposed to be appropriated was entirely insufficient to carry on the great works that are now being carried on upon the Columbia River. But I desire now to give notice that if the Senate is determined to override the committee and to insert additional appropriations, I shall feel compelled to move a reconsideration in several cases and ask an increase; and I will call the attention of the honorable Senator from Tennessee and of the Senate to a few facts to justify me in the position I take.

The estimate of the Engineer department and the estimate of the War Department generally, and the recommendation of the Secretary of War, in relation to the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia is $500,000 for this year. The House allowed $50,000. The Senate committee increased it $50,000, so that the appropriation as now recommended is $100,000, or in other words precisely one-fifth of the amount of the estimate.

Now, then, what do we find in this bill? We find that for the Cape Fear River in North Carolina, for instance, the estimate is $50,000, and the amount appropriated is $100,000, or just double the estimate. An explanation was given of that by the Senator from North Carolina by saying that the engineer came before the committee and showed that this increase would complete the work. Take the James River improvement, Virginia. The estimate is $150,000; the amount appropriated in this bill is $75,000, or one half the estimate. For the Appomattox River, Virginia, the estimate is $30,000, and the amount appropriated is $20,000, or two-thirds of the estimate. Take the Neuse River, in North Carolina. The amount estimated is $50,000; the amount appropriated is $45,000, or nine-tenths of the estimate. Take Charleston Harbor, South Carolina. The amount estimated is $500,000, just the same as the estimate for the canal and locks of the Columbia River, and the committee recommend an appropriation of $250,000, or just one-half of the amount of the estimate, instead of one-fifth, as in the case of the Columbia River. Take the Alabama River; the estimate is $100,000; the appropriation is $30,000, or nearly one-third of the amount of the estimate. Take the harbor of Norfolk, Virginia; the estimate is $100,000, and the amount appropriated by this bill is $75,000, or three-fourths of the amount, instead of one-fifth of the amount, as in the case of the Columbia River. Take the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia. The estimate is $500,000; the amount appropriated is $150,000. That is little enough, I admit; but I say that it is $50,000 more than the amount appropriated for the Columbia River. Take the Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers, Alabama. The amount of the estimate is $100,000, and the amount appropriated is $30,000, nearly one-third of the estimate. Take the Coosa River, Georgia; the estimate is $150,000; the amount appropriated is $45,000, nearly one-third the amount of the estimate.

I have stood by and voted with the committee, notwithstanding they have done what seems to me to be a great injustice to that section of the country which I in part represent on this floor. I have stood by them because I thought the Committee on Commerce did the best they could, and that under all the circumstances it was best to stand by the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator will allow me to inquire what the entire estimate now is for the Cascades of the Columbia to complete the canal there from beginning to end?

Mr. MITCHELL. The entire estimate is about $1,400,000; and I say it is not economy to appropriate one-fifth of the amount that the Secretary of War or the board of engineers says can be expended this year with economy.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have seen the Cascades of the Columbia River, and I have no question that it would be good for the future interests of that section to have a canal around the Cascades; but I will remind the Senator that the country above that which would be benefited by the canal is at present very sparsely settled. He will admit that there is not such a population in all that country east of the Cascades as to require that that canal should be now completed. That work may be of immense advantage, and be required when the country is more densely settled and its productive capacity further developed. While I believe that it would be the duty of the Government, in view of the interests of commerce upon the Upper Columbia, at some time to complete the canal, I do not think the Senator from Oregon has any reason to complain of the liberality of the Government toward the people he represents.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to say one word in answer to the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Delaware traveled up the Columbia River and passed back again on the boats of the company, but he has never been in that immense region which appears to him to be sparsely populated. The reason why it is not filled up to-day more than it is is because of a monopoly of the Columbia River, and this fact shows the great necessity for opening the Columbia to navigation.

As I said, I have been disposed to stand by the Committee on Commerce, and take their word for this year, hoping that next year we may be able to get more. But I insist that this bill should not be jeopardized by additional appropriations, especially from that section of the country which has been so liberally provided for in the bill as it was reported to the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Oregon speaks of one section of the country as having been liberally provided for. Tennessee has never had much money from the Government of the United States for the improvement of her rivers. It is true that the Tennessee River required for its improvement in its course through Alabama the expenditure of a very large amount, but in the State of Tennessee only a very small sum has ever been expended. The Cumberland River, one hundred miles above the city of Nashville, and for two hundred miles below the city of Nashville, traverses one of the most populous and productive regions in the South. It has in its course shoals that require to be removed in order to procure a continuous navigation which would be useful to the commerce of a million people. I do not say that we should not appropriate $50,000 or $100,000 to improve the Cascades of the Columbia because the commerce of that river is not useful to a million people.

The estimate is that it will require $75,000 to complete the improvement of the Cumberland. The committee appropriated $25,000 and I ask but $15,000 more in order that this work may be proceeded with, and that the commerce of this great region may be relieved. I think that my request is a very modest one.

I do not wish to antagonize anything that the Senator from Oregon may urge here. I have nothing to say against the improvement of the Cascades of the Columbia. I remember that upon one occasion I assisted the Senator from Oregon in a matter of very great importance to his people, but I make no comparisons between my action then and his position now. I thought then only of the necessities of his people, and I supported what I conceived to be an act of justice to his people. I am sorry the Senator has in return seen fit to oppose the appropriation I ask to have made for the improvement of the Cumberland River.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no doubt at all about the importance of the work the Senator urges. I was gratified at the assistance received from the Senator on another occasion, but I have felt it my duty to say what I have said in what I conceive to be the interest of the pending measure. We must restrict these appropriations or we shall lose the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not ask anything for the Tombigbee or the other streams of Tennessee, but only for the Cumberland, which is one of the most important tributaries of the Ohio, and is one of the most important rivers in the Mississippi Valley. It carries a commerce second to no stream except such great rivers as the Ohio and the Mississippi. I know that this work is needed, and the more speedily it shall be finished the better it will be for the country and the Treasury of the United States. Therefore I ask for this increase in the appropriation reported in the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will not be adopted. The engineers report that it will take $103,000 to finish the work and $70,000 is estimated for this year. The bill as now reported gives $25,000. That is more than a pro rata of the amount allowed to other States. I move to lay the pending amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama, to lay the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee on the table.

The question being put, the Senate refused to lay the amendment on the table; there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 26.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK, (at six o'clock p. m.) I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock this evening. [No! "No!"

Mr. PATTERSON and others. Let us get through with this bill. Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Kentucky to withdraw the motion for one moment?

Mr. BECK. I will, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire, after this bill receives final action what occasion is there for the Senate to stay here to-night at all?

Mr. BECK. There are going to be surely three or four disagreements upon very important bills now in committees of conference, which ought to be reported to-night. That is the only reason for staying here. I am advised of two or three conferences that will be ready to report to-night. I am myself on one committee of conference, and I am sure we shall not agree; and therefore it is necessary for the Senate to be in session.

Mr. CONKLING. Shall I understand the Senator to say that he expects to have the disagreements reported to-night?

Mr. BECK. I do, at ten o'clock.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope there will be no recess now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion is not open to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I object to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects to debate. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 33.

Mr. GORDON. Would it be in order now to move that when this bill is finished the Senate will take a recess until ten o'clock?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that such a motion is not in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say to the Senate that immediately after this bill is finished I want to call up the census bill and have the amendments of the House concurred in.

Mr. CONOVER. I move to add to the pending bill the following, on page 29, after line 701:

That for the purpose of removing obstructions and deepening the Volusia Bar, at the entrance of the Saint John's River into Lake George, Florida, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPENCER. I raise the point of order upon that amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state his point of order.

Mr. SPENCER. My point of order is that this amendment is not recommended by any Department and that it has not been referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONOVER. I will state that it was referred to the committee and that it is recommended by the Engineer department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Florida state to what committee it was referred?

Mr. SPENCER. Not to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONOVER. I beg the Senator's pardon; it was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SPENCER. When was it referred? I do not think it was referred as an amendment to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CONOVER. It was referred on the 10th of February as an amendment to the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is not open to the point of order under the rule. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 11—

Mr. CONOVER. I think if Senators have any doubt on this question, my colleague can read a letter from the Engineer department that will satisfy everybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable. The Senate is dividing.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 11, noes 32.

Mr. CONOVER. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 29, line 10:

That for the improvement of the bar at the mouth of the Saint John's River, Florida, the sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that that amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. A great deal of public time has been taken on matters of far less importance than this—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact that this motion is not debatable.

Does the Senator from Alabama withdraw his motion to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I appeal to the Senator from Alabama to withdraw his motion.

Mr. SPENCER. I cannot do that. We must get through with the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Let us understand what we are doing. If there is going to be any courtesy in the Senate, let us understand it. If the gag law is to be applied to everything that is meritorious, let us understand that it is to be applied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama insist on his motion?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I want to say a few words.

Mr. SPENCER. I will withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. This is a very important bill, and I do not think there ought to be a dissenting voice here in regard to the adoption of the amendment proposed to it by my colleague. I say, in justice and in fairness, if this is a real river and harbor bill, if the interests of the country are to be subserved, let us have a little improvement for a river second in the South only to the Mississippi.

I have here a recommendation for this work.

Mr. CHANDLER. Where is the river?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is the Saint John's River, which has attracted the attention of the whole country, which is to-day the greatest public waterway in that section except the Mississippi. Still there is not a dollar given to it, and when my colleague proposes to ask $15,000, the Senator who has the bill in charge says it must be laid on the table. That is not the way to meet this proposition. The people of this country understand it. I suppose there are sixty thousand people from all parts of the United States who traverse that river every year. There are Senators on the other side of the Chamber who know the necessity for this improvement. I appeal to their sense of justice to vote for this amendment, not because I want to defeat the bill, not because I want an appropriation that is not needed, but because I advocate that which I believe is necessary to the interest of the people of the United States. It is not entirely a local matter.

Mr. CONOVER. I simply wish to state that there has been an ap-proprietor for the improvement of the bar at the mouth of the Saint John's River nearly every year in my recollection, but in this instance it was inadvertently left out of the House bill. It is now recommended in the report of Major Gillmore, which my colleague has, and if necessary that report can be read. It is simply the usual appropriation made every year, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I may be deficient in knowledge of geography and probably I am, but on page 7 of the bill there is the following appropriation:

For improving inside passage between Fernandina and Saint John's, Florida, $7,000.

Mr. CONOVER. That is an entirely different thing.

Mr. SPENCER. The Committee on Commerce increased that appropriation from three thousand to seven thousand dollars.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That has nothing to do with the improvement at the mouth of the Saint John's River.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask if that is not an appropriation also for the Saint John's River.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is not. It is the inside passage, connecting the waters of Saint Mary or Savannah with Jacksonville. If the Senator will listen to me for a moment, I will explain that there are two ways of reaching the Saint John's River by water. One is by an outside passage, a seaward passage, which makes many people sick, by way of Charleston and Savannah. That is a very unpleasant passage. The other is by inland lakes and rivers, and is the most important passage in that section of the country. A few years ago the Engineer department recommended $50,000 for this improvement in the interest of the people of the United States who go to Florida every year to partake of our pleasant and genial climate. It is a well-known public fact that nearly sixty thousand people visit that region every winter, broken down in health and constitution, and they naturally seek the pleasantest mode of travel. This improvement is intended to enable steamers passing from Savannah to Jacksonville to go up a route which will not disturb the sensitiveness or delicacy of invalids. If they go by the outside passage they are subjected to seasickness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CONOVER.] The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer an amendment to come at the end of section 2.

Mr. HILL. Is a motion to postpone the bill indefinitely in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is always in order.

Mr. HILL. I think if this flood of amendments does not stop we ought to postpone the bill indefinitely. Really the country will be deluged by it. I regret to oppose further additions to the bill, but I am compelled to do so.

Mr. KELLOGG. The amendment I propose makes no appropriation. It simply provides for a survey. There will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 2:

For a survey and estimate for a breakwater to be constructed from a point at or near the new canal outlet to the Ponchartrain railroad wharf, said breakwater to be so constructed as to serve as a harbor of refuge for all vessels.

Mr. THURMAN. After what was said by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] there can be no doubt that the Senate ought to be in session at ten o'clock to-night and perhaps some time afterward. I am very well satisfied also, from what I hear all around of amendments that are still to be offered to this bill, that we cannot very well dispose of the bill in the short time indicated by the Senator who has the bill in charge. I move that the Senate take a recess until twelve o'clock.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to take a recess until twelve o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 18, noes 26.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

The amendment was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

J. G. BLAINE,

W. B. ALLISON,

R. E. WITHERS,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

ABRAM S. HEWITT,

W. A. J. SPARKS,

CHARLES FOSTER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. I move a new conference on the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BLAINE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. WALLACE were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I wish to offer an amendment, to be added as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, as an additional section to the bill, the following:

That the fourth and succeeding sections of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 3, A. D. 1875, authorizing James B. Eads and his associates to create and permanently maintain a wide and deep channel between the South Pass of the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico, be, and they are hereby, amended so as to provide, in lieu of the payments therein provided, that payments to said Eads or his legal representatives shall be made as follows, namely:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to draw his warrant upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States in favor of said James B. Eads or his legal representatives for the sum of $750,000, which said sum is hereby appropriated; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to said Eads or his legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum for which said warrant is drawn.

When a channel shall have been obtained by the action of the jetties and auxiliary works authorized by said act twenty-five feet in depth, and not less than two hundred feet in width at the bottom, through the said jetties, there shall be paid $500,000.

When a channel shall have been obtained through the jetties twenty-six feet in depth, and not less than two hundred feet in width at the bottom, there shall be paid $500,000.

When a channel thirty feet in depth, without regard to width, shall have been obtained through the jetties, there shall be paid $500,000; and the $1,000,000 provided by the hereinbefore-recited act to be paid by the United States in ten and twenty years shall be earned by said Eads and his associates, and the same, with interest, shall be paid to said Eads, or his legal representatives, at the times and in the manner provided by said act.

The $100,000 per annum provided by said recited act to be paid to said Eads and his associates during a period of twenty years shall be paid at the times and in the manner therein provided, upon the maintenance by said Eads and his associates of a channel through the jetties twenty-six feet in depth, not less than two hundred feet in width at the bottom, and having through it a central depth of thirty feet without regard to width.

Nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal or in any wise affect the provisions of the amendatory act approved June 19, A. D. 1875, by which said Eads is entitled to receive certain moneys to pay for materials furnished, labor done, and expenditures incurred in the construction of the work at the mouth of the Mississippi River; and the whole of the hereinbefore-recited act, approved March 3, A. D. 1875, except as the same is hereby expressly modified or amended, or has by act heretofore passed been modified or amended, shall be and remain in full force, and have the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, this amendment is an important one, as the Senate knows, and I should be glad to have the Senate give it consideration. It proposes to appropriate for these jetties $2,500,000. It is clearly legislation of the broadest kind. It not only repeals statutes but it changes an existing agreement and contract, and it goes to the broadest extent in the way of legislation. I should like the Senate to understand what it is and to take it properly into consideration. I do not want to take the time of the Senate in discussing it unless the Senate expect to go into this whole question and debate it and press it to a vote, in which case it ought to be amended certainly before it passes this body. It is clearly legislation. It changes an existing contract, a law passed in 1875, which was modified last year. It changes in toto the conditions of what is known as the Eads jetty contract. I submit to the Chair that it is in the broadest sense legislation and is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS.) The Senator from West Virginia makes a point of order on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia will again state his point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My point of order is that it is not only legislation in itself but that it changes the existing law in some particulars, and changes entirely the conditions upon which the work is now being prosecuted at the mouth of the Mississippi River. I do not know but that it is also subject to the objection of not having been referred to the Committee on Commerce. I cannot speak as to that.

Mr. SPENCER. The amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and recommended by the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That was not the point I made. I understand it was referred to the Committee on Commerce, but I will ask the chairman of that committee whether it was considered in his committee?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes, it was considered there.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then it must have been rejected by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is not debatable, the Chair will remind the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not submitted it yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the point of order had been submitted, and that it was restated at the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the point to have been raised and to be now before the Senate subject to its decision. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate whether the amendment is in order under the point raised by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I should like to inquire under what rule the Senator from West Virginia raises the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposes under Rule 29, which provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. There can be no question in my mind that the amendment is perfectly in order—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator from Missouri that the question of order is not debatable. It must be submitted to the Senate, under the rule, without debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Chair to rule that when a question of order is submitted by the Chair to the Senate, then that question of order is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The twenty-ninth rule provides that—

All questions of relevancy under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate.

Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPENCER. I object to further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama objecting, further debate is not in order.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to ask a question of the Chair. Shall I understand the Chair to decide that if a question of relevancy is submitted to the Senate, it is not debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that under the general principles of parliamentary law, as laid down in the rule of the Senate, no question of order is debatable, unless an appeal is taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand, as the Chair does, in respect of the general principles of parliamentary law. I think, however, the rule of the Senate is otherwise. I venture to remind the Chair that the practice of the Senate has been incessantly otherwise for days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the decision has been to the contrary of the rule as stated by the Chair. The Chair desires to submit the whole matter to the decision of the Senate.

Mr. RANSOM. A few days ago in the Senate a colloquy took place between my colleague and the Senator from Ohio when I was of the same impression that the Chair has held, and I had to retire from it. Only last night, as the RECORD will show to-day, I again took the position that a question of order is not debatable, but upon being reminded by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that the matter had been decided a few days before on an appropriation bill in the Senate I had to yield.

Mr. CONKLING. The Chair now so rules.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to suggest to the Chair that there is a distinction between a question of relevancy and the point of order sought to be made by the Senator from West Virginia. He insists that this is general legislation—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will leave the whole matter to the decision of the Senate.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I have two observations to make: one is that I think the Senator from New York has stated the usage correctly; and the other is that the Chair has stated the law correctly. If the question is to be submitted to the Senate I shall stand by the Chair, the law of the Senator from New York and the usage of the Senate to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] had the floor when this question was decided by the Chair not to be debatable, and that Senator will now be recognized.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment has been considered by the appropriate committee of the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Commerce. It is simply a proposition to modify a former river and harbor act. All that this amendment proposes is to modify the conditions of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1875. It relates to a matter which has always received the attention and consideration of the Senate upon river and harbor bills. My memory is very defective in regard to the question of legislation on appropriation bills. I have never had any scruples about the power of the Senate to enact legislation on any kind of appropriation bills. If my memory serves me right—but I shall not be certain of it—on the last night of the last session we had a very important appropriation bill pending before the Senate, and it strikes me that the opposite side of the Chamber raised the point of order that there was legislation upon that appropriation bill, and that the side of the Chamber with which I act generally on political questions sustained that legislation to a man upon that appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ah, the Senator is in favor of this amendment. Then this question of order is to be decided by the fact whether Senators are in favor of the legislation or not.

Mr. HILL. That is the way we all do.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. I have been uniformly and consistently asserting the right and authority of the Senate to legislate upon appropriation bills. Here is the appropriation act of March 3, 1875, upon which this matter had its origin. Every act affecting the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River by the system of jetties has been on an appropriation bill. It is not, in the parliamentary sense, general legislation at all. I insist that it is regularly in order, and that this is the proper and legitimate place for testing the pending amendment. As to the merits of the amendment, that is an entirely different matter. When it is decided to be in order, then we can determine and ascertain whether the Senator from Georgia is correct or not in intimating that any legislation to which we are opposed is not in order on an appropriation bill, and that any legislation which we favor is always in order upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. That is the invariable rule practically.

Mr. CONKLING. What the rules of the Senate governing amendments to appropriation bills are understood by the Senate to mean, I do not know. What is to be the fate of those rules I have no means of foretelling. I venture, however, to express the belief that the rules should either be abrogated altogether or they should be made such as to command a common understanding. When, however, we come to what the Senate is to decide, I respectfully submit that there should be some equality, even if not consistency, in the decisions of the Senate.

I take up a bill called the river and harbor bill, the bill now pending, and I find section 4, and subsequent sections devoted to conferring upon a railway company the privilege of bridging the Arkansas River. That is not only general legislation, but legislation which provides by dint of a clause of the Constitution—wholly different from that on which internal improvements rest. It is, if I understand it aright, under the vagrant clause of the Constitution as it is called, that clause which confers power on Congress to regulate commerce among the several States, that we undertake to say that a boundary stream dividing States and traversing different States may or may not be bridged. I find in this bill sections to which every objection can be made which has been or can be aimed at the proposed amendment. I am told, although I was not present at the moment myself, that a point of order being raised upon these amendments, the Senate adjudged that the amendments were in order, and that on an appropriation bill to improve rivers and harbors, it was competent under the rules of the Senate to so legislate that a railway company may upon such and such conditions bridge a stream. If that be the decision of the Senate as reported to me I do not see how I can vote, or how any Senator can vote, that a proposition is out of order which is intended to deal with improvements upon the jetties in respect of the commerce of the Mississippi River. Therefore I shall vote that this amendment, the merits of which I do not at this moment say anything about, is in order, and in order because the Senate has deliberately decided that a proposition not only equivalent but more offensive to the objections assigned to this is in order, and in order upon this bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, I rise not to detain the Senate—

Mr. SPENCER. I must raise a point of order, for patience ceases to be a virtue any longer. My point of order is that the five-minute rule has been adopted, and that no Senator can speak more than once on the same question. The Senator from West Virginia has already spoken once upon this question.

Mr. THURMAN. Has the Senator from West Virginia spoken once already on this proposition?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I was up a few moments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order then is well taken.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish merely to correct the Senator from Missouri when he said that a similar provision was on the river and harbor act last year. The Senator was mistaken when he said that.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment last year was not on the river and harbor act, I understand.

Mr. WINDOM. A single word upon the point of order raised by the Senator from West Virginia. I think I have held as strictly against legislation on general appropriation bills as any Senator in the Chamber, but I do not believe that this amendment is out of order. I think it is not out of order, for the reason that the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill as contemplated by the twenty-eighth rule. The rule provides that—

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received.

That closes the part of the rule which refers to general appropriation bills, and then it proceeds:

In like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The rule itself draws a marked distinction, as I read it, between general appropriation bills and river and harbor bills. If the rule did not mean to make that distinction, why that second clause which I have read? If no distinction was contemplated it would have been covered entirely by the first proposition. Hence I say by the fair reading of the rule itself the river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill, and the point of order made upon it by the Senator from West Virginia does not apply.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, referring to the argument just submitted by the Senator from New York, I understand it to amount to this: the Senate decided that an amendment providing for a bridge was in order, and therefore this amendment is in order. I suppose the competency of both amendments ought to be passed upon in the light of the laws of the Senate, and if the Senate rule improperly on one it does not excuse us for deciding incorrectly upon another. The Senator from Minnesota submits that this river and harbor bill is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. WINDOM. In the sense of the rule.

Mr. HOWE. In the sense of the rule. He neglected to state how he distinguished between this bill and a general appropriation bill.

Mr. WINDOM. Will the Senator allow me to explain how I distinguished between them?

Mr. HOWE. Certainly.

Mr. WINDOM. The first article of the rule makes a certain provision with reference to general appropriation bills, and uses the term "general appropriation bills." When it closes the provision against amendments to general appropriation bills it proceeds to make a distinction by providing that certain things shall not be in order on river and harbor bills. Let me ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question: If the river and harbor bill be a general appropriation bill in the sense of the rule, what is the necessity for these words?

In like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOWE. Simply to require that amendments to that particular bill shall be referred to the committee which has charge of the bill, instead of being referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which has not charge of this bill, but has charge of all other general appropriation bills.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] be admitted as a pending amendment as in order under the twenty-ninth rule of the Senate?

Mr. HOWE. For the purpose of having a landmark, if we can get one by these decisions, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the Senator will withdraw the call.

Mr. SPENCER. I appeal to the Senator from Wisconsin to withdraw the call. It wastes time for nothing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN,] who is detained from the Senate by illness, upon all the critical subjects of this bill, and as this may be one of them, I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. GORDON, (when his name was called.) I am paired on all subjects with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I decline to vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when his name was called.) On the merits of this question my vote is that it is not in order.

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. McDONALD, (after having voted "yea.") I am paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] I do not know how the Senator from Maine would vote on this question; and, being in doubt, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Barnum,	Davis of Illinois,	McCreery,	Rollins,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is not sustained. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of this Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. BECK. Pending the consideration of this measure, which I know will take a good while to discuss, I move that the Senate take a recess until ten o'clock. ["No!" "No!"]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 16, nays 31.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] had the floor. I want to hear him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, as I have only five minutes, of course I must be very brief. I will simply state the facts in regard to this scheme as they appear.

In 1875 the Government by an act entered into a contract or arrangement with Captain Eads for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi. That contract required Captain Eads to have certain depths of water and certain widths, and certain amounts were to be paid when the result was accomplished. The act was passed at the solicitation of the contractor, at his urgent solicitation, making his own arrangements, making his own specifications. Certain conditions were imposed by the act, and it was on the principle of "no cure, no pay." In due time the first payment became due. The Government did not make that payment on the day, according to the letter of the law; a few days elapsed after it was due, and when the Government offered to pay it the contractor said, "No, you have agreed either to give me the money on the day it was due or to give me your bonds." The bonds being worth a little more than par at that time, the Government was forced to issue its bonds and increase its public debt to fulfill that part of the contract.

Two years elapsed, when Captain Eads appeared before Congress and asked a modification of the contract. Congress, after a good deal of hesitation, granted it, and made the conditions better by the fact that it advanced money; at least about $1,000,000 in advance of its being due. Encouraged by that success, we have now another application much broader in its terms and asking much more. At this time we are asked not only to make a further advance of money of $2,500,000 before it is due, before it is earned, before the conditions imposed by the law are complied with, but we are asked to make modifications of depth, modifications of width, and virtually he says to us: "I never expect to do what I agreed to do, but still I want my money, and I want you now to legislate so that I can get it in advance; in other words, I want you to change all you have previously done by two acts, and put me in a better condition than I have ever been in before, both as to money and as to depth and width."

The modification made last winter gave Captain Eads an advance of $1,000,000 more than he was entitled to under the contract; $500,000 of that sum was to be paid in cash, and $500,000 was to be expended on the work. I understand the cash has been paid, and that $250,000 are now being expended upon the work, and there are $250,000 yet to be expended upon the work.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am very sorry for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will be allowed to proceed. This is a matter of very great importance.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It would take me only about ten minutes to submit the remarks I wish to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I shall be very brief. I make no factious fight against this amendment, but I wish to state the facts to the Senate as I understand them to be and what I believe to be in the interest of the country, and then I shall of course leave the matter to the Senate for its action. I had prepared numerous facts connected with the jetty system from its beginning, which I had intended to go over and give to the Senate; but I think it best not to go into that at this time because I am now speaking by the courtesy of the Senate. As I said, $250,000 stands ready for Captain Eads's use in going on with the work. That is to be expended as the work progresses, and the money will be drawn from the Treasury as the work progresses.

I shall simply submit to the Senate the state of the case, as I understand it. It was in evidence before the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard that about $1,600,000 in all has been expended upon this work. This sum was arrived at through the resident engineer in charge, whom all agree to be a very competent man, and who has kept a strict account with a view, as was stated by General Wright in evidence, to find out what the condition of things is and what the work would cost for any future improvement of the kind that the Government might want. There have been about $1,600,000 expended on the work. About $2,000,000 has been paid or is at the control of the contractor. Now what is the condition of the work? The report of the engineer is that the original estimate, made before the work was commenced on a very solid basis, was $5,255,000. That was the contract price, upon the principle "no cure no pay." The Senate and Congress were urged to make the arrangements and make the contract. It was urged upon Congress not by one man, not by two men, but by dozens of people, and this was the assurance of the contractor himself.

Last year there was a modification, as I have said. The engineers in their report for 1877 estimate that the work as done is probably 50 per cent. less in cost than it was intended by the Government it should cost.

Now, what has been the result? The law was to be, so far as the contract went, that when twenty-four feet of water was obtained then there would be $2,000,000 due. Consequently, reaching about twenty-two feet of water or a little rising, according to the latest report, there would be $1,000,000 due, but $2,000,000 of it has been paid or is at the disposal of Captain Eads. Therefore, the contractor has had in his control $1,000,000 more than the Government agreed to pay at any time, except upon the modification of the contract last year. For the past two years probably there has been no progress in the depth of the channel. Two years ago the channel was about the same as it is to-day in depth, and it is not as deep now as it was two months ago. I understand the fact to be that on the 13th of the month just passed, February, the depth was about twenty-two feet, and that in January last it was nearly twenty-four feet. Consequently there has been, instead of an increase in depth, just the reverse, and there is not as much water now as there was formerly.

I wish to speak one moment in regard to the measure we are called to act upon, and I am going to be as brief as possible, and I shall close within ten minutes if I can. The present measure asks us to do what? To pay $750,000 at once. Although $1,000,000 have now been paid more than was originally intended to be paid, $750,000 more must be paid as soon as this measure passes, without any more work being done whatever. What else? When twenty-five feet of water is obtained, $500,000 more must be paid. All this is in advance of what the contract or agreement makes, even with the modification made a year ago. Then when twenty-six feet of water are obtained, $500,000 more are to be paid; and when a depth of thirty feet is obtained, $500,000 more; these sums making the entire payment that the Government agrees to make when a depth of thirty feet shall be obtained, with a breadth of three hundred and fifty feet, I think. By this modification in the contract, beyond question the Government is merely to say: "We must pay over all this money and take what work you have done up to this time."

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask a question in that connection?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator if it did not appear in the evidence before the committee that the modification of the contract proposed by this measure was sanctioned by General Wright and the Engineer Corps of the Army?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, Mr. President: I should like to say that recently there was a board sent down to examine, and what do they say? They came back and made a report to Congress and to the Department to this effect: "We recommend that no further modification shall take place." Three times in their report do they repeat the recommendation that no further modification shall take place; but taking everything into consideration they do recommend that $250,000 more shall be placed at the disposal of Captain Eads to pay for the work as it progresses.

I beg pardon of the Senate, I did not intend to speak so long.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am ready for any question that may be put to me.

Mr. FERRY. How much water was there in the South Pass before Captain Eads commenced the improvement?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Has the Senator read the report?

Mr. FERRY. That is not an answer to the question I put.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is the way I answer it.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator said that he was advised in the matter, and being a member of the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, I am asking him for information. If the Senator from West Virginia is not advised I will inform him.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, the Senator from West Virginia is advised about the whole of this matter.

Mr. FERRY. Then I should like to have the question answered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. What is the Senator's question?

Mr. FERRY. How much water was there in the South Pass before Captain Eads commenced his improvement?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator knows that as well as I do; but I will answer him. It is well known that the South Pass was not used before Captain Eads commenced the work.

Mr. FERRY. Then how much water was there in the Southwest Pass? That was used.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think from sixteen to eighteen feet.

Mr. FERRY. How much water is there in the South Pass now?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. About twenty-two feet or a little upward.

Mr. FERRY. Then the best water, that in the Southwest Pass, was sixteen feet?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not the best at sixteen feet, but from sixteen to eighteen feet.

Mr. FERRY. From sixteen to eighteen feet. By the improvement made by Captain Eads the water has been increased from sixteen feet to twenty-two feet?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It has increased from seventeen or eighteen feet up to twenty-two feet and a few inches, I believe, now.

Mr. FERRY. I understand that a steamer drawing 23 feet 6 inches passed through the South Pass yesterday.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President—

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to say one word, if my friend will permit me. I will not take five minutes.

Mr. WINDOM. I only want to make a brief statement myself, but I will yield.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to say merely one word. I think my friend from West Virginia has omitted in his consideration of the question the great fact that from its very nature a work of this kind was necessarily tentative. Nothing could be guaranteed in such an undertaking. It was impossible to do more than protect the Government in such an undertaking against undue expense in making what was and what must be an experiment. But nevertheless enough has been done to change a pass of the Mississippi River where formerly but seven to nine feet of water was found into a safe, expeditious channel of more than twenty-two and one-half feet where vessels pass in and out to the port of New Orleans. If to-day it were submitted to the people of the United States to decide whether they would pay twice as much as they contracted for or have the work abandoned and left as it now is, I think they would gladly double the amount as a measure of economy.

That is the judgment to which I have arrived from some consideration of this subject and from a personal inspection which I made during a recent visit when I was sent to Texas by order of the Senate on the occasion of the funeral of the late Mr. Schleicher.

I merely say this because I think my friend from West Virginia omits in his consideration the fact that we cannot deal with a subject of this kind by mere weight and measure. It is a great experiment in a great cause, and the Government necessarily must be the chief guarantor of success. The only question is whether skill has been applied, whether the money has been honestly spent, whether this engineering skill is equal to that which is demanded. I do not think that even under what I may call the adverse construction of the War Department any one can question that there has been ability displayed and wonderful success in this undertaking thus far.

Mr. WINDOM. What surprises me more than anything else in the remarks of my friend the Senator from West Virginia is that he can make such statements as he has made with reference to this great work, in view of the fact that he has been well acquainted with it from the beginning.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will my friend permit me to ask him if I made a misstatement of any fact? If I did, I should be obliged to him to correct me.

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator understood me to say any such thing he most thoroughly misunderstood me; for I know he does not mean to misstate the facts. I am only astonished that he does not better appreciate the conditions with which we have to deal.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator if I did make a misstatement?

Mr. WINDOM. I will say that the Senator did not intentionally make a misstatement; but if I understand the facts in this case he did not correctly represent them to the Senate. It was unintentional, I know.

I will attempt to state what I understand the facts to be. To repeat again, I will say that the Senator from West Virginia knew of this enterprise from the beginning. I had the honor to serve with him on the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard when the great work of opening the mouth of the Mississippi River was originated. I know it from the beginning. I know every step of its progress from that day to this. If there is any one subject in connection with the internal improvements of this country that I thoroughly understand it is this great enterprise. Thus stating my belief as to the thoroughness of my knowledge upon the subject, I say that the last century has not witnessed on this continent an enterprise of so great value to the commercial interests of the nation as that which was inaugurated and has thus far been wrought out through the genius and the courage of Captain Eads. Therefore, I stand here to-night to defend him and his great work against all enemies, from whatever quarter they may come, and to contribute what I may to secure justice to a man who, through the sacrifice of his own fortune, has wrought out the grandest and most beneficial results for his country.

Let me state very briefly what he has accomplished. The Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard were instructed in 1873 to investigate the question as to the best way of opening the Mississippi River to the commerce of the world. After much labor and a long and patient investigation that committee was about to recommend the construction of a ship-canal which was estimated to cost some $12,000,000. The sentiment of the country demanded an open channel to the sea from the Mississippi River, and the House of Representatives had passed a bill appropriating $8,000,000 toward the construction of said canal. That bill was pending in the Senate, when Captain Eads appeared and presented his plan of improvement by means of the jetty system.

I say to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate, that but for one man, and that man the one whom the honorable Senator from West Virginia now represents as a sharp contractor trying to impose upon a cheated nation, there is not a particle of doubt that we would have entered upon the work of constructing a canal at that point, to be twenty-six feet deep and two hundred feet wide, upon an estimated cost of $12,000,000, or about that sum. And there is very little doubt that the actual cost would have reached from fifteen to twenty millions before the work would have been completed.

Mr. GORDON. And then filled up, I suggest.

Mr. WINDOM. I fear such would have been the result. At least it would have been a doubtful experiment, and if successful would not have furnished a channel at all comparable with that which is to be created by Captain Eads before he receives the money proposed by the pending amendment.

I remember distinctly the day when in the Senate the then Senator from Missouri, now Secretary of the Interior, asked me to walk up into the committee-room to meet a gentleman who had some valuable suggestions to make on the subject of improving the Mississippi River. I said, "We have heard so many suggestions and examined so many plans on that subject that I am tired of them." But I went at his instance, and I had not talked with Captain Eads an hour until I became convinced that he thoroughly understood the matter, and that the plan he proposed would be successful. As I have already said, the House of Representatives had sent us a bill appropriating $8,000,000 for a scheme that would have eventually cost twelve, fifteen, or twenty million dollars. The Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard recommended that the canal bill be laid on the table, and provided for the appointment of a commission of seven engineers, who were directed to investigate the question as to the best mode of improving the mouths of great rivers, and $50,000 were appropriated to pay their expenses. They traveled through Europe and in various parts of the world investigating this question. I think I am not mistaken in saying that when they started a majority of that commission were opposed to the scheme of improving the Mississippi River by means of jetties, but when they came back, after having thoroughly investigated the question, nearly all of them were in favor of it. That commission was organized and the entire scheme was inaugurated in the Senate of the United States through the influence of the one man whom the Senator from West Virginia has seen fit to represent as being a sort of leech upon the public Treasury.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's time has expired. Is there objection to the Senator continuing?

Mr. FERRY. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will be allowed to proceed. ["No objection,"]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. WINDOM. I thank the Senate for this courtesy, and will not abuse the privilege thus kindly granted.

Upon the recommendation of that commission the jetty system was adopted and a contract was entered into with Captain Eads. I admit that it was made, as stated by the Senator from West Virginia, at his own solicitation. He was an enthusiast upon that subject; he believed that great results would be accomplished, and I think he looked more to the fame that it would give him as an engineer than to the money to be made by it; but I let that pass. The contract was made, and I know—for I was one of the three members of the committee which framed the law in regard to it—that we made the contract as strong on the part of the United States as we could find words to express it. He was proposing to do a great work at great cost, and to guarantee its success. We said, "If he has so much confidence in it, we will accept his proposition upon the strongest and best terms that we can make." My own idea being that when he had accomplished such results as would meet the present and prospective requirements we could do equity in the matter; but we meant to have the contract as strong as possible, and so it was made. Captain Eads entered upon the great enterprise of giving an open channel to the sea thirty feet deep by three hundred feet wide at the bottom—a magnificent pathway for the commerce of the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico.

For it we were to pay him what, Mr. President? Twelve million dollars, as estimated for the canal? No, only five millions and a quarter.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend will allow me to say that $12,000,000 was the capitalized amount. Twelve million dollars was not the estimate; $8,000,000 was the estimate.

Mr. WINDOM. I think my friend is mistaken in the amount which the canal was to cost. For the sum of five and a quarter million we contracted with this gentleman to give an open and free channel to the Gulf three hundred feet wide at the bottom, probably one thousand feet wide at the surface, and thirty feet deep, being about half the money proposed to be expended in digging a canal only twenty-six feet deep and two hundred feet wide. Captain Eads prevented the country from embarking in the canal scheme, and thereby saved the Treasury the expenditure of from twelve to fifteen millions of dollars to secure results far less valuable than those we shall have secured for $3,750,000, if this amendment shall pass.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from Minnesota will have all the time required, I hope, to explain this matter.

Mr. WINDOM. I will trespass upon the patience of the Senate but a short time.

Mr. HOWE. We had better take a little time than to fling away the money that is asked for this appropriation. So I ask him if this amendment does not propose to abandon this idea of a channel thirty feet deep and three hundred and fifty feet broad at the bottom?

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator had been a little more patient I would have reached that point.

Mr. HOWE. I am only calling the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. WINDOM. I am obliged for the suggestion; I will come to that in a few moments.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to ask him a question if it does not interrupt his argument?

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I quite concur with him in what he has said, but the only point which I want information on is as to the necessity and propriety of modifying the contract and changing the payments. If I am satisfied of that, it is all I want.

Mr. WINDOM. I will address myself to that in a moment. I will not dwell on this general proposition, for I know the time of the Senate is short, and that Senators will be impatient at any lengthy discussion of the subject.

I have shown you, Mr. President, what this gentleman has saved the Government. Now, what has he already accomplished? He has given us a channel through which a vessel has recently passed drawing 23 feet 6 inches of water. Before he can receive the money proposed to be appropriated by this amendment he will be compelled to give us a channel twenty-six feet deep and two hundred feet wide at the bottom.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The amendment proposes $750,000 in cash without any other condition.

Mr. HOWE. And that $750,000 is in addition to the $2,000,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I am obliged for that suggestion also. I say that when Captain Eads receives the $1,750,000 proposed by this measure we shall have a channel two hundred feet wide at the bottom and twenty-six feet deep. A channel twenty-six feet deep and two hundred feet wide at the bottom would probably be four or five hundred feet wide at a depth of twenty-two feet.

My friend from West Virginia says that he will receive $750,000 now. True, and I meet the Senator upon that point. Suppose he should, what will he have given the nation? A channel through which a vessel drawing 23 feet 6 inches has recently passed to the ocean; a substantial channel, as shown by the report of the engineers, of 23 feet 7 inches in depth by two hundred feet in width; a channel eight or ten feet deeper than that by which vessels reach the great city of Philadelphia; a channel almost as good as any in the United States, and the Government will have paid only $2,750,000 for it. Suppose he never does anything more, will not the Government have saved many millions by its contract with him and at the same time have secured an improvement of immeasurable value to its commerce? I do not ask that the Government shall deal generously with this gentleman, for we have no right to talk of generosity in appropriations of public funds, but I do insist that we deal justly with one who has risked and lost so much in securing such grand results to our commerce.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask a question of the Senator. He says there are twenty-three feet, but the latest report is twenty-two feet, showing a change in the state of things. It is not now as it was.

Mr. WINDOM. Right on that point let me read what the board of engineers, that we recently sent down there, say:

It is impossible to state definitely the cost of completing a work that by its nature is indefinite. Mr. Eads, in his estimate, proposes to make certain repairs and additions for the sum of about $350,000.

I think the committee will bear me out in saying that the estimate of the engineers is that it can be completed so as to secure the depth of twenty-five or twenty-six feet over the bar for an additional expenditure of $350,000. I read from the report of the board:

The board is of the opinion that if the jetties are raised and consolidated so as to confine to the channel-way the greater part of the water now escaping by lateral waste, it may be possible to procure a depth of twenty-five or twenty-six feet over the bar, without regard to width, which corresponds to occasional depths of twenty-seven or twenty-eight feet.

The testimony of General Wright, which I cannot readily put my hand on at this moment, (the Senator from Wisconsin will remember it,) is clear on that point that it will give us about that depth. Let me stop for a moment again and show you what is accomplished by this.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator answer me this question before he comes to that: Is this $750,000 which this amendment proposes to pay presently to Captain Eads a part of the compensation provided for in the contract, or is this an extra compensation?

Mr. WINDOM. It is part of the compensation for doing the work. This modifies the contract to some extent; no doubt about that.

Mr. THURMAN. Does it modify by increasing the compensation or anticipating the payments?

Mr. WINDOM. It modifies it by changing the requirement as to the width and depth of the channel. It does not add anything to the compensation to be received. The entire amount, after we shall have passed this, will be $3,750,000, leaving $1,500,000 on the original contract. Captain Eads will be entitled to five and a quarter millions if he accomplishes the work according to the contract.

Mr. THURMAN. It does not increase the amount of the original contract, then?

Mr. WINDOM. Not at all. It is far within the amount. It simply modifies some of the conditions of the contract and enables him to receive money a little earlier for work actually accomplished.

I was about to show you, Mr. President, a comparison between the river as it existed before Captain Eads undertook this work and now. Then we were paying about $250,000 a year for what? For dredge-boats and other means and appliances used in the Southwest Pass to give about sixteen to seventeen feet of water, and a very uncertain channel at that.

Now, suppose Captain Eads shall stop with the additional $750,000, what will be the result? We shall have a permanent channel of twenty-three feet, at least six feet more than we had then, at a cost of $110,000 a year, calculating money at 4 per cent. interest. If you sell bonds to pay for this work, $2,750,000, it will amount to $110,000 a year.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask my friend about how much Captain Eads has paid out?

Mr. WINDOM. I will state that before I get through. If you pay him the whole $3,750,000, as proposed by this amendment, that is, $1,750,000 in addition to the $2,000,000 already received, how will the account stand? Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year for an uncertain channel of sixteen feet in the Southwest Pass against $140,000 a year for a reliable channel of twenty-three feet. Now, Mr. President, is that a bad speculation for the Government or not?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I know my friend does not mean to misrepresent the figures.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to ask one question. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota (and I ask for information all these questions) whether it is understood or believed by Captain Eads, the engineers, or the committee, that when this channel is once sunk to twenty-three feet, and the work is dropped there, the water is going to continue at that depth without any annual expenditure of money?

Mr. WINDOM. One hundred thousand dollars a year, which he is compelled to apply under the bill in maintaining the channel, as I understand.

Mr. HOWE. But he is to be paid that $100,000, is he not?

Mr. WINDOM. One hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. HOWE. Then that must be added to the interest.

Mr. WINDOM. If the work is finished as per contract.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This amendment does not propose to modify the contract, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think my friend is mistaken about that.

Mr. WINDOM. Not at all. But I am taking too much time. I will mention one other point.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to correct my friend's figures. I have in my hand a statement made by the board. My friend stated that $250,000 was the annual amount expended at the mouth of the river.

Mr. WINDOM. I stated that was the amount last year. I do not know what it had been in previous years before the last year when we were trying to deepen the channel. That is what I stated.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The average was about $100,000.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. For what length of time was that average of $100,000?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Commencing with 1866, the average was $98,000, leaving out the expenses of boats. If you add them, it was $142,000.

Mr. WINDOM. Taking the Senator's own figures, we have, through Captain Eads's efforts, a safe, reliable, and permanent channel of twenty-three feet for a less cost than we formerly obtained an unreliable, uncertain, unsafe, and fluctuating channel of sixteen feet by former processes. And the Senate will bear in mind that this sixteen-foot channel was the result of the efforts of nearly a century. The channel that we then had was utterly inadequate to the wants of commerce, while the one which Captain Eads has given the nation is as good as is possessed in almost any part of the country, and the one we will have before this money can be paid will be the equal of any other.

The Senator from West Virginia has said that the contractor in this case has paid out only $1,600,000, and wants to get $3,750,000, which is a very unfair thing. I do not know how he obtains his figures, unless it be from somebody's estimate who did not know anything about it. Captain Eads gives us a statement of his account. I will not take time to read it; I hold it in my hand, and any Senator can examine it.

The aggregate of expenditures, without taking into account any excessive amounts paid for interest, is $2,304,635.22; and he is debtor for money borrowed from banks and individuals $154,000, and to James Andrews & Co. $1,560,622.21; making an actual balance over and above the amounts received from the Government of $1,715,566.23.

Now, the question is, whether the Government will accept these inestimable benefits which have been secured through the expenditure of private capital and leave the parties who have had the faith and courage to do the work to suffer the loss of a million and a half of money. Will you, Senators, consent to bankrupt the man who has done more for the commerce of the country than any other man since De Witt Clinton?

I think, Mr. President, that I have taken enough time.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to ask a question of the Senator before he resumes his seat. He speaks of a channel of twenty-three feet as a permanent channel; he speaks of what a canal might have been, and what would be a channel of sixteen or seventeen feet; and he says with great force, is there any doubt that this expenditure has been a very good one for a permanent channel through which a vessel drawing twenty-three and a half feet of water can pass? There the Senator assumes the one thing which with me is a stumbling-block more than anything else in this whole business. He assumes that this channel is to be permanent, is to be and remain a fixed fact. Now if the Senator from Minnesota can give me any light on the question whether it will remain permanently as it is, or whether by the deposits of that which is carried out by the current and accretions which come in running water and in such water, it is likely to fill up and diminish year by year, I wish he would relieve me on that point.

Mr. WINDOM. I can only give the Senator from New York the opinion of the engineers who have been sent there to examine it, and their opinion is that it is a permanent channel. It is now a good channel, and they believe, and General Wright, I think, so stated to the Committee on Transportation, that it will continue to be a good channel. He regards it as a permanent work, of permanent value, and he regards it as equal to all the present and future demands of commerce, or will be when the $350,000 are expended.

Mr. CONKLING. At that point will the Senator let me inquire does he understand as a matter of fact that the channel is as deep now as it has ever been at any time, or does he understand that the depth has diminished in fact?

Mr. WINDOM. It is better now than it was a year ago. It may have been deeper for a little while at some points, but it is broader and on the whole deeper. It is about the same depth now that it was a year ago. The reason it is not increased is that owing to the presence of yellow fever and the lack of means at one time to continue it, the contractors were unable to build up to the lower end of the jetties.

These jetties are located about a thousand feet apart, and extend into deep water, and there was a subsidence at the sea end on account of the inability to continue the work from the prevalence of yellow fever and from a lack of means at command of the contractor. This subsidence has increased to a certain extent. The water flows away, and consequently does not continue to deepen as it will when the $350,000 is applied.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not feel at liberty to occupy the floor any longer.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, it is my good or bad fortune to be a member of the Committee on Transportation, and I have therefore been obliged to look into all the facts connected with this matter. I wish I had not been, and wish I was not obliged to state now what the facts are, because the facts do not sustain the committee in the amendment they have presented to this bill. Sympathy and a desire to aid an extremely clever man are generous impulses in which I share. The great benefits resulting to commerce from what Captain Eads has already done may induce Senators to give him whatever they are asked to give, but I, being one of a minority who could not support the bill reported, desire to state the facts as I understand them, and my reasons for dissenting from the majority of the committee.

We made a contract with Captain Eads in 1875, whereby he undertook to furnish a channel at the mouth of the South Pass of the Mississippi, thirty feet in depth by three hundred feet in width, for which we were to pay him as follows: when he obtained a channel of twenty feet in depth by two hundred feet in width, $500,000; when he obtained a channel of twenty-two feet in depth by two hundred feet in width, $500,000; when he obtained a channel twenty-four feet in depth and two hundred and fifty feet wide, $500,000; and when he maintained that for a year, $250,000 more; when he obtained a channel of twenty-six feet in depth and three hundred feet wide, $500,000; when he maintained that for a year, $250,000 with 5 per cent.; when he obtained a channel twenty-eight feet deep by three hundred and fifty feet wide, $500,000; when he maintained that for a year, $250,000; when he obtained a channel thirty feet deep and three hundred and fifty feet wide, $500,000; and when that was maintained for a year, $500,000 more; making a total of $4,250,000. We were to retain 5 per cent. of the amount, and pay in ten and twenty years for maintaining the channel during that period a million more, making $5,250,000 in all. That contract is still in force and the work necessary to comply with it is very far from being complete, if, indeed, it is possible to comply with it at all, which I consider very doubtful.

At the last session of this Congress Captain Eads came before the Committee on Transportation and said that while he had not obtained twenty-four feet and had been paid all that he was entitled to after he obtained twenty feet and twenty-two feet, being $1,000,000, he had expended more in proportion to what he was ultimately to receive than he could well afford to do, and being comparatively poor he said he had to pay very heavily for the advances made to him by capitalists. We gave him last June $500,000 in money and placed to his credit in the Treasury $500,000 more to enable him to continue the work, which was all that he was entitled to receive under his contract when he obtained twenty-six feet. We then told him to go on and complete the work and when that was done doubtless any reasonable amount of money would be allowed to him by Congress even if thirty feet was found to be impracticable, as I felt very sure it would be. He has gone on and expended a part of that $500,000, and only a part of it, perhaps half, and has not completed the work, has not obtained a channel of even twenty-four feet yet, and the last report of the engineer dated on the 19th February, 1879, from Port Eads, signed by M. R. Brown, captain of engineers, says:

Over the bar at the mouth of South Pass, on the 13th of February, 1879, there was a channel at average flood-tide and at high-water of the day having a least depth of 22.2 feet with a width of two hundred feet at low-water of the day the least depth was 21.2 feet.

I certify that the above is a correct statement.

M. R. BROWN,
Captain of Engineers.

The majority of the committee, in the face of these facts, after admitting that we have already paid a million more than the contract we made at his earnest solicitation by its terms required, come and say to us: pay Mr. Eads $750,000 more now, pay him $500,000 more when he gets twenty-five feet, and $500,000 more when he gets twenty-six feet; give him $3,750,000 in all when he gets twenty-six feet of water instead of two million, as the contract required, and that too without any regard to the completion or maintenance of the works. In other words, we are asked to retain no money and no security that he is ever going beyond twenty-six feet, and pay all the money now, or nearly all, that we agreed to pay for finished work and a permanent channel of thirty feet. The engineers say, as Senators will observe, by their last report, that the first idea was that he would have to throw his jetties much further out into the Gulf in order to obtain thirty feet of water than he now intends to do. They report to us in the last few days that—

The outer three hundred and thirty feet of the east jetty, as originally built, and the outer two hundred and eighty feet of the west jetty, have altogether disappeared, and the contractor has decided not to attempt to rebuild the length thus lost.

That reduction of length of the jetties diminishes largely the expense and at the same time diminishes the capacity of Captain Eads to increase the depth; so that now nobody, I believe, pretends that there can be more than twenty-six feet obtained, unless exceptional circumstances may bring it to twenty-eight feet.

I will read an extract or two from the report of the engineers on that subject, but before doing so I desire to say that, so far from doing Captain Eads any injustice, I am willing and proposed in the committee if the Senate should think that we have not already paid him enough to give him $250,000 more, being $1,250,000 more than he is entitled to by his contract, and place to his credit still $500,000 additional, if necessary, in the Treasury of the United States for future expenditures, so that he can surely complete the work; all I desire is to retain money enough that the people of the United States shall be certainly assured that the work is done. Do not put it out of our power to render it certain that it shall be done.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. BECK. Any question.

Mr. BUTLER. Does he not think on his responsibility as a Senator that it would be wise to modify this contract so as to require Captain Eads to maintain but twenty-six feet of depth and two hundred feet width? Would it not be wise for the Government to do that?

Mr. BECK. I say to the Senator that in my opinion it would be wise for the Senate to put under Captain Eads's control, for the purpose of finishing his present works, any amount that may be necessary to enable him to complete them, but not to allow it to be used for any other purpose except for the completion of the work.

Mr. BUTLER. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. BECK. I will answer it directly; but I desire to say first that it would not be wise for the Senate to make any further absolute payments to Mr. Eads, who owes certain contractors over a million and a half of dollars, and whose creditors, unfortunately for him, are clamorous for this bill to pass so as to enable them to get this money, and thus enable them to take it from him and deprive him of the power of completing the work. I would not modify the contract to anything like the extent proposed by this bill. He has had to borrow money at most exorbitant rates. Some of his so-called friends advanced him $450,000, and required him to pay them $450,000 of profit and 10 per cent. upon the $900,000 thus coerced from him.

That he is an honest man, that he is an earnest man, that he is a good engineer, I know; and the subcontractors who have furnished the materials to carry on the work as far as it has gone, as Captain Eads has stated to the committee himself, have over a million dollars of profit in it. They of course want all this money that he asks us to give him; they will take it from him and from us, and thus make it impossible for him to complete the work and impossible for us to obtain what we will I hope obtain if we hold on to the money, contenting ourselves—and that is more than anybody can ask—with furnishing ample means to pay for all future work on certificates of the engineer in charge, as we did in the bill of last session.

I desire to preserve the lien and security of the United States, and I am willing to give Captain Eads any amount of money to go on with the work, even far beyond his contract. When that work is completed then I am willing to say that a permanent, well-secured channel of twenty-six feet will answer all the purposes of commerce; and I am willing to take the responsibility of going before the country and saying, as the Senator from Minnesota has done, that he has done us a great work; and while we contracted that we would not give him any very large proportion of the money until he got thirty feet, I will vote to give him a very large portion of it when he obtains and maintains a depth sufficient to secure a channel of twenty-six feet. That will meet the reasonable requirements of commerce. But I want the work done.

Mr. BUTLER. That is all this measure requires.

Mr. BECK. No, sir; it pays $750,000 now and $500,000 more at twenty-five feet, and $500,000 at twenty-six feet, without any requirement of maintenance, even for a day; and if by the aid of dredge-boats or anything else he can temporarily obtain this for a day, so as to get a certificate of that fact, the money is to be paid, and the maintenance of the work after that is not to be cared for. The Government under this bill reserves nothing. He was to be paid five million and a half when he obtained and maintained a channel of thirty feet. He was to have $2,000,000 when he obtained twenty-six feet. Now you propose to give him $3,750,000 when he obtains twenty-six feet and obtains it only for a day, and you leave the Government no security and leave Captain Eads nothing whereby he can maintain it, as his creditors are waiting now to seize every dollar Congress votes. As soon as the law is passed they are the real beneficiaries of the bill, and Captain Eads is used as their cat's-paw.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. Everybody else has had an extension; let him have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Kentucky proceeding?

Mr. BECK. Only two minutes, and I will endeavor to state the case. If Captain Eads has a well-wisher in this Senate, and one who desires him to succeed, it is I.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has leave to proceed.

Mr. BECK. I thank the Senate. I desire this great work to go on and Captain Eads's reputation as a great engineer to be maintained, but I think he needs protection against the greedy creditors who are harassing him. When his honor is involved he will make any sacrifice.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator from Kentucky think he had better have a guardian appointed for him?

Mr. BECK. No, but the Government of the United States ought to be its own guardian and protect its own contracts and hold its own money till this work it agreed to pay for is done.

Mr. BUTLER. I referred to Captain Eads.

Mr. BECK. Then I ask the Senator from South Carolina now if a man who would agree to pay $900,000 for the use of $450,000 ought not to have a guardian?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I think not.

Mr. BECK. You think not; I do. Does a man who, out of an expenditure of $1,000,000, as stated by the estimate of the United States engineers that that sum is all that has been actually expended at fair prices, pays a profit of almost a million dollars to contractors on that work not require to be protected, so as to enable him to finish the great work he has undertaken? Ought we to be advancing public money that nobody has any claim on to secure great profits to these men? That is the question, and, I ask, is the Senate of the United States prepared to do that, in the unfinished condition of the work? This is what our own engineers tell us in their last report of a month ago, speaking of the progress of the work:

The east jetty has been built to a distance from East Point of about two and one-fourth miles. The west jetty terminates opposite the east jetty, but its total length is only about one and one-half miles, the difference being due to the greater extension of the natural banks on the west side of the pass. The distance in the clear between the jetties is about nine hundred and fifty feet. Both jetties, to within fifteen hundred feet from their sea-ends, are well advanced toward completion, but it is desirable that they should be in some portions raised and compacted to prevent the current passing so freely through them. The outer fifteen hundred feet of each jetty is quite deficient in height and compactness, allowing the escape of a large percentage of the water of the pass, and require, therefore, to be raised and consolidated quite materially, and especially so at the sea-ends. Much material has been expended on these ends, but they continue to settle. The outer three hundred and thirty feet of the east jetty as originally built and the outer two hundred and eighty feet of the west jetty have altogether disappeared, and the contractor has decided not to attempt to rebuild the lengths thus lost.

They tell us that about three hundred feet at each end is washed away, and much of what remains is in an unfinished condition. Is it not important both for the Government and for Captain Eads that the original contract should not be so changed as to place this large amount of public money in his hands so that his creditors can attach it the day we pass this law, take it out of his hands, prevent him from completing the work; prevent him from making these sea-ends good, prevent him from making stable and permanent what I think he can make stable and good; or shall we not retain the money for our own security and for his security at least until next December, when he can come with finished work and say to us, "I have used the money you have given me and this is the result?"

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask my friend how much the report of the engineers estimates the cost to be for the completion of the work?

Mr. BECK. The engineers say that they believe $335,000 or $350,000 will enable him to finish, consolidate, and make secure the work that he has begun at the mouth of the jetties, and thus secure, they think, a good channel for commercial purposes; but that is only an opinion; the work is not done.

Mr. BUTLER. Then allow me to ask how much money is to Captain Eads's credit now of the $500,000 appropriated at the last session?

Mr. BECK. I do not know how much remains now out of what we allowed him, but at the time the committee's report was made he had not expended much more than half of it. Therefore as he had been provided with money enough to go on with the work this far, and as we are willing to give him still more to continue it, I do not see how he can be embarrassed if we fail to make these large advances now. It must not be forgotten that the works at the upper end of the South Pass need a good deal of attention and care, and yet involve large expenditures in order to remove the obstacle in the way of obtaining deep water at that point. The wing-dams at the Southwest Pass and Pass à l'Ouvre also need attention. The money ought to be given to him in such a way that his creditors cannot take it from him, because no member of the committee can fail to know that Captain Eads is actually helpless pecuniarily by reason of the immense obligations he has undertaken and the debts he owes these people.

The Senator from Minnesota has not said a word about the importance of the work that I do not agree to. It is a fact that we had but seven or eight feet at the mouth of the South Pass before he began. We used the Southwest Pass, with sixteen or eighteen feet, but it was an uncertain channel, and large amounts were expended to dredge it and but little good was done. This is a great improvement. The United States engineers, especially General Wright, reported upon all these propositions for improvement time and again. He had gone to the mouth of the Danube and had seen from the shore-current there how the Salinas Pass was maintained, from facts carefully collected here and abroad. Captain Eads's prediction was, I think, that the silt or débrie would not fill the South Pass as rapidly as elsewhere, and that the wave action of the Gulf would wash it away; and the fact is, at the mouth of the pass the water is deepening in the Gulf and not filling up. Everything is doing well now. All I desire is to save this great work, and I hope the measure will be so modified as to give him such relief as will place to his credit any reasonable amount of money so that he can finish his work and not have his creditors come in and take it away from him. I would not modify or change the contract now in the incomplete condition of the work, but have the work done under it, and take care that Captain Eads is protected from those who would take it away from him, because, as I said, I know that he is a sensitively honest and honorable man, and would pay out the last dollar to his grasping creditors whenever it is paid to him. He has a contract with the United States; whether he can afford to complete it or not I do not know. When he comes to us and says, "Thirty feet is too much, it is beyond the capacity of the pass; I thought I could get it, but I find I cannot; twenty-eight feet cannot be maintained without turning more water into the pass and thus endanger it, perhaps; twenty-six feet can be, and is enough for the wants of commerce; that I have obtained and secured," there will not be a man in the Senate who will take the responsibility of voting him a larger sum of money than I will, but I desire these jetties to be completed before I do it and before I put it out of his power to obtain money to do it after this is taken away from him, as I fear it will be.

I repeat that I desire the means placed in his hand, or subject to his order, to enable him to complete the work, but I do not desire outside creditors or meddlers to come and take away the moneys we are now giving, and thus prevent him from doing the work we need to have done, which must be continued or it will be destroyed if it is left in its present incomplete condition.

These were the reasons in part why I could not vote for the bill presented by the committee. I did not believe it was safe for the United States or good for Captain Eads that this bill should pass in this form. It is simply intended or its effect is to pay a class of quite clamorous creditors, and I am not willing now to provide for them with public money before the work is done.

Having said that much, and regretting that I was even on the committee, or had to say a word that looks like speaking against Captain Eads, or against the work, great as I know it to be, performed by a man of so much genius as I think Captain Eads is, and of the high integrity that I believe him to possess, I regret that I have been obliged to say a word that looks as if I were seeking to prevent him getting the money which his creditors seem so anxious to get; but I honestly believe that the best way to secure both Captain Eads and the United States is to place the money to his credit in the Treasury and thus enable him to finish the work, and then let him come to us and he shall have all the money any Senator would reasonably say he ought to have. I think I would vote to him a good deal more than his contract calls for, because he has undertaken a work that but few men would have undertaken and has demonstrated that the system he has advocated is one that will prove highly advantageous to the great commercial interests of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (when his name was called.) On all questions of importance on this bill I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN,] who is absent on account of illness. If he were here he would vote in favor of this amendment, and I should vote against it.

Mr. HARRIS, (when Mr. GORDON's name was called.) The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] are paired on all political questions and on all questions relating to this bill. I do not know how either would vote on this particular question.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HOWE, (after having voted in the negative.) I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HILL] on this question. I voted inadvertently. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—37.
Allison,	Conover,	Kernan,	Ransom,
Barnum,	Davis of Illinois,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Bayard,	Dennis,	McCreery,	Shields,
Bruce,	Dorsey,	Matthews,	Spencer,
Butler,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Teller,
Cameron of Pa.,	Ferry,	Mitchell,	Wallace,
Cameron of Wis.,	Garland,	Morgan,	Windom,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Oglesby,
Coke,	Hereford,	Paddock,
Conkling,	Kellogg,	Patterson,
NAYS—10.
Bailey,	Chandler,	Morrill,	Wadleigh.
Beck,	Davis of W. Va.,	Plumb,
Booth,	Merrimon,	Saulsbury,
ABSENT—29.
Anthony,	Grover,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,
Blaine,	Hamlin,	Kirkwood,	Thurman,
Burnside,	Hill,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Chaffee,	Hoar,	McMillan,	Whyte,
Dawes,	Howe,	McPherson,	Withers,
Eaton,	Ingalls,	Randolph,
Edmunds,	Johnston,	Rollins,
Gordon,	Jones of Florida,	Sargent,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to move one slight verbal amendment. On page 10, line 225, right after the word "removing," I desire to insert the word "sand-bars;" so as to read:

Removing sand bars, snags, wrecks, and other obstructions, &c.

And then, in the same line, after the word "obstructions," I move to add the words "and correcting and deepening the channel."

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think there is any objection to that. I think the amendment sufficiently large enough to cover it as it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not sufficient.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to move a verbal amendment. On page 2, line 35, I move to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "thirty-seven." I think I have the assent of the chairman of the committee to that. It is to increase the appropriation "for improving the harbor at Stonington, Connecticut" to just one-half the amount that the engineers estimated.

Mr. SPENCER. That is hardly a verbal amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Just striking out "twenty-two" and putting in "thirty-seven." That is merely verbal. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. RANSOM. I have an amendment which has the approval of the committee. I offer it for the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] It is to insert on page 5, after line 26:

For improving the entrance to Duck Creek in the State of Delaware, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PADDOCK. With the unanimous assent of the Committee on Commerce, as I believe now, I renew the amendment which I offered in committee, to insert:

For improvement of the Missouri River near Brownville, Nebraska, $10,000.

For improvement of the Missouri River, near Platte's mouth, Nebraska, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I appeal to the Senator from Louisiana, if he has any regard for this bill, not to offer any more amendments. The bill is loaded down now, and these amendments will be stricken out in committee of conference. I give gentlemen notice to that effect.

Mr. KERNAN rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The Senator from Louisiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask a vote on the amendment that I reserved when the bill was in Committee of the Whole. All other amendments, I believe, have been adopted, and I think that is quite as meritorious; it certainly is as modest as any that has been offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana offered an amendment in Committee of the Whole, which was not agreed to. The amendment is therefore not now before the Senate. He can renew it in the Senate if he chooses.

Mr. KELLOGG. I gave notice in the Committee of the Whole that I would renew it in the Senate. I now renew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is in lines 574 and 575, to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving Bayou La Fourche, Louisiana, including the removal of obstructions and deepening the channel, $25,000.

Mr. KERNAN. Before we vote any more in, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill what amount the bill appropriates if we pass it now without further amendments?

Mr. SPENCER. That is pretty hard for me to answer, the bill has been so loaded down with amendments here lately. The bill as reported by the Committee on Commerce amounted to $6,955,000.

Mr. KERNAN. Seven millions in round numbers as reported by the committee. We have put on a great deal since.

Mr. SPENCER. I suppose we have put on about half a million.

Mr. KERNAN. I submit to the Senate that we should stop this course of putting on large and small sums for improvements all over the country. We are in no condition to do it, nor do the needs of the country require six million or seven million and a half, and I hope we shall vote understandingly, and not attempt to put anything more upon it.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask permission of the Senate to make a report from a committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to present at this time a report from a committee of conference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6449) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

S. W. DORSEY,
WM. A. WALLACE,
J. G. BLAINE,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
HIESTER CLYMER,
JOHN H. BAKER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DORSEY. I will state that the committee disagreed upon four or five important points, including the amendment in relation to railway transportation and also the amendments in relation to classification and some other minor amendments. The conferees on the part of the Senate could not see, after the instruction they received from the votes by which these amendments were put upon the bill in this body, how they could recede without submitting the question to the Senate. I therefore move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and ask for another committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas moves upon this report that the Senate now further insist upon its amendments and ask a further conference with the House of Representatives. Is the Senate ready for the question? The question is on this motion.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the Chair was authorized to appoint the committee, and Mr. DORSEY, Mr. FERRY, and Mr. WALLACE were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6463) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG,] in line 574, page 24, to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving Bayou la Fourche, Louisiana, including the removal of obstructions and deepening of channel, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 34, noes 6.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to state that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] was paired upon the question which was voted upon by yeas and nays. If he had been here he would have voted "yea." The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] was called to Richmond, Virginia, by the sudden illness of his daughter. He is also paired on political questions. He would not have left the Senate if it had not been that he received information that his daughter was at the point of death.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are further amendments to be proposed?

Mr. CONOVER. I offer the following amendment to come in in the appropriate place in the bill—

Mr. KERNAN. I submit that all the appropriate places are full. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That for the purpose of making a survey to ascertain the practicability and cost of the construction of a water route for transportation from the mouth of the Saint Mary's River, on the borders of the States of Georgia and Florida, by the way of Saint Marks and Pensacola, Florida, to the Mississippi River, the sum of $35,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SPENCER. I raise the point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will state the point of order.

Mr. SPENCER. That it has not been recommended by any standing committee or any Department.

Mr. CONOVER. I have occupied very little of the attention of the Senate, but I shall do so now. This amendment is precisely in the words of a bill which has been upon the Calendar since December 17, 1877, reported favorably from the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and I simply propose it as an amendment to this bill, and not to take up the time of the Senate to have the separate bill passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the amendment been referred to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. CONKLING. It need not to have been referred to the Committee on Commerce, if the Chair will allow me a moment.

In like manner, amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being offered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

This does not propose an appropriation; it is merely of those harmless things known as a survey.

Mr. COCKRELL. Thirty-five thousand dollars it appropriates.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I misheard the amendment. I thought it was simply that a survey should be made. I suggest to the Senator from Florida to strike out the appropriation and make it a survey simply.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposes a new item of appropriation.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg pardon; I did not hear that part of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the twenty-eighth rule the Chair is of opinion that it is not in order unless it has been referred—

Mr. CONOVER. I will make it conform to the suggestion of the Senator from New York, and strike out the $35,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will allow the Chair to state the decision. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment proposing a new item of appropriation is not in order under the twenty-eighth rule unless it has been referred to the committee having charge of the bill—the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONOVER. I will strike out the appropriation of money.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator proposes to modify his amendment. The Chair will send the amendment to the Senator to modify it according to his own views. The Chair is unable to do it.

Mr. CONOVER. While that amendment is being prepared and put in shape, I move, in section 3, page 34, after "examination and surveys," &c., to increase the item of appropriation from $50,000 to $80,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One amendment is now pending, that proposed by the Senator from Florida to be modified.

Mr. CONOVER. I withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CONOVER. I now move, on page 35, line 4, to strike out "fifty" and insert "eighty." After this is disposed of I will renew the other amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. I submit whether that is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that it is in order; it only increases a sum appropriated in the bill. It is not a new item.

Mr. SPENCER. Then I hope the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to understand this amendment. The Senator from Florida offered an amendment providing for a survey and containing an appropriation; and the Chair, as he was compelled to do, sustained the point of order made against it. I understand the Senator from Florida now intends to offer an amendment authorizing a survey but making no appropriation, and he increases the general appropriation for surveys by enough to cover that particular survey in case that shall be ordered. Is that the idea?

Mr. CONOVER. The other amendment was ruled out of order, and I wish to bring it in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was declared to be agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 20, noes 17.

Mr. CONOVER. I now offer the following amendment, and I offer this in all sincerity. There has already been money expended on this survey; it has been recommended by the War Department for several years; money has been expended, and we need an appropriation to continue it—

Mr. MORRILL. Was there a quorum on the last vote?

Mr. RANSOM. There was not.

Mr. ALLISON. It is too late to make the point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inadvertently did not pay attention to the fact that only thirty-seven Senators voted, and he recognizes the propriety of the point made by the Senator from Vermont. No quorum voted upon the last question, and therefore it remains undecided. With the permission of the Senate, the Chair will put the question again on agreeing to the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida increasing the appropriation in section 3 as stated.

The question being again put, the amendment was agreed to; there being on a division—yeas 20, noes 19.

Mr. CONOVER. Now I offer the other amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida, which will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

That a survey to ascertain the practicability and cost of the construction of a water route for transportation from the mouth of the Saint Mary's River, on the borders of the States of Georgia and Florida, by the way of Saint Marks and Pensacola, Florida, to the Mississippi River, is hereby authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this bill now contains an appropriation of more than $7,000,000.

Mr. CONKLING. More than $9,000,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The honorable Senator from New York says more than $9,000,000. We will call it seven by nine, as the glass-makers say.

Mr. EATON. Eight by seven. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Leaving all jests apart, the appropriations that this Congress in both Houses have on foot and that are likely to become laws, according to the opinions of those who are intrusted with the charge of the public finance, will leave a very large deficit in the Treasury at the next meeting of Congress in December. Now, if there is any one subject of public expenditure in respect to which there may be delay without serious injury to public interests, it is the carrying on of extensive works of internal improvement. The country got on last year with the rivers and harbors substantially as they were, and the year before. Every year, presumably that we have appropriated these millions, has made them better, but still the country could get on without more appropriated to them; and so I think I am justified in saying that if there is any one class of items of public expenditure that can be suspended in a time of stress and scarcity of money, it is these.

This state of things was presented to us in the year 1869, before the panic of 1873 had paralyzed industry and broken down enterprise; and then, even when a bill running up to $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 had been presented, after consideration of the subject the Congress of the United States enacted a provision appropriating a moderate sum of $2,000,000 in gross to be expended by the Secretary of War for the repair and preservation of existing works in order to preserve what had been done and keep them in repair, but to save the public money from new expenditures until the state of the Treasury and of the country should make it more reasonable to go into them.

Now, Mr. President, in precise conformity with that wholesome precedent, and under which I will add the $2,000,000 that we then appropriated were expended with the utmost wisdom and economy and with the greatest benefit, as far as it would go, to the objects to which it was designed, I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the matter which will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

That the sum of $2,000,000 is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, to be expended for the repair, extension, preservation, and completion of works for the improvement of rivers and harbors under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause such expenditures to be made so as to best subserve the interests of commerce; but he is required to report to Congress at the beginning of its December session all expenditures made under the provisions of this act up to that time, in detail.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think there is any necessity for this amendment. Everybody understands it. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I was not able as a member of the Committee on Commerce to concur in reporting the pending bill. As reported by a majority of the committee, it provided for the expenditure of $6,958,000; and my belief was and is that a large part, perhaps one-half that sum was unwarranted, in respect of business and practical considerations, and also because the nature of the works to which it is to be devoted are those which Congress has no right to appropriate money to begin or continue. I have no doubt of the right of Congress to appropriate money to improve the highways of commerce, such harbors, such rivers, such arms of the sea, such channels of traffic and communication as are national in their character and relations. I do not believe that Congress has power—and by power of course I mean rightful constitutional power—to appropriate money to dredge trout streams, brooks, runs, small bodies of water lying wholly within individual States, and never to be classed as national highways. In the Senate amendments have been added which make the total of this bill now not less than $9,000,000. If any Senator shall think this total mistaken, it must be a Senator who so makes up the accounts touching the jetties of the Mississippi as to show that $750,000 and not $1,750,000 is appropriated for that purpose by the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole. I understand, and so do other Senators, that $1,750,000 is the amount added by the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole in relation to the jetties on the Mississippi River. Be that as it may, if we say that $1,000,000 of the jetties appropriation was provided for before, then the bill contains now about $8,300,000; if we reckon the other million, it contains $9,300,000. In either event I do not feel at liberty to vote for such a bill. I feel constrained to vote against it, and I shall do so, although it contains appropriations for works in the State of New York and in waters adjacent to that State which are national and which are meritorious, although it contains appropriation to improve the Mississippi River, which is a great highway of commerce, national, and vastly important. Could I segregate, or carve out those provisions containing appropriations for purposes useful and national, and, therefore, purposes constitutional in their nature, gladly would I do so and vote for them; but on the final question I must vote en masse for all of these provisions, or else against them all. Here in addition to other things is a section, section 2, providing no end of surveys, that apparently harmless but insidious thing by which we put our finger between the belt and the wheel and are drawn in irresistibly to vote after-coming and uncounted appropriations. Get a survey made, no matter in what case, because the genius of engineers will never admit that they can be baffled by natural obstacles; get a survey on a question whether you can build a canal across mountains, whether you can hold an artificial river in artificial banks and carry it over the level of the house-tops of the region it is to traverse, and you can find engineers who will demonstrate and show by estimate of cost that the work is possible. It is possible as an engineering fact, and, therefore, within the spirit of the inquiry, as they understand it, it is practicable, and accordingly an estimate comes for it, and then follows, almost as certainly as the shark follows the ship, an appropriation to commence and continue the work. Here is a great catalogue of these surveys, and those who may be still in the Senate when the time shall come, will be called to vote appropriations for some and probably for all of this list, covering pages as it does.

Mr. President, for one I cannot do it, because, although as I have said there are many matters of merit in the bill, several matters of deep interest to the commerce of the State which honors me with a seat in this Chamber, I shall be compelled, along with an assent to those provisions, to give assent to such things as I do not believe the judgment of those for whom in some sort I am authorized to speak will approve.

The honorable Senator from Vermont offers an amendment in the nature of a safeguard. He offers an amendment which, at all events, will accomplish this, if the Senate will adopt it: wherever a break-water has been partly constructed, so that the ebb and flow, the wash of waters, would carry it away, unless it be anchored, ripped or secured, such a preserving work can be done; wherever there is a work in progress to stop which would be to lose, and to continue to gain, the need will be answered, and there will be saved to the Treasury at all events $7,000,000.

I believe, Mr. President, as firmly as I believe in your presence that this bill and other bills which have passed and are presently to pass the two Houses of Congress, will encounter, and at no distant time, a day of reckoning when seriously the question will be asked how all this came, and I think that question will be loudly asked in a State which pays about one-third of all the national income.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to modify the amendment that I offered so as to make it a motion to strike out all after the enacting clause to and including section 3, so as to leave in the provision about the railway bridge over the Arkansas River and the provision that the Senate inserted in respect to the jetties, only applying the striking out to the river and harbor matters proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I regret very much after the action of the Senate and especially after the action of the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] that in the last hours of the session he, as the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, should have thought it becoming to make the criticism which he has made upon this bill. If I am not mistaken, the last act of the Senator was to assist by his counsel, and by his vote, in increasing by 20 per cent. the appropriation for the surveys which he considers the frightful source of this mischievous legislation. I think the Senator most effectually assisted the Senator from Florida in adding $30,000 to the cost of surveys, although he says they are the fruitful source and precursor of this mischief which he deprecated. If I am not mistaken again, because the Senator has been absent from the Chamber during much of the discussion of this bill, he was most earnest in assisting the Senator from Louisiana in adding $15,000 to the appropriation for improving a river, or a stream, or a "bayou," as it is called, for the improvement of which I would gladly vote an appropriation. Nevertheless, the stream or bayou referred to falls under his denunciation as one of those "small, trifling streams that are confined to one State and are not to be regarded as national." If I am not further mistaken, the Senator from New York voted, as I did, to attach to this bill what is known as the Eads jetty amendment and thereby added $1,750,000 to it. And yet he now proposes because of comparatively minor considerations to vote against the bill, and to favor the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, to reduce these appropriations to $2,000,000 as a matter of economy and public justice.

Mr. President, consider for a moment; and I propose no school-boy rhetorical display upon the subject of the territorial magnitude of our country or its incalculable resources. Forty-five millions of people or now upward of fifty millions occupy a continent, stretching along the Atlantic coast, with almost countless bays and harbors, a vast stretch of country, valley, plain, mountain, extending across the continent until you reach the great Pacific, with its bays and harbors. This mighty territory is occupied by fifty millions of people, and you find scarcely fifty miles of it not intersected and radiated by a river or a navigable stream; and are we to be told that $2,000,000 is the proper and munificent sum that this Congress is to appropriate to keep in repair and to keep in improvement the mighty water-highways of this great Republic?

The Senator speaks of national streams and national harbors. He speaks, and he properly speaks, of the harbors in his own State. They are national works. But what would they be but for the small "trout streams" of which he speaks which make these great water-ways? What makes up the great aggregate of the trade of those harbors? Is it the harbor of New York, is it the Mississippi River, or Cape Fear River? No; it is the hundred, it is the thousand, it is the more than thousand small streams which take up the fruits of the farmer's labor, take them at his home, carry them down the little canal, down the small creeks into the larger river, and then they go on to Harlem, to Hell Gate, to the Mississippi, to San Francisco, and to the Atlantic ports. Sir, these great national highways could not exist but for the small streams. They are the roots and branches also to the grand trunk which so enlist the Senator's admiration.

Is it wise to give great facilities to the transportation of goods or products at New York, and then to cripple them as they should come from Maryland or Virginia or North Carolina? Would that be advantageous to commerce? Would that be a just and proper regulation of commerce by a wise and patriotic people? Mr. President, what benefit would you do the farmer in Oregon, in Missouri, or in North Carolina, if you let his goods pass through the great highways of New York and San Francisco, and then allow them to be oppressed and destroyed by heavy freights as they go up some smaller streams? No, sir; this is a great system of internal improvement; it is a system which has made the State of the Senator the first State in material resources, and in many other respects, in this country. It is to the immortal honor of the greatest man that ever lived in the Senator's State that he devised that system of water communication that has given New York her commercial supremacy. Now, sir, I do not pretend to deny that there are many errors in this bill. A bill cannot be constructed here which is to operate upon almost every county and district in this country, in which there shall not be some hardship, some error, some fault, some absurdity, if you will, but I believe that the Committees on Commerce of the two Houses have endeavored to construct a bill which shall be as just, as fair, as equal, as beneficial to every portion of this country as the united industry, ability, and impartiality of those committees could make it.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] has not fallen, he could not well have fallen, into a greater error than to suppose that the State of New York owes her commercial position to bills like this. No, sir. When New York thought it desirable to make a channel through which the corn and wheat fields of the West could reach the markets of the world, instead of an attempt by national legislation to gather from the pockets of tax-payers of other States the wherewithal for such an achievement, at her own cost, of her own motion, at her own risk, she constructed twelve hundred and seventy-five miles of artificial rivers, one of them three hundred and fifty miles long and seven feet deep, and connecting our inland seas with the greatest of the nation's ports.

Such was New York's policy, and such was her own way of adopting it. She never asked Congress to dredge and deepen her rivulets and inland streams. Within her borders are many, many, water-courses larger than some of these, but for not one of them has a farthing of national appropriation ever been asked, and I venture to say not a farthing ever will be asked. Streams as large as several mentioned in the pending bill have been improved, or harnessed with machinery, compelled to work their passage till their foam became a circulating medium, but this has been done by the enterprise of individuals, and when paid for by a common treasure, the treasure was her own.

Mr. President, New York and her five million people are neither ignorant nor illiberal. When it is proposed to appropriate two million or five million to make a pass, or ship-way from New Orleans to the sea, they are for that, and as freely as if instead of bearing the lion's share, they bore the lesser share of the cost. They see between the two watersheds of the continent, between the Alleghany and the Rocky Mountains, a region of country fourteen hundred miles wide and two thousand miles long. They see there the food of the world; they see a region capable of producing enough of that on which man lives to feed every people which may find itself lacking food, from the rising of the setting sun. They see a mighty river traversing that tract; they know it is important; they know it is national; and if $5,000,000 or ten million, or so many millions that New York's share is ten million is necessary to find a roadway for the products of this region to the mediterranean sea of Mexico and so onward to the markets of the world, New York is for that, and as one of her Senators I should be sustained in voting for it.

But, when it is proposed to improve a pond, a creek, a run, so that cord-wood may be floated from the forest where it grows to the river where it finds shipment, when it is proposed to dredge and expend money in order to obtain twenty-two inches of navigation, which is the maximum stated in some of the estimates of the engineers, New York knows no national duty requiring her to pay tribute or taxes to carry on such ventures. There is the distinction. It sharply divides the Senator from North Carolina and myself. I deny not only the wisdom and expediency of spending the nation's money for such local purposes, but I deny also the power under the Constitution thus to appropriate the revenue.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from North Carolina criticised me, and justly, because he said that I too had voted to add amendments to this bill. Yes, sir, I did, for reasons sufficiently obvious, but which, nevertheless, after the allusion of the Senator from North Carolina, of which I do not complain, I beg to state: thinking as I do that the river and harbor bills, one taken with another, made up as they are by depositing here and there and somewhere else on considerations of locality, and in deference to the wishes of Senators and Representatives, the appropriations to be made, composed as they are in my belief by a system which, if I may say it giving offense to none, I regard as one of the chronic scandals of legislation, and believing as I do that the average river and harbor bill is little better than a burlesque upon a well-adjusted and carefully considered scheme for internal improvements, I was disposed to test the judgment and sense of the Senate by voting for additional appropriations just as meritorious as scores already found in the bill, so that not making fish of one and flesh of another we should see whether the Senate would stand by the logic of the bill, and vote for schemes of merits after enough had been added to render the proceeding more glaring.

In other words, in plain language, I did vote for some of these amendments to do what is called loading the bill, to bring out its features in bold relief, to force every Senator to understand what this species of legislation means; and accordingly, when the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] moved to increase the appropriation for a bayou in his State, I voted for it. There was an appropriation for it already in the bill, an appropriation which every member of the committee who knows anything about it knows is inadequate to the work, an appropriation vicious for the reason that it would be vicious to expend in a summer $10,000 upon a building which was to cost $50,000, and then leave it for the elements to wreck or ruin before in a subsequent year the work could be resumed. I voted in the case of this bayou to add enough to make the work effectual, upon the theory once stated by Dr. Johnson, that whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well. I say further, that I can take this bill and pick out more than a half-dozen other works which no Senator will say have more merit than the bayou in Louisiana. I did vote for some of these other amendments and for the survey proposed by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CONOVER.] I voted for it because it has all the merits of a number of other surveys, and if the logic of such a bill be true, then the more of them you have the better.

In the processes of legislation embarrassing questions of duty often arise; a not infrequent question is whether it is wise to add to the objectionable features of a bad bill in order to defeat it—to increase its ugliness as a caricature brings out in bold relief the lineaments of a face.

Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has modified his amendment so as to leave in the legislative provisions touching a bridge over the Arkansas River, if I understand him also to leave unaffected by it the amendment touching the jetties on the Mississippi; and with those exceptions, the question to be presented to the Senate is whether it will vote $7,800,000 promiscuously to all these various schemes, incipient or otherwise, or whether having disposed of the subject of the jetties of the Mississippi it will say that in this tax-ridden year $2,000,000 is enough to be paid by the tax-payers of the country to protect from damage uncompleted works and to continue as many as the sum named will permit.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I apprehend the Senator from Florida on my left [Mr. CONOVER] and the Senator from Louisiana on my right [Mr. KELLOGG] will be surprised to hear that it was rather a Grecian friendship they received from the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] to-night, and that when he gave the generous vote for which they thank him, for their amendments, he only intended to expose the enormity of the river and harbor bill. I think that information will strike with some surprise the Senator from Louisiana. If, knowing the history of these river and harbor bills, the Senator from New York is right in saying that they are swollen; that they are beset with ridiculous and absurd propositions, I do not think the bill needed a stronger characterization of its utter want of merit. Yet, in the last hours of the fate of the bill, it seems necessary, in the judgment of the Senator, for him to make the measure still more deformed and mischievous by additions to its errors. While I thank the Senator from New York for conceding that I know that a bill is sometimes overloaded with amendments in order to destroy it, I do not think that was the spirit in which his friends received his aid.

But, sir, this has but little to do with the question. The Senator, if he understood me to say anything in the way of regret at the existence of the magnificent system of public improvements in his State, or of disparagement of them or of their benefit to his people, he misunderstood me. I commend New York for having made them. I wish every State in the Republic would do the like. I wish New York had done more. But the Senator says that by her own efforts in this respect she has made herself as a State great; she has given herself character; she has given herself position; she has given herself wealth. Is not the Senator, if his own State has made fourteen hundred miles of artificial river, willing that this Republic shall make the same proportion of artificial rivers for the general improvement? New York has never refused, nor has any State in this country ever refused, to take a dollar, be it for a large stream or a small stream, voted by the General Government. I will not read, though I have the list before me, the appropriations that New York has received, because it might be thought that I intended to censure the munificent spirit with which Federal aid has been given to the Empire State. I regret that she has not received more. But while she has received her millions and her billions, is it not right that Florida and North Carolina and South Carolina and Oregon should receive the few thousands they ask and need?

The Senator says he does not "make fish of one and flesh of another." He says that if you have ingrafted on your bill a number of idiosyncrasies, if you have put there one, two, three, four, or five items of ridiculous trifles he intends to be just, to be generous, to put every stream in the Union of that character upon the bill, for it will not do for the Senate to put one or two absurd and erroneous items on the bill. It must be crowded with every wrong like the one from Florida, or the one from Louisiana, or the bill will not be impartial. I propose a different system. I propose that if we improve a large stream and a large harbor with the same measure of justice, if not with the same amount, we give to the small streams and to the small harbors their proportion of public benefit. That is the justice which I wish to give. I commend this Senator. I tell him he will do more for his country by measuring out to every large stream and to every small stream in the Union its due proportion of these appropriations than by giving all to what he is pleased to call the "national works."

But, Mr. President, how very wrong such reasoning is. Here is a bill of thirty-five pages, with several hundred items of appropriation. It is very likely that the Senator can take up the bill and find perhaps one or two items of doubtful propriety. We know they are there; we admit they are there. A thousand considerations put them there; but the main consideration was one of justice to the people where those streams are. Now, is it right, is it becoming, that the whole bill should be damned, denounced, and have contempt brought upon it because there are two or three unwise items in it? Is it not better that this bill should take its character from the ninety-nine just appropriations in it than from the one or two fractional eccentricities?

I believe that the $2,000,000 suggested by the amendment of my friend from Vermont will not keep in repair one-half of the public improvements in this country. At the last session of Congress we appropriated over $8,000,000 to carry on these works. The estimates of the Engineer Corps are over twenty million; and does the Senator tell me that these great works can be carried on upon $2,000,000? No, sir. While the French and the English have the Suez Canal connecting two continents, while the French and Italians are running their tunnels under the Alps, while men in this country are cutting through mountains for their railways, while every civilized nation is devoting all its energies to works of improvement, I do hope that the American Republic will not suffer by comparison because of a policy of either inaction or illiberality.

A few days ago, in company with some friends, I met a distinguished gentleman from England just from Canada, a man known the world over for his scientific attainments, and he said that the Dominion of Canada, under the patronage of Great Britain, was about to construct a railroad which would cost $100,000,000 to go from Canada to the Pacific Ocean on our north. When I see every nation of the world spreading its commerce; when I see them giving their treasure, their men, their genius to these great and advancing works; when I see the science of engineering, the genius of engineering—yes, when I see the genius of the engineer more powerful to-day than Hannibal or Napoleon when they crossed the Alps, for it took them months to ascend them, while the iron railway, under the skill of the engineer, goes under them in a few minutes—when I see the countless triumphs of the invincible spirit and influence of modern progress, I do not wish to see it hampered or harassed in the American Republic alone.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator from New York yield to me a moment? I desire to give notice that hereafter I shall endeavor to enforce the five-minute rule.

Mr. HEREFORD. I hope it will not be enforced just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take notice of the demand for the enforcement of the five-minute rule.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, I have been very much surprised at the argument of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] He tells you, and does it with a great deal of ridicule, that appropriations are made here for rivers that do not draw more than twenty-two or twenty-three inches of water. Why, sir, the great Ohio River, the greater part of the year, has only twenty-two or twenty-three inches of water in it, and it floats a large portion of the commerce of the United States. That river, which in the greater part of the year has not more than twenty-two or twenty-three inches of water, floats upon its bosom annually more than all the foreign commerce of the United States and twice as much as enters the port of New York—more than twice all the commerce that goes in and out of the harbor at the city of New York.

The Senator talks about being in favor of voting money for the great Mississippi River. What would the Mississippi River be if it were not for its thousand tributaries? Where would the waters come from that now flow down it if it were not for the thousand tributaries east and west?

The Senator from New York talks about this bill containing $9,000,- 000 in it. Why, Mr. President, I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury giving a statement of the expenditures for various public works for several years, commencing with June 30, 1868. The State of New York in 1873 received $2,697,000—that State alone one-third of all that is in this bill. In the next year the same State received $2,546,000; the next year $934,000; the next year nearly $900,000, and the next year over half a million of dollars to that State alone.

Furthermore, I also hold in my hand a report giving the amount appropriated for the various rivers from the foundation of the Government down, and I find here for the State of New York for improving Buffalo Harbor, $1,000,000; East River, $1,708,000; Hudson River, $1,189,000. He ridicules creeks. I shall take the time of the Senate just to read one—

East Chester Creek, in the State of New York, $34,000.

And so it is creek after creek, and it is the creek that makes the river. Why do you want appropriations at a harbor on the coast? Is it not to let the products of the country come in and out? The appropriations upon your rivers, large and small, are to let the products of this country go in and out. That is the philosophy of it; that is the reason of it; and the great object, the great good, to be accomplished by this river and harbor bill is this: it allows the people of the great interior where the wheat and the corn are grown to get them to market cheaply. It brings these great rivers that are rushing through into competition with the railways of the country. Dry up these rivers or stop appropriating for them, and the people of the agricultural districts of this country would be only tributary to the great railways of the country. That is the great benefit that is conveyed by these appropriations for rivers and harbors, that they save the people from the power of the great railways of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will be allowed to conclude what he wishes to say.

Mr. HEREFORD. No, sir. If this five-minute rule is applied to all gentlemen, it is all very well. I do not ask to have my time extended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia be allowed to proceed.

Mr. FERRY. I object.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President I will conform to the rule—

Mr. FERRY. I object on behalf of the bill.

Mr. KERNAN. I think we should conform to the five-minute rule at this stage of the session and of the night. I wish to ask Senators this question: if we pass this bill as it is, where can we stop in appropriating the money in the Federal Treasury raised by taxation in making internal improvements? How far shall we go if we do what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] says should be done, that is, not only expend money for national purposes, but should give every river and every creek its just share? I do not understand that we have, and we ought not to have in this Federal Government, any such power. It was formed, and wisely formed, on the theory that it could raise money from the people only for national purposes; and by national purposes as to rivers and harbors, I mean those harbors which are for the benefit of the commerce of the world or the commerce of several States, or rivers that are really arms of the sea and on which commerce is borne to the sea. Beyond that I dispute that we have any right to go on appropriating money for rivers and for harbors. Why, sir, nothing will so soon destroy the Government as for us to turn it into a government that is going to deal out money on the principle that each State must have its share to improve streams to float logs or streams to float small boats.

The Senator last up alluded to the State of New York. Let him point out a place on the Atlantic, as East Chester is, that is not where the tide ebbs and flows, where there is a port or a harbor for the commerce of all the States and all the world. Buffalo and Oswego on the lakes, in the same State, are national because the commerce brought from Chicago and all along the lakes comes down there, and it is to be protected there as national commerce.

Now, sir, I appeal to Senators that we must make a stand against the idea that the Federal Government has a right or can wisely attempt to improve internal streams, streams that have no relation to commerce except as they may run a little water to large rivers that flow into the sea. I appeal to all Senators that if we go on in this way, giving each State a share without regard to the rivers or harbors that are improved being national harbors and rivers, the people cannot bear the taxation which will come upon them to raise money to be distributed and expended in this way. For the sake of the old constitutional doctrine that we have only a right to raise money and apply it to national purposes, let us put an end to the notion that we can come here and say, "You have had so much expended by the Federal Government on a national harbor or a national river, in the proper sense, and therefore we must have money appropriated to clear out streams that are not of any importance to commerce." The internal improvements of a State can be made best and most wisely by the people of the State, and not by the Government here pouring out its Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KERNAN. One single word further. I hope we shall adopt the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. Two million dollars will give us all that we need for national purposes, and I feel sure that when it is expended there will be no complaint by the people of the country that the commerce of the Union, in its proper sense, had suffered for the want of rivers and harbors essential to national commerce.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont is adopted I propose to vote for this bill. If that amendment is not agreed to, I shall feel compelled to vote against the passage of the bill, although I shall vote against it with great reluctance. Since the amendment was adopted submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON,] I have been exceedingly anxious to have an inquiry that is calculated to make the Mississippi River more beneficial to the people along its borders. But this bill is so loaded, and was so loaded when it came from the committee, that not even to save that desirable amendment can I vote for the bill. There are not, as is said by the Senator from North Carolina, three or four objectionable appropriations; there are a hundred items in the bill that ought not to be in it. One-half of all the money that is appropriated in this bill will be absolutely wasted. Our engineers make an estimate of $25,000 or $50,000, and we appropriate a few thousand dollars of the amount estimated and it is wasted.

There has been some criticism on the vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CONOVER] for a survey across the State of Florida. If Senators who complained of that vote could realize the character of country proposed to be surveyed they would see that that is a work of national importance. The proposed survey is for the purpose of determining whether there is a waterway from the mouth of the Mississippi across the State of Florida to the Atlantic. That would save many hundreds of miles of water navigation; it would save all the dangerous navigation in the neighborhood of the West India Islands. It is a proposition that ought to have been submitted independent of this bill. I was ready and prepared from an examination of it years ago to give my vote, not simply for the survey, but if it should prove by the survey to be as feasible as I believe it to be, I am willing to vote money out of the National Treasury for the purpose of building across that isthmus a canal, because it has a national object; it would bring the great Mississippi Valley almost to the door, you may say, of the Atlantic cities. It is not in keeping with the survey of Mud Creek and various other enterprises of that character which are provided for in this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, during the last session of this Congress I voted against the precursor of this bill on the ground that the appropriations involve the construction of works of internal improvement not national in their character. That was my first experience on the subject in Congress. Since that time, looking back over the history of this character of legislation, I find that no river and harbor bill has been passed through Congress for many years that did not embody provisions for works that were not works of a national character. It has seemed to me, and still seems to me, that it will be utterly impossible, through the consent of the legislators in either branch, ever to get a river and harbor bill through Congress which confines itself to the legitimate subjects of appropriation. It seems to me that we shall have to look for a remedy for this matter in another direction and follow the example of a number of the States of this Union which have found it necessary to put restraint upon the Legislatures in their constitutions by providing that their governors shall have the power of vetoing any special feature of an appropriation bill, leaving the remainder intact.

It is certainly true, Mr. President, that all of these bills are of that class to be called log-rolling bills. I feel the influence of that very principle upon myself to-night. I cannot reconcile it to my own judgment that this bill in all of its parts ought to pass, and yet there are some features of it, not covered by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which are entirely legitimate and are of great necessity for the public welfare. For instance, the appropriations for many of the harbors ought to be included in the exception which the Senator has made in reference to the Eads jetties and the bridge across the Arkansas River.

There is a principle about these appropriations that I am not quite sure we have altogether succeeded in developing as a principle. Some gentlemen say that the power to appropriate money for works of internal improvement depends upon that clause in the Constitution giving to Congress authority to regulate commerce between the States. It has not occurred to me that that is the legitimate or true foundation of the power that is exerted here. The power, it seems to me, rests in the fact that the Government of the United States has a right to improve its own property, its object being the general welfare. It may take ground for a fort, and it may build a fort where it pleases. So it may build a court-house, a custom-house, or a post-office; so it may build a cemetery for its dead; and so it may build a hospital for the sick; it may build homes for soldiers. Indeed I know of no limitation upon the power of the Federal Government to improve its own property for the general welfare and in its own way.

It has occurred to me that the right of the Federal Government exists wherever it owns the bed of a river to clear out the obstructions in that river as much as it does to clear out the obstructions in a bay which it happens to own in the same way. I believe that the constitutional test of the Government on these subjects rests upon the ownership of the property which is sought to be improved, and I believe if we come at last to a declaration of that kind we shall place ourselves on tolerably safe ground. But the safer ground would be to have a provision in the Constitution of the United States by which the Executive, who has no interest in these log-rolling provisions, might veto one item of an appropriation bill, leaving all the rest to stand.

I do not conceive that this bill as it is presented here to-day is a worse river and harbor bill than many others that have preceded it. True, it appropriates more money, but I think not on subjects less legitimate. That is all that I have to say upon the bill.

Now one word as to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont which he proposes as a substitute. The difficulty in regard to that substitute, as it occurs to my mind, is that it leaves the discretionary disbursement of $2,000,000 in the hands of a single officer of the Federal Government. If it be true that we ought not in the present state of our finances to appropriate more than $2,000,000, and that these appropriations ought to have reference to the preservation of works that are improved or partly improved, that they ought to have reference rather to the preservation than to the improvement of public works, then we ought of course to enter into the subject of the proper disbursement of this money and provide by law how it shall be disbursed. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont makes no provision of this kind. It has been impossible, of course, that the Senator could have so framed his amendment at this late day as to have coupled that subject. There is one feature, however, in this bill which commends itself considerably to my judgment, and which reconciles me to a support of the measure, and that is that after all the Secretary of War has a large discretionary power over these disbursements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Alabama will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BUTLER, Mr. TELLER, and others. Oh no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. SPENCER. I dislike to call the Senator from Vermont to order, but I think I shall have to do it. He has spoken on this amendment already.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is greatly mistaken, as much as he is about the propriety of the amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator from Vermont has spoken on everything else. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] states with great propriety the question as to the fitness of leaving the discretion of the disbursement of this $2,000,000 to one officer of the Government; but the Senator will perceive that in respect of many objects of public expenditure the same thing has always been done.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Vermont will allow me, when my time expired I was about to state the fact, as one feature of this bill that reconciled me more to it than any other, that the Secretary of War has a discretion in all these disbursements and has saved to the Government many millions of dollars heretofore in the exercise of that discretionary power.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the existence of a discretion is not an improper thing. If I was able to agree with the Senator from Alabama that it was within the proper competence of the President of the United States or the Secretary of War to withhold these expenditures in their discretion, there would be no great objection to this bill in the sense of mere saving of money, because I have that confidence in the Executive Department as now administered which makes me believe that not more than a quarter of this money would be spent under existing circumstances. But I do not know where the statute is, and I should be glad to have it read if there be one, that authorizes the Secretary of War to withhold a single dollar of this expenditure. This bill declares that these sums are "to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and are "to be expended," that is the very first clause in the bill, "under the direction of the Secretary of War," not a direction as to whether they are to be expended, but they are to be expended under his direction for these specific objects.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I am told that language is identical with the language of former laws under which this discretion has been exercised.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that it is, but I take it for granted, for the purpose of what I wish to say, that that is so; and yet I remember, that when a former President of the United States, on an occasion when a bill very much like this, of about seven or eight million dollars, had passed under circumstances very much like those under which this bill will pass, did like Andrew Jackson, perhaps borrow a little discretion out of some invisible clause in the statute and save some of the money, the constitutionality of his behavior was severely criticised, although the practical good sense of it was admitted by everybody, even by those who had assisted in carrying through the performance of the great appropriations. I think in a strict sense that in the way this bill is framed, in its opening clauses, no discretion is reposed in the President of the United States or in the Secretary of War in respect of the expenditure of the money.

Now I come to the question as to the fitness of providing that whatever is to be expended, be it two, or three, or four, or five, or eight million dollars, shall be expended under the discretion of the Secretary of War or of the President. First, I see that in the last forti-cation act, which I happen to hold in my hand, picking up the book here, and I do not doubt in all the former ones, although I do not know, for I have not looked at them, it will be found that the fortification appropriations are a general appropriation for the increase and armament, &c., of the fortifications of the United States, leaving it to the responsible discretion of the Executive or of the Departments, as the case may be, under their responsibility to Congress, and subject to severe punishment in case of any failure to deal fairly and faithfully with these subjects, that they are to determine the places where forts are to be built and the distribution of the money for these public purposes.

Let us see how this principle will apply in respect of this very bill. How is it that all these hundreds and thousands of items are in this bill at all? Is it because any committee of the Senate of the United States has investigated each case by an inspection, and determined, as we do, in respect of claims and other objects upon which we legislate, that a particular provision is fit? Not by any means. These items are in this bill because, and only because, in the specific and detailed sense that an Executive Department of the Government, through its proper officers has estimated and examined and is presumed to believe and recommend that appropriations should be made.

This bill rests for its entire foundation, leaving out certain great arteries of communication that everybody can understand, like that mighty river that flows in the valley beyond the Alleghanies, and some others,—every item of it rests upon the discretion of an Executive Department, and that discretion is appealed to as the final cause for any appropriation at all! Yet Senators say it will not do to trust to the discretion of a Department upon whose discretion alone we are asked to act at all. That is the logic of the performance. I submit, Mr. President, with some confidence, that there is a fault in that species of logic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. MORRILL in the chair.) It becomes the duty of the Chair to remind the Senator that his time is up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it becomes my duty, Mr. President, to move to indefinitely postpone the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That question is debatable.

Mr. SPENCER. The Senator moves to indefinitely postpone his own amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to indefinitely postpone the bill, and I will proceed, with the permission of my honorable friend. I have not any present expectation that the toil of the people of the United States that is expended in taxation and that bears taxation shall be made to suffer in this time of public distress and deficiency in the Treasury, without whatever can be justly said in appealing to the good sense of Senators being said, so far as I am concerned; and therefore I feel perfectly justified even in these last hours of the session, as it is said, in making this motion. Now I will go on.

I was saying, Mr. President, that the whole of this bill rests upon discretion; and therefore I think I can safely appeal to Senators, to the honorable Senator from Alabama, who does me the honor to listen, that there is no danger in appealing to this discretion of the Executive Department as to the best and most economical distribution of this money. I think that is demonstrated; and I will add, although I believe I said it before, the people who are to bear these expenses will wish to know from those who vote to pay them upon what principle it is that we proceed. They will wish to know upon what principle it is that the Congress of the United States takes the toil of the people and devotes it to local objects when in no single State or Territory of the Union is the product of the toil of the people devoted to local objects. A State appropriates money from its treasury to build a canal, two canals, three canals, four canals if you please, but it does not provide, nor do any of the people of the State feel that there would be any justice in providing, that a canal should be carried into every county and to every farmer's door whose tax pays for it. All public force of organized political societies rests upon the philosophy that such organizations are a concentration of public treasure and of public effort to be applied for the general benefit in some particular channel. Political organization is designed to concentrate the forces of society and not to diffuse the labors of the people by taxing everybody in order to distribute to everybody in the personal sense or to every neighborhood. You might just as well say that light, a beautiful subject which will produce fire if it be concentrated, that will light the fires of the steam-engine and carry on the forces of society in the industrial arts, would be far better if you ground your lens the other way so as to distribute the light in order that everybody might have his hundred-thousandth share of it.

Mr. President, that is not a sound argument in my opinion. No State, no county, no township, ever taxes itself in order that there may be brought to every man's door a highway or a school-house or a canal or any other of the objects for which society is formed. The general good is only produced (and that is the only object of taxing at all) by concentrating the general forces of society in order that particular channels of communication, applying it as I will now to these subjects, may be made in central and convenient ways for the good of the whole. All that goes beyond that is local, it is personal, and therefore in every just political sense it is unjust, and it is tyranny to tax people for such objects.

The theory of Senators who have maintained the contrary proposition, as I understood my honorable friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] to do, would be that if Congress were to appropriate, as it has appropriated, vast treasures in order to build one, or two, or three great railway highways across a continent for national purposes, it would be bound by the principle to aid every railway in every State in this Union, and to provide for building more in every part of every State wherever any little community desired it.

Mr. RANSOM. I know my friend from Vermont will allow me to say a word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.

Mr. RANSOM. To adopt the beautiful illustration of the Senator from Vermont about light that we all see every day, I would have the benefit of this Government, its protection, as diffused as the light. I would have it everywhere, upon every soul beneath it. I would not have that light concentrated to shine upon one part of the people and not upon the other part. I know I cannot have it thoroughly diffused; I know I cannot have a railroad or a canal at every man's door, but I would have it as near by as possible. I beg pardon of the Senator for interrupting him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thank my friend rather for it. Even agreeing with the honorable Senator from North Carolina that those benefits of Government that can be diffused should be, impartial justice may rest with equal beams upon every hamlet, upon every cot, and every household, that like the light they may be everywhere, without undue preference or tyrannous taxation; but when you come to the material forces of the world in society and in States the common objects cannot be attained, they will be destroyed, by diffusing this concentrated effort which is to build up great highways for the common good, and saying you shall have a highway everywhere.

Mr. RANSOM. Then, if my friend from Vermont will pardon me, he declares that the operation of all government in material benefits must be unequal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, Mr. President, I do not declare that. I declare exactly the reverse. I say that the expenditure of the treasure of the State of New York for that great canal to which the honorable Senator has referred, was not an unequal expenditure, but that in the highest sense, as far as it is possible as this world is organized, it was a benefit that penetrated like the circulation of the blood to the remotest hamlet of that State, although the honorable Senator agrees with me that that canal could not have branched to every hamlet of that State. That is just the principle to apply to this bill. Here is the State of North Carolina wherein the provisions of this bill go in the direction, they are far from reaching it, of spreading out the money of the people of all the States to reach every hamlet; and in the State of Vermont it is just the same. I am not complaining that the State of Vermont has not got her share, far from it; but I say, Mr. President, and I appeal with some confidence to the good sense of Senators who are responsible as the taxing and the expending power of this country, that there is danger that we mistake our mission and go too far. I say that while it is just and right that the great objects of consolidating the national unity, of building great highways of commerce wherever they are necessary for the great objects of commerce, will justify expenditures for pushing across from the southern gulf to the Pacific coast another line of railway, just as we have done in the central portions of the Union, it does not follow from that, but the reverse, that across every parallel and across every mile, because there are inhabitants and citizens who pay taxes, we are also to build railways. It does not follow, I submit to the Senator from North Carolina. It would break down the very beneficial objects for which the Government was formed and would destroy and waste entirely the burdens that we impose upon the people to raise the money for it.

I say this with great confidence, when I appeal to the Senators who have been most urgent in pressing this bill upon our consideration. I say it with the hope and with the belief that not many years will go by before they will see it, as I think I do clearly, and that this distinction being understood will be followed.

Now, Mr. President, where does this money come from? It comes, as I have said, from the toil of the people, and we, as responsible trustees of the fund that they have put into our hands to devote to national and beneficial objects, are responsible that we shall spend it wisely and upon the principles that I have stated.

What is our present condition? Is it wise and fit that we should spend anything now? Is there a great public emergency that requires that new channels shall be opened? Is there any great public emergency that requires that new rivers shall be deepened? Everybody will say no. Here have been fifty years of commercial prosperity, of growth, with the rivers not in so good a condition as they are now, because we have spent eight millions within a year to make them better. So I submit to Senators who are in favor of this bill, that if there be any one case in which we may pause and preserve this money that has been intrusted to us, without great injury to the public interests, it is exactly this case. The farmer in the hill country in which I live, in a time of distress and hardship, although he may need a new house or a new barn or a new fence, gets on with the old one and patches it up. He says to himself "Providence with rain and sunshine and with the tillage that I can make will raise the corn and the tobacco; and the fence and the new house and the new carriage can wait until the mortgage that rests upon my farm can be paid off." Can we not say so as a nation? Can anybody say that this nation will go backward for the want of these appropriations for this year? Nobody can. However good every one of them may be, I say they can wait beyond the point of preserving and keeping in repair what has been done.

Mr. President, if that be true, and the state of the Treasury is such as it confessedly I believe is, that if we go on with all the objects of appropriation which have been passed through the two Houses and are now depending between them upon matters of difference in details are, the result will be to leave us in a state of deficiency, and the money of the people, which must be spent for the objects of carrying on the Government and preserving its honor and paying its debts, is all to be exhausted, where is the money to come from that is to pay this seven or eight million dollars for the improvement of rivers and harbors which can be done without? It must come either from loans or from greater taxation, although at this present session we have reduced taxation upon objects of luxury and upon the ground that the country could afford to do it, I presume. Where, then, is it to come from? Are we to increase the debt of this over-indebted and tax-ridden people for these objects, that can be got on without as we have got on without them? I should hope not.

So, then, Mr. President, because I do not wish to delay the disposition of this bill by a long talk, I appeal to Senators themselves who have been in favor of every one of these provisions of this bill, whether it is not wise and just under the existing condition of affairs to exercise a duty of economy here and provide for this one year just that small sum of money, and the smallest possible sum, that will enable the officers of the Government to keep in repair what has been accomplished, and wait for better and more prosperous times for these more beneficent and benevolent and diffusive objects that are contained in it.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina speak on the motion to postpone indefinitely?

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, sir; I shall detain the Senate but a few moments.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has stated the general proposition with so much force that I think some one ought to say a word in reply to him, for as he states his theory it appears at least attractive, and might appear very strong if left unanswered. But, Mr. President, I believe, and I state it not inadvertently, I state it after some thought upon the question, that an examination of the river and harbor improvements in this country made since the adoption of the system will show in almost every instance, will certainly demonstrate as a rule, that great benefit has accrued to the localities in which those improvements have been made and to the general public good from the system. I think it would be very safe to say that should I take up the engineer's reports of all the improvements made in the last twenty years, and examine the reports of the chambers of commerce of the different cities affected and interested, I should find that the country had been more than forty times repaid in the general improvement and in the special development of localities by the money which it had expended in this way. This is the evidence of all the statistics.

When it is admitted by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New York that the expenditure of money upon large improvements is a great benefit to the country, upon what ground can it be disputed that a like proportion of money appropriated to smaller improvements is in like proportion beneficial? If a million dollars given to the harbor at New York benefits the commerce of the country, does not $5,000 given to a small stream in North Carolina improve its commerce in the same proportion?

But, Mr. President, I shall seek a nearer approach to the Senator from Vermont, for his argument deserves very great consideration. It impressed me very much while he was delivering it. I was almost inclined, at one time, to assent to it; but I should like to ask the Senator if, at any time in the history of this country, when the fact is before us every day, that every product of the soil, every fabric of the loom, every result of the anvil, every creation of every industry in this country is increased and multiplied, a hundred-fold. I ask the Senator representing a large share of the people of our country, if this is a time to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of our great water lines? Is it opportune when your wheat crop increases by thousands of millions, when your corn crop and your meat crop increases in like manner, when your cotton crop increases each year by a half million bales? Is this a time to cripple the means of transportation of these products to market? I submit to the Senator, for he has a history on that question, if it is right, when the country confronts almost helplessly, certainly with trepidation, giant railroad monopolies, I ask if it is the time when you should give those giants new strength by crippling and curtailing the natural water-ways of the land? Sir, we invite the world to come here. Almost every act of this Congress, and of all its predecessors, has stimulated our people to industry, to wonderful enterprise and vigor. We inspire our people with these great motives and purposes of improvement, and then turn and say to them, "Your work shall be in vain; make your corn, make your wheat, make your cotton, and get them to market as you can."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. I withdraw the motion for indefinite postponement.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] I am not sufficiently assured how he would vote to venture to vote on this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS, (after having voted in the affirmative.) That reminds me that I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] upon this bill. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment, but I think I ought to withdraw my vote. I voted without thinking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's name will be withdrawn.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] was called away by the sickness of his daughter, and he is paired on political questions with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] I do not know how the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] would vote on this question. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] is paired with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

Mr. WADLEIGH. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON], who went away from the Chamber sick. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I was requested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] to state that he was paired with the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.] I do not know how either Senator would vote if present, but I was requested to announce the pair.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Anthony,	Conkling,	Kernan,	Morrill,
Bayard,	Davis of Illinois,	Kirkwood,	Tollins,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to strike out all after the enacting clause to and including the third section, which will leave the provision about the Arkansas bridge and the jetties still in the bill, and to insert the following, which is the same amendment I proposed before except that it reads that the sum of $5,000,000 may be expended, which will save three million to the Treasury, and it will make what is called a very liberal allowance for these objects for this year. I wish to test the sense of the Senate upon that.

The SECRETARY. The words proposed to be inserted read as follows:

That the sum of $5,000,000 is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, to be expended for the repair, extension, preservation, and completion of works for the improvement of rivers and harbors under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause such expenditure to be made so as best to subserve the interests of commerce; but he is required to report to Congress at the opening of its December session the expenditures made under the provisions of this act up to that time in detail.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the honorable Senator who offers this amendment whether there is any difference between the amendment now offered and the one which has just been voted upon, except the amount?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the same thing precisely except the amount. The amount in this case is five million, which makes a saving of three million from the bill as it stands.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall not vote for the five million, but I did vote for the two, because on the one hand was a bill representing a most ill-advised, unadjusted, unmeasured appropriation which I disapproved of; I believed the amount excessive; I thought it extravagant; and therefore I did not propose to give my vote for it, and when economy was proposed to be exercised by the amendment of the honorable Senator from Vermont and substitute a moderate sum to be expended in well-known public improvements national in their character, I was willing to vote for that. But I object to both the amendments in one principle, and that is that they give money to a single officer of the executive branch of the Government to be expended in his discretion. They both are open to that criticism; and this but increases the danger that I think even the first amendment was open to. I shall therefore vote against this because I consider it an amount to be intrusted to the unlimited expenditure of a single officer.

Mr. EATON. I cannot vote for this amendment of the Senator from Vermont, for it seems to acknowledge a principle which I utterly disavow. I could vote, and did vote, for the first amendment offered by the honorable Senator from Vermont, as I would have voted if it had been one million plus three. Five I cannot vote for, because if I should I would seem to adopt that same line of thought that my honorable friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] has suggested here to-night, that this is a parental and paternal Government, and that it may take any amount of money off the people, from $1,000,000 to $20,000,000, to scatter it broadcast all over the Union. This amount of $5,000,000 is so large that I cannot consent to vote for it, because I should seem to be giving assent to a principle that I utterly abhor and detest, which I will not do. In no sense, in my judgment, is this a paternal Government. I have not forgotten the lessons that were taught by Jackson of Tennessee and Calhoun of South Carolina, and other men of a past day. We stand to-day where they stood fifty years ago. I do not intend to abandon that ground. Whatever is of a national character may be attended to; when the harbor of Norfolk requires a million of dollars, or the harbor of my good friend from South Carolina, at Charleston, requires half a million of dollars, or New York a million of dollars, or five million to open that great inland sea, the Mississippi River, I stand by that because it is in the interest of national commerce. That is right; that is just. The little State that I have the honor in part to represent on this floor has a few things in this bill; but if there be one there, one single one, that cannot find its application and its nature in a national commerce, I beg that it may be stricken off. I am happy to say that five hundred of the people of my good State within the last thirty days have authorized me to present a memorial begging the Congress of the United States not to squander upon the Connecticut River above Hartford twenty, or thirty, or forty thousand dollars; neither would I consent to squander the money of my people in the little creeks and rivers that I have heard mentioned here, and I know are in the bill. When my good friend from North Carolina presents to my consideration in his State or estuary an arm of the sea, and it requires to be opened for the navigation of the shipping of the world, he will get my vote for any amount that may be necessary. Further than that, I cannot and will not go. There has not yet been established the system that has been spoken of. There will be established within the coming few years a system of some kind, or else the money of the people will be taken from them until taxation has made beggars of our people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MORRILL in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I offer the following amendment, Mr. President, to come in at the end of the third section:

That the Secretary of War may omit to make any of the expenditures provided for in the foregoing section of this act whenever it shall appear to him that the public interest does not require the same during the fiscal year named herein, and said expenditures shall be limited to such sums as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury can be provided without exceeding the amount of money in the Treasury applicable thereto.

Mr. President, there are two propositions contained in this amendment. The first is one which authorizes the Secretary of War to select from among the works authorized by the bill, and for which appropriations are to be made, those which it appears to him the public interest requires to be accomplished during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made; or, to state it as it is stated in the amendment conversely, authorizes him to omit the prosecution of any one or more of the works authorized by the bill whenever it shall appear to him that the public interest does not require the same to be completed during the fiscal year. That is the first proposition. The second is, that the gross amount of expenditure actually to be made within the year under the bill, without reference to the sums appropriated, shall be limited to the amount of money on hand in the Treasury applicable thereto, so that there shall be no deficiency created by the expenditures under the bill. And I trust, Mr. President, that every Senator who is in favor of a just and liberal system of national improvement for the benefit of our external and internal commerce will see the propriety and wisdom of these limitations.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] took occasion to state a doctrine in which I agree, and in reference to which he suggested the necessity and expediency of a constitutional amendment, one which would enable the Executive in his approval or disapproval of the bill to do so in part, which is exactly what is proposed by this amendment by lodging that discretion under this bill in the Secretary of War. I agree with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] in his construction of the language of the bill without that amendment, which denies to the Secretary any such constructions.

Allusion has been made to a contrary interpretation put upon a previous river and harbor improvement bill by a President of the United States, which is, no doubt, fresh in the recollection of Senators. President Grant, in his message to the House of Representatives, affixing his signature to the river and harbor appropriation bill in 1876, added his reasons for not vetoing but giving his assent to it, upon the ground that it was not "obligatory upon the Executive to expend all the money appropriated by Congress;" otherwise he said he "should return the river and harbor bill with" his objections. And the reasons of his objection to parts of the bill were that "many of the appropriations were made for works of purely a private or local interest, in no sense national." He said:

I cannot give my sanction to these, and will take care that, during my term of office, no public money shall be expended upon them.

He added:

There is very great necessity for economy of expenditures at this time, growing out of the loss of revenue likely to arise from a deficiency of appropriations to insure a thorough collection of the same.

His course in this particular was very much criticised and censured, and at the next session of Congress a resolution of the House was passed inquiring into the expenditure of moneys under that act, and he communicated an answer from the Secretary of War, now an honored Senator on this floor, in which the reasons were given for not expending the entire amount of money allotted to each item, in which this language occurred:

In reply, I would suggest that the law and authority are found in the act itself—

That is the law and authority under which the limitations upon these expenditures by the Executive were placed—which appropriates certain sums to be expended for certain purposes, under the direction of the Secretary of War, but is in no way mandatory upon him to expend the full amount; and a moment's reflection will show that it is not feasible to so limit his discretion, since change of plan—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senator be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is unanimous consent given that the Senator from Ohio shall proceed with his remarks? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I continue the reading:

and a moment's reflection will show that it is not feasible to so limit his discretion, since change of plan, decrease of cost of material and labor, or any one of many other contingencies might leave a portion of the appropriation unexpended. There are now three or four such credits in the Treasury, where they have remained for several years, and one or two cases in which appropriations for specific improvements have never been drawn upon at all. The executive officer who is charged with these expenditures is bound by his regard for the interests of the public service, but his discretion is not limited by any express provision of law.

The exercise of this discretion in the present instance has been influenced by the condition of the Treasury and the nature of the appropriations for other public works of quite as much importance as the river and harbor improvements. With the appropriations for the public buildings imperatively required by the War and other Departments of the Government reduced to less than half of the average appropriations for the past five years, it was considered that economy required a similar reduction in the expenditures for the current year upon works for the benefit of commerce and other interests of remote advantage to Government; and with an estimated deficiency in the surplus revenue of $7,000,000, and every Executive Department reduced to its very minimum working force, (and in some cases below that necessary for the transaction of business,) it was determined to reduce the expenditures in that branch which could best stand the reduction, and where the least reduction had been made in the appropriations.

It should be borne in mind that these appropriations are of the character of "indefinite appropriations," i. e., they do not lapse into the Treasury if unexpended at the end of two years. Under existing laws they are at any time available for the objects designated, upon the warrant of the Secretary of War; and should the anticipations concerning the revenue prove to be unfounded, or a purpose be indicated of liberally supporting the public works of all kinds throughout the country, it may then be deemed advisable to allot a further portion, or all of the appropriation. If, however, it had been allotted at present, and contracts had been entered into, there would have been no means of preventing the expenditure.

In conclusion, I submit, with all respect, that while the Legislature, with the approval of the Executive, appropriates the money and specifies the purposes for which it is given, the Executive Departments of the Government are always held responsible for the expenditures, not only as to the manner, but the amount of them; and that they violate no law if they keep the expenditures within the amount appropriated, and apply them to the purpose for which they are redesignated.

I have the honor to be, with great respect, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

To remove any doubt that may exist in respect to this discretion in the Executive arising upon the use of the language contained in the present bill I have offered the amendment, so far as the first proposition is concerned, in order that it may be expressly notified by Congress to the Executive Department that it is not expected by Congress because of the appropriation merely that the money shall be spent, provided it shall appear that there is no public necessity which actually requires the expenditure of the money during the ensuing fiscal year.

And I think, Mr. President, that the proposition is not open to the objection made by Senators in reference to the last amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which appropriated in gross the sum of $5,000,000, allowing the Secretary of War the utmost latitude of discretion in respect to the selection of the objects to which that money should be applied, because under this provision all the objects to which any portion of the money is applicable are specified in the bill, in the law if it becomes such, and the only discretion is in omitting the expenditure of certain of the moneys otherwise liable, when it shall appear to the Secretary of War that there is no pressing and immediate necessity that makes such expenditure actually necessary. He cannot vary the purpose of an appropriation; he cannot take from one and apply to another; he may apply to some and not to all; but if he does not apply the appropriations to all, then that portion of the money applicable to those omitted expenditures remains in the Treasury unexpended.

Thus it seems to me, Mr. President, that while it does give some discretion and latitude in the exercise of it to the Executive, it does not give more than has been claimed to exist without it, and it does not give it without confining it by the terms of the act itself to the specific objects of the appropriation.

Now, the second proposition in the amendment certainly furnishes a sufficient justification for this limitation in the discretion of the Executive upon the expenditures actually to be made, for it is based on the supposition that without it a deficiency may arise. And now, Mr. President, are we, is the legislative body which represents this nation, about, not only to authorize, but actually to require, to demand, to insist upon an expenditure said to amount to as large a sum as $9,000,000 in the face of the supposition and expectation that we shall create a debt; that that will be an expenditure of money merely in anticipation of revenue and not in actual disbursement of revenue, without furnishing any means of raising the money; without levying any additional tax; without providing for the sale of any securities; without making any provision whatever to meet this expenditure thus made imperative upon the Executive?

In the ordinary conduct of private business, it is the instinct and the habit of the merest and most common prudence not to spend money until the money has been earned, and the great evil and curse of the day which has brought about the distress that is so universal and so keen and cutting is the disregard of that ordinary and common dictate of prudence. It has not only affected the happiness of individual and family life; it has bankrupted municipalities and dishonored States, who are to-day, by reason of the haste with which they have contracted obligations which they are unable to meet, refusing with deliberation to compromise with their creditors at the rate of fifty cents on the dollar; and great and once prosperous and flourishing cities have sought in a sort of legal suicide, by a surrender of their corporate existence, to avoid and escape from their creditors, and thus go into bankruptcy in order to avoid the payment of debts incurred thoughtlessly and recklessly.

Now, Mr. President, as yet the nation, its honor and its credit, are unstained, unspotted, and unsuspected. But how long will it be so if we continue to reduce taxes and increase expenditures and to lavish appropriations without the means of meeting them? Certainly, I am not a member of that school of strict construction which would prevent even the application of paternal as a description, in some of its aspects, of our National Government. On the contrary, I believe, and always have believed, that our Federal Government was a national government, that it secured national rights and national interests, and that its protection, its jurisdiction, its fostering care, its continual and lively guardianship, ought to be manifested over the whole area of its jurisdiction, both as to rights and interests; and I have never been backward in consenting to vote in favor, not only of just, but liberal, and even generous, appropriations of the national treasure to every legitimate and national interest, and I never shall. But it does not follow that we can at one stroke, in one act of legislation, in one bill, by one set of appropriations, accomplish all that in this direction is to be desired. We must make haste slowly; we must not anticipate too hastily and rapidly the future. We must cut our garment according to our cloth. We must contract our necessities so that they shall not be larger than our means. And without attacking in its character a single one of the appropriations made in this bill, it by no means follows that they all ought to be provided for at one time and during one year. Certainly, in my judgment, beyond all question, if we cannot do it without incurring a debt, without creating a deficiency, without going beyond the amount of money provided by actual taxes and in the Treasury applicable for that purpose, then I say that by every consideration of wisdom and of prudence we ought to stop and cry a halt and wait until next year for some and the succeeding year for others, and so husband our resources as well as develop all the other interests of the country.

It is in this spirit, Mr. President, it is for this purpose, that I have offered in good faith the amendment which I have had the honor to submit, and I trust that those who are in favor, as evidently a great majority of the Senate is in favor, of a wise and not an unwise system of national expenditure for national improvements will see that the system itself is not discredited by the overzeal of its friends.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am compelled wholly to dissent from the doctrine contained in the proposition of the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. MATTHEWS,] because it seems to me that he proposes nothing less than a delegation of the legislative discretion which it is not in our power to bestow upon any other branch of this Government. I dissent wholly from the idea that the President of the United States or any branch of the executive government can execute or suspend laws at will, can execute or suspend parts of an appropriation or a law at will. The President of the United States has his powers and his prerogatives, none of which I would invade, all of which I would preserve; but I deny that after he has exercised his power either of giving his assent to a bill or vetoing it, he has any discretion whatever as to whether that law shall be executed according to its terms, or not. I know that under a false and specious plea of economy it was proposed in the late administration that after Congress had passed an act and the President had signed it, he should then convey to one of his Cabinet officers or the Chief Engineer the discretion whether this law should be executed or not. From that proposition I wholly and utterly dissent. This is the place where the discretion is to be exercised, Congress is the body in whom the Constitution reposes the discretion as to what shall be law and what shall not be law; and when the President exercising his functions has appended his signature to a law and it has become therefore approved according to the forms of the Constitution, I deny his power to suspend it in his discretion, or to confer that power upon any member of his Cabinet or upon any branch of the executive service. That is why I shall oppose this amendment of the honorable Senator from Ohio. It contains a proposition far more dangerous than the mere expenditure of money unwisely. It proposes to delegate a discretion which Congress cannot delegate. The responsibility for exercising that discretion wisely rests on us. We cannot shake it from our shoulders by handing it over to another branch of the Government. No, sir; for better or for worse we legislate. The President has it in his power to refuse his assent or he has it in his power to approve the act which we have passed; but when it becomes the law, he is as much bound by it as the humblest man in the country or any one who voted for it; and for that reason I will not agree that legislative discretion shall be transferred or attempted to be transferred to a member of the Cabinet.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I tried my best to avoid saying one word in this debate. I have utterly failed. I am bound to say a word; but I shall not move to indefinitely postpone this bill to give me the opportunity of saying what I propose to say. The things I shall say I shall say within the existing rule and upon the pending amendment, and when the time allotted me under the existing rule expires, I shall take my seat, leaving a great many things unsaid which I should be glad to say.

Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware, I think, has assigned an excellent reason why he cannot support the pending amendment; but it is not the reason I should assign; it is not the reason which will guide me. I shall vote against that amendment as I voted against the two amendments previously offered by the Senator from Vermont, because I am unwilling, after this Senate has spent days in deliberating upon distinct propositions, upon distinct appropriations, to wind up the whole labor by spreading upon your statute-book the plain declaration that we found in the end we were cheats and frauds and not to be trusted with the appropriation of public funds, and therefore we would call upon the intervention of an executive officer to correct our rascalities. That is the reason why I shall not vote for this amendment.

Mr. President, I hear a great deal said about the enormous sum demanded by this bill to improve the channels of internal or external commerce. The sum is stated at seven million, at eight million—I believe the best accountant on the floor has gone as high as nine millions—to be expended throughout this broad continent in opening new thoroughfares, new water-ways for your enormous commerce, and in improving those already existing. Is there a Senator on this floor ready to hesitate in view of that enormous expenditure? Why, sir, 10 per cent. of the face of this bill the Senate has voted to-night, if the Senator from West Virginia or the Senator from Kentucky is to be believed, not because it is called for by any expenditures ever made or ever to be made on works of internal improvement, but because it was demanded by improvident contracts of a single citizen of the United States with his creditors; and who winces at that? Not the Senate. Sir, we trampled upon the standing laws which guide the debates of the Senate in order to make welcome that objectionable provision of the bill. Eight millions are to be expended. Why, Mr. President, only a few nights since this Senate voted, by how large a majority I do not remember, but voted on the double-quick for a measure which would annually take from your Treasury, if it became a law, a sum vastly in excess of that which is appropriated by this bill, and put into the pockets of a very small fraction of the people of the United States, monthly salaries—and for what? Because during the life-time of all of us, and the youngest of us, but a very few years since, they volunteered for salaries prescribed by existing laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator will be permitted to go on.

Mr. HOWE. I stand by my contracts if I am the only man that does. I will sit down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Wisconsin proceeding as the Senator from New York asks? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOWE. Well, Mr. President, I will finish what I was about to say, then, by the courtesy of the Senate. I have kept my contract by sitting down. I did not agree not to get up again if the Senate invited me. [Laughter.]

Those men volunteered for salaries prescribed by law, which salaries were paid. Some of them were small, I admit, and others were large in proportion to the services rendered. Who winced at that? Who heard anything about the necessities of the tax-payers of the country when that proposition went whistling through the Senate? I heard nothing of it. Sir, there is in the Treasury to-day a sum larger than the largest sum named as the appropriation in this bill, and there is on your table another measure which, when the Senate can get at it, will distribute every dollar of that nine or nine and a half million dollars among a small fraction of the people of the United States, some citizens, some natural persons, some artificial persons, and no one of them in my judgment who will take under that bill has in equity, has in strict justice a clearer right to any one dollar of the thousands he will pocket, than every single citizen of the United States has to his distributive share of this expenditure. You are husbanding the fund to-day in order to make a distribution of it.

So long as you can deal with specific funds in that prodigal way, I beg to be spared this repeated iteration, this reiteration of the suggestion that the tax-paying capacities of the people of the United States are to be crushed down by the appropriation of the pittance of $5,000,000 to cheapen the carriage of the immense commerce of this country.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the amendment now pending has two distinct and substantive branches. I shall ask at the proper time a division of the question that we may vote separately, although for myself I shall vote in favor of each branch.

I wish at this moment to direct a word to the latter branch of this amendment in reply somewhat to observations which fell from the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I have no difficulty in voting for the discretion, as it is called, implied by the latter branch of the amendment. What is that discretion, or more exactly speaking the condition on which the amendment hinges? It is, if I heard it aright, that these appropriations shall be applied so far and only so far as in the public Treasury may be found the moneys the expenditure of which is ordered. The honorable Senator finds in that a dangerous recognition of a theory which he condemns, and he says we have no power to delegate either to the President or to any subordinate, at his discretion to execute or fail to execute an act of Congress. Stated even so broadly, many judgments of the Supreme Court confront the honorable Senator. In many instances, in the embargo case, for example, the Supreme Court held that it was competent to make, not the measure of the execution of an act of Congress merely, not some part or particular of that act, but the entire act itself hinge and depend on a determination to be made by the President. To state it otherwise, the law-making power enacted that the act should not speak at all, it should be utterly mute, it should remain wholly inoperative until the Executive by an act of his judgment gave it vitality, and issued a proclamation so stating. But the amendment of the Senator from Ohio involves no such fundamental condition. He says that when this section of the bill, for example, comes to be executed:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed, at his discretion—

I emphasize the word—

at his discretion, to cause examination or surveys, or both, * * * to be made.

Some force and effect shall be given to the fact, if it be a fact, at the time that there are no moneys wherewithal to cause these surveys to be made. The Senator from Ohio proposes as to various other of the directions of the bill, that their execution shall wait in time and wait in fact upon the circumstance that there shall or shall not be the means here appropriated. Is that a dangerous discretion? It is a very honest discretion, as the Senator from Ohio has argued. Is it dangerous? Then I hope every Senator who so holds will vote to strike out the second section of this bill, for there committed to the unbridled discretion of a subordinate officer is the whole question whether all, or some, or none of this great list of surveys, mortgaging as they do the public Treasury for untold sums in the future, shall or shall not be made.

I think, Mr. President, that if we are to entertain and approve a provision which on its face confers such unlimited discretion, we need not shrink or pale at saying also it shall depend upon whether of the moneys which have been taken from the tax-payers of the country enough shall remain to carry out all these plans and enterprises.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New York has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I will not ask to have it extended.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the Senator from New York may be extended if he desires.

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir, I do not wish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the Senator from New York have leave to proceed.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not ask it, though I thank the Senator. I do not wish to trench on the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, I ask a division of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will indicate at what point he would like the division.

Mr. CONKLING. I think we may vote first on the proposition to allow the Secretary of War either wholly in a given case or pro tanto in a given case to withhold the appropriation.

Mr. BAYARD. Let the amendment be reported before it is acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported entire and then the Chair will state where the division is understood to come in.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. MATTHEWS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York demands a division of the question, which, if the Chair correctly understands him, is to take the question first upon this clause in the amendment:

That the Secretary of War may omit to make any of the expenditures provided for in the foregoing sections of this act whenever it shall appear to him that the public interest does not require the same during the fiscal year named herein.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question is susceptible of a division and will put the question first on the first branch of the amendment which the Chair has just read.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (when the name of Mr. EDMUNDS was called.) The Chair is authorized to state that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN.] The Senator from Vermont would vote "yea" and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I deem myself bound by my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] to withhold my vote. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment. I should vote for the amendment if I felt at liberty to vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I am paired on certain questions with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] I do not know how he would vote upon this question; I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I am paired on this question with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.]

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] was called from the Chamber some hours ago on account of illness.

The roll-call having been concluded the result was announced—yeas 13, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—13.

Anthony,

So the first branch of the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the second branch of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MATTHEWS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

And said expenditures shall be limited to such sums as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury can be provided without exceeding the amount of money in the Treasury applicable thereto.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] That is the reason I do not vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called.) The Chair states that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN.]

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.]

Mr. HEREFORD. My colleague [Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia] is absent on a committee of conference.

Mr. PLUMB. My colleague [Mr. INGALLS] is absent, paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS,] who is necessarily absent by reason of illness in his family.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 11, nays 36; as follows:

So the second branch of the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DENNIS. I wish to offer an amendment. I move, on page 6, line 11, after "channel," to insert "including the obstructions at or near the mouth of the canal;" so as to read:

And $30,000 shall be expended in Georgetown harbor and channel, including the obstructions at or near the mouth of the canal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. CONKLING. On the passage of the bill I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not intend to detain the Senate. I shall vote against this bill and will simply announce the reason of my vote without argument. I shall vote against it because I do not believe there is any constitutional warrant in Congress to make appropriations for many of the objects that are contained in the bill. I shall not argue that question; but on a past occasion when a bill of this character was before the Senate I expressed at some length my views on that point. I shall not elaborate them now.

Even if I believed there was power in Congress to make the appropriations contained in this bill, I do not believe the condition of the public Treasury at this time warrants us in making these appropriations as a matter of expediency. It is said there will be a considerable deficiency in the revenues in the next fiscal year. If that be true, if the appropriations which we have already made exhaust the Treasury, it seems to me to be a very unwise measure to pass a bill of this kind. We can only get money by taxation of the people. In my humble judgment the people of this country are taxed to an extent as far as they are able. We ought to pause, and in my judgment the people of this country will compel us to pause before a great many years. They have borne the burdens of taxation patiently. When there seemed to be a public exigency requiring it they have submitted their necks to the yoke; but the people are becoming restive (and we see some of the evidences of it) against the burdens that have been heaped upon them by their Representatives in Congress. We shall have the question forced upon us that is now forced in some of the States of this Union of a readjustment of the public debt unless we pause in our expenditure of the public money. The people will not always bear these burdens, but they will demand to know whether there is not some way of relief, and whenever the public voice of the people demands it a way of relief will be found.

In the interest, therefore, and in behalf of what I believe to be the ultimate honor of this country, I cannot vote for appropriations of this kind in the present condition of the finances of the country. I therefore shall vote against the bill. Lest it should be supposed I ought to do it because I have proposed one or two amendments to the bill, I can say that there is no amendment which I have proposed, no appropriation of money within the limits of the State within which I live, but what falls under the general class of improvements for the benefit of the commerce of the country, and are not mere local improvements. Take for instance the appropriation at Wilmington. That is a city upon the Christiana River, which empties into the Delaware, and there is an appropriation of $3,500 for it. Take Duck Creek. I limited the appropriation there to the entrance to that creek because it is a harbor for vessels sailing on Delaware Bay; and while the engineer estimated for improvements in the creek I do not ask for any appropriation for an improvement in the creek, but confine it to the mere entrance, so that vessels engaged in the general commerce of the country may enter the mouth of a creek as a harbor. So with Mispillion Creek, where there are five vessel yards where they build vessels of between nine hundred and a thousand tons burden. These are objects of interest to general commerce, and these are the only objects in this bill for my State, and $11,500 is all that is appropriated to be expended in my State, and all I believe that ought to be appropriated at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill pass?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called.) The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN.] The Senator from Minnesota, if present, would vote "yea" and the Senator from Vermont would vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM. (when Mr. MERRIMON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] is paired on this bill with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.] My colleague, if present, would vote "yea" and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HEREFORD. My colleague [Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia] is absent in committee of conference. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6145) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. A. S. HEWITT of New York, Mr. WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS of Illinois, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio, managers at the conference on its part.

AMENDMENT TO POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6126) to establish post-routes in the several States herein named; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4639) to authorize the Secretary of War to release certain lands of the United States to the people of the State of New York, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1434) to compensate George W. Morse for his labor and expenses in adapting his system of breech-loading fire-arms and ammunition to the arms of the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. FERRY. I move to take from the table the bill (H. R. No. 6126) to establish post-routes in the several States herein named. The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

Mr. PADDOCK. I appeal to the Senator from Michigan to allow me to call up a Senate bill for concurrence in a house amendment. It is a brief amendment, and it will take but a moment. There is no objection to it whatever.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the bill?

Mr. PADDOCK. A local bill, relating to the sale of an Indian reservation, Senate bill No. 373.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill, the title of which will be reported from the desk, be now taken up for consideration.

Mr. FERRY. Without displacement of the post-route bill.

The Secretary read the title of the bill.

Mr. FERRY. I consent to this without the displacement of the post-route bill.

Mr. THURMAN. What bill is that the Senator proposes to take up?

Mr. PADDOCK. A local bill which has passed the Senate and has been returned from the House with an amendment, which is not very important in itself, and I think it will receive no objection on the part of the Senate. I desire simply to have concurrence in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the title of the bill is a bill (S. No. 373) to amend an act to provide for the sale of a portion of the reservation of the confederated Ottos and Missouria and the Sac and Fox of the Missouri tribe of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska. Is there unanimous consent that this bill be now taken up for consideration?

Mr. THURMAN. I must object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the regular order is before the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Michigan to yield to me for the purpose of moving to take up the motion to reconsider the bill known as the arrears of pension bill.

Mr. THURMAN. That is right.

Mr. FERRY. I am disposed to yield, provided it does not displace the post-route bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M.

ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its amendments to the twentieth amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6143) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, still further insisted on its disagreement to certain other amendments of the Senate, and still further insisted upon its disagreement to certain sections of the twentieth amendment of the Senate to the said bill insisted upon by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT of Georgia, Mr. HESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. JOHN H. BAKER of Indiana managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6240) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, insisted upon by the Senate, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. MILTON J. DURHAM of Kentucky, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

APPROPRIATION FOR PENSION ARREARS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] asks unanimous consent of the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 6462) making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes, was passed. The Chair hears no objection. This bill passed the Senate on the 28th of February, 1879, and the Senator from Minnesota entered a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill. The question now is, Will the Senate agree to the motion to reconsider?

Mr. FERRY. In justice to myself I desire to state that I shall support the motion to reconsider this bill, for the reason that when the bill was pending and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] was voted upon, under a misapprehension of the scope of that amendment I voted in the affirmative, which puts me upon the record, contrary to my judgment of the wisdom of the measure. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri reads thus:

Provided further, That the law granting pensions to the soldiers and their widows of the war of 1812, approved March 9, 1878, is hereby made applicable in all its provisions to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico of 1846.

Entering the Senate when the vote was being taken, and not understanding fully the amendment, I inadvertently voted in favor of it, when had I understood it should have voted against it; and for that reason I shall vote to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed, and if that motion prevails I shall then move to reconsider the vote by which this amendment passed and vote against the amendment and finally vote for the bill. I am not disposed to interpose any objection or any obstacle to the passage of the bill making appropriations for arrears of pension if relieved of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SHIELDS.] The amendment covers entirely too much, and I am not prepared to support a measure of such widespread and impolitic import.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I have but a word or two to say on the subject. I moved to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill because I believed that the Senate acted good-naturedly and rather to pay a compliment to the distinguished soldier of two wars, [Mr. SHIELDS,] and without very full consideration of the merits of the question. I am not prepared to say that I would not vote for a properly guarded bill to pay pensions to those who may deserve them, if any have been omitted, who served in the war of 1846; but as the best estimates I can get upon the subject are that the little proposition so good-naturedly introduced by the Senator from Missouri and so good-naturedly supported by a majority of the Senate the other evening would take from thirty to forty millions out of the Treasury, I think before we enter upon so broad and sweeping and magnificent a donation of public funds we should carefully consider it in a bill that can be discussed and understood. I therefore hope that the Senate will recede from the good-natured compliment to the honorable Senator from Missouri. Having entered the motion to reconsider, I now express the hope that the vote passing the bill may be reconsidered and the amendment reconsidered, and the subject considered in a separate bill hereafter.

Mr. THURMAN. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I did so in the first place because I was instructed by my Legislature so to do; in the second place, because it does seem to me that the soldiers and sailors in the war of 1846 with Mexico are eminently entitled to pensions, if pensions ever were deserved by soldiers and sailors in a war. I think they gained to this country an empire of territory and wealth that cannot be estimated, and therefore I voted not only in obedience to the command of my Legislature, but also in obedience to my own judgment. It may be that the particular form in which this pension is granted may need some revision; but I think it is better to stand by the bill as it passed and let that particular form of granting pensions be considered by the other House or by a committee of conference. I hope, therefore, the motion to reconsider will be voted down.

Mr. MITCHELL. I voted with my friends from Michigan and from Ohio for the amendment giving pensions to the soldiers of the Mexican war. I voted for it because I am in favor of paying them pensions, and I will vote for it again for the same reason. It has been suggested, however, that perhaps the scope of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is a little wider than I had supposed. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri simply applies the pension laws, as applicable to soldiers of the war of 1812, to those of the Mexican war.

At the time I cast my vote I was under the apprehension that that bill excluded those who had engaged in the late rebellion, although if I had thought a moment I should have known that that was not so. I shall therefore vote to reconsider this question, and if I have the opportunity I shall offer then the following amendment, and if it be adopted I shall then vote to pay the Mexican war soldiers their pensions. I give notice that I will offer this amendment:

Provided, That no person who served in the confederate army during the late war of the rebellion, or held any office, civil or military, in the late confederacy, shall be entitled to receive any pension under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. WINDOM called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, (when his name was called.) On this particular vote I am paired with my friend from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] He has gone home quite unwell this evening. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. MERRIMON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.] My colleague would vote "nay" and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea."

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] who has gone home sick. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] If he were present, I should vote "yea." I voted against the bill before.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Chandler,	Howe,	Paddock,
Anthony,	Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,

Hoar,	McDonald,	Sharon,
Ingalls,	McMillan,	Voorhees,

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) The vote on the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 6462) making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes, is reconsidered. The bill is again before the Senate, the question being on its passage.

Mr. FERRY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] prevailed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator vote in the affirmative?

Mr. FERRY. I did. I inadvertently voted in the affirmative. I wish to correct my vote by having the amendment reconsidered, so as to vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator must first move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed to a third reading before he can reach the amendment he desires to reconsider. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY. Now I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] prevailed. I hold the amendment in my hand and will send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided further, That the law granting pensions to the soldiers and their widows of the war of 1812, approved March 9, 1878, is hereby made applicable in all its provisions to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico of 1846.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is an amendment to that amendment in order now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the motion to reconsider will be voted down.

Mr. FERRY. I hope it will prevail. I only ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WYTHE.] I should vote "yea" and he would "nay," if present.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, (when his name was called.) On the question to reconsider I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] I would vote "yea," if he were present.

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. MERRIMON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] was obliged to leave the Chamber to-night and paired with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.] My colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL, (when the name of Mr. WITHERS was called.) The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] was called away by the illness of his daughter and is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] I presume the Senator from Virginia would vote on this question "nay." That is my understanding.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Virginia were here, I should vote "yea."

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS, (after having voted "nay.") On political questions I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] The Senator from Iowa and others deem this a political question and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was induced to pair with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.] I do not consider voting to give a pension to the soldiers of the Mexican war a political question, and I am sorry it has been made so; but I see it has taken that shape and I do not want to be placed in a false position. I presume if he were here, he would vote with the body of his party.

Mr. PATTERSON. Perhaps he would vote with me.

Mr. SHIELDS. I cannot tell. However I am paired with him on all political questions, and as this seems to be considered one I cannot vote. My vote would be "nay" and his would be "yea," I suppose.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allison,	Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Anthony,	Conover,	Kernan,	Rollins,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote by which the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] was agreed to is reconsidered. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MITCHELL. If my amendment is now in order as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, I ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon moves to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri by adding what will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no person who served in the confederate army during the late war of the rebellion or held any office, civil or military, in the late confederacy shall be entitled to receive any pension under this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ANTHONY and Mr. THURMAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WYTHE.]

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.]

Mr. KIRKWOOD, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.]

Mr. RANSOM, (when Mr. MERRIMON's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.] My colleague would vote "nay" on this question if he were here.

Mr. SHIELDS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question also with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. SHARON.]

Mr. WADLEIGH, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.]

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. EUSTIS. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. CHAFFEE.] If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BOOTH. My colleague [Mr. SARGENT] is paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. JOHNSTON.] I neglected to make the announcement on the previous vote, and I make it now once for all.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Chandler,	Howe,	Plumb,
Anthony,	Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Rollins,
Blaine,	Dawes,	Matthews,	Saunders,

Hill,	McDonald,	Sharon,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I move as an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to add the following proviso:

And provided also, That all the rights, advantages, and effect of said act shall apply to and be enjoyed by the officers and soldiers who served in the Winnebago and Black Hawk wars.

The war with the Winnebagoes occurred, I think, in 1828; the Black Hawk war was in 1831 and 1832. That is about fifty years ago. Of course if any soldiers should have the right to recover pensions after those of the war of 1812 it should be the soldiers of these wars. At any rate, if the soldiers of 1846 should have the advantages of this act, those who served twenty-four years before have as much right to a pension. If we propose, as we propose here, to grant pensions to the soldiers who served in the war of 1846, I say that those who served twenty years prior to that time have fully as strong a claim upon us, if not stronger, than the soldiers of 1846. There is probably not a very large number of these survivors; they are men between the age of seventy and ninety; but what there are should be cared for as properly and as well as we care for the survivors of the war with Mexico. I know some of them. The Black Hawk war was the war in which the late President Lincoln served as a soldier. I know there are quite a number of his associates now living in the State of Illinois in which he lived; and they are scattered probably over the Western States generally. These men have as much right to pensions as the others. I therefore hope that my amendment to the amendment will prevail.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SHIELDS] be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, to which the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is proposed, will be read at the request of the Senator from New York.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. SHIELDS, as follows:

Provided further, That the law granting pensions to the soldiers, and their widows of the war of 1812, approved March 9, 1878, is hereby made applicable in all its provisions to the soldiers and sailors who served in the war with Mexico of 1846.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the effect of adopting this amendment. The effect of this amendment, if it be adopted, is that every man who served in the Mexican war for fourteen days, or his widow if he is dead, shall be put upon the pension roll for life. The law granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 provides that every soldier who served in the war of 1812 fourteen days, or was in a battle and honorably discharged, is entitled to a pension, so that the result of this amendment will be, if it becomes a law, that every soldier who served in the war with Mexico fourteen days and was honorably discharged will have a pension for life, and his widow will receive it after his death.

I assume that I am correct in saying that we have, as we should have done, provided pensions to the heirs of those who were killed in the war of 1812, as well as to every man who was disabled in that war. I do not think that at this time we can afford in justice to the tax-payers to say that any man who served in the war with Mexico the length of time I have named shall be put upon the pension-roll for his life, and his widow after he is dead, if she survives him. I say this with the kindest spirit to those soldiers. I have always been willing to do them all honor; but the number who survive, I am glad to know, is large, and I do not think we can pension them now where they were neither wounded nor disabled, if they served fourteen days in Mexico.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I take great pleasure in putting my friend right on one point. There were no fourteen days' men in Mexico. No man in the Mexican war served a less time than one year.

Mr. KERNAN. I did not say that there were such; I merely said what would be the effect of the amendment if it was adopted and became a law. Every Senator will judge for himself as to its effect.
